"In 1676 I was desired to go to the parish of Auldearn, which was at that time a Goshen, where great light shined. I had little encouragement or freedom to go thither but on account of the Gospel and fellowship with the people of God. I thought whatever outward difficulties I might be trysted with [i.e., meet], if it pleased God to bless these means, it would well make up for all other disadvantages; as indeed it did. I had been in great distress, and the rather that the Church was sorely suffering, the people of God imprisoned and sadly afflicted, so that several of the godly were forced to leave the land because of persecution. In the meantime I could not win to bear burdens with them, which issued in questioning myself to be a member, because I had not a sympathy with them, though the want of this sympathy was the greatest grief. But it pleased the Lord to lay me on a sick-bed, December 21st (1676), and there He laid on me a competent burden, and no more. Tenderly and kindly did the Lord deal with me on that sick-bed, particularly on the sixth day of my fever, after a sad day. The next morning, being the 27th of the month, He drew my heart and affections after Him, and did persuade my soul of his everlasting love, giving for a confirmation that sweet passage, 'I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with lovingkindness have I drawn thee' (Jer. xxxi. 3). Being ravished and overcome with his glory, I did there offer myself freely to be disposed of by Him in life and death, as He should see fit. He then persuaded me that He was mine, and I was his."

Our "Christiana" has now fairly set out on her journey from the City of Destruction, and does not shrink from letting it be seen in whose company she would fain make it. Finding certain persons in the Tolbooth (prison) for conscience' sake, she must needs visit them, but discovers that she must carry a cross for having done so, which is thus referred to:—

"One day at Elgin, in May, 1677, being a public day, and many persons of distinction coming to the place, two gentlemen, strangers to me, seeing me go up to the Tolbooth, did enquire a friend of mine who I was. This was uneasy to him, lest my going to see the prisoners at such a public time should bring trouble with my parents; and so soon as he met with my father he did much incense him against me, and put him in great wrath, so that, when I came down from the Tolbooth, he spake bitterly to me, and more imprudently than his ordinary; among many bitter expressions he said that unless I would keep at home and live privately I must seek a home of my own. This did grieve me very much, because I thought he was resolved to straiten me in my Christian liberty and privileges. But oh! He that is always tender-hearted did pity me, and sent that word into my mind, 'Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us' (Isa. lxiii. 16). Whereby He did sweetly and powerfully persuade my soul that he was my Father, and that though my natural parents should in a manner disown me, yet He would care for me. Many a time has my soul said, 'Lord, anything but this!' My life was a burden to me, and my comfort was that death would free me of Satan's troubles and of an evil heart. But till the Lord helped me to an entire submission, and made me content to bear it because it was His holy will, I had no rest. But, when brought to this, then He who said to the sea, 'Be calm,' rebuked the temptation, and by that word gave me an outgate [deliverance]: 'If the Son make you free, then shall ye be free indeed' (John viii. 36)."

MR. W. J. LEWIS.

Many of your readers will be glad to hear of the movements of our esteemed brother, Mr. William Joseph Lewis, who for more than twenty years laboured in the Spitalfields Gospel Mission. Five years ago his health became so precarious that his physician advised his removal to the Isle of Wight. I paid him a visit recently at Ryde, and very lovingly he inquired after London mission workers, and spoke warmly of his continued interest in the work carried on in the East-end.

It was thought by many, when Mr. Lewis left London in a broken-down state of health, that his work was done. Not so. After rest and an access of strength, he took up various branches of work in the villages and out-of-the-way places on the island, preaching in halls and chapels, without fee or reward. I have heard him several times during my stay set forth the glorious fulness of the Gospel of Christ. For four years he has been engaged in Bible-reading and prayer-meetings among young women, mostly servants at gentlemen's houses in Ryde, and much spiritual blessing has attended this effort. The Y.M.C.A. has benefited by his hearty co-operation.

His visits to the homes of the afflicted and hidden ones have been very helpful. He has made himself servant to all for the love of winning souls to Him. His present address is 54, Swanmore-road, Ryde, Isle of Wight.

CHILDREN'S MEDICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The thirteenth report of this auxiliary to the Medical Missionary Association is a plain record of humble effort to help a great cause. The funds raised last year amounted to £150, which were distributed for the assistance of missions at home and abroad. The secretary is Miss Annie R. Butler, 104, Petherton-road, London, N.

A Week at Collier's Rents.

"Where is Collier's Rents?" someone may ask.

Those well acquainted with London, and especially with the Borough, would have no difficulty in finding the parish church of St. George the Martyr, more popularly known as St. George's, Southwark. At the rear of this church is the locality named Collier's Rents, far more widely known to-day than it was a few years ago, on account of the good work done by a mission connected with the London Congregational Union; a work not confined to the immediate neighbourhood, but carried far beyond it by special efforts to reach and benefit the homeless, the friendless, and the outcast, who are sought for at night and invited to this rendezvous of philanthropy.

The building in which meetings are held is surrounded by a dense population; poor for the most part, victims of the rush and hurry of London life. Many of the people are engaged in wretchedly ill-paid labour; others have no regular employment. The great majority live in over-crowded dwellings, or in the numerous common lodging-houses which abound in the neighbourhood.

Collier's Rents is accessible from Long-lane, opposite Mint-street, a thoroughfare notorious at one time for its dens of rascality, and characterised by Dickens as one of the worst social plague-spots in London; or from Angel-court, a quarter that strangely belies its name, unless the reference is to angels that kept not their first estate. In this court, as Collier's Rents is approached, may be seen almost any night, a number of homeless and outcast people, some of them belonging to the beggary and roguery of our great city, all huddled together against the brick wall of a factory, through which some little warmth is obtainable from a furnace or oven within. The neighbourhood has wonderfully changed for the better during the last few years, but there is still ample scope for benevolent Christian effort. The London Congregational Union may be congratulated on the good work already accomplished, altogether apart from denominational lines.

The Mission at Collier's Rents is, as already indicated, philanthropic as well as religious. The work it seeks to accomplish differs somewhat from that of other missions. It not only conveys the message of the Gospel and temperance principles into the homes of the people, but it ministers to their temporal necessities, and goes further afield in search of the poor and needy, the homeless and friendless, who are invited to free, substantial breakfasts. During the week there are, as may be readily imagined, many applicants for relief. The destitute are supplied with food, and if inquiries result satisfactorily, they are helped in other ways. Not the least valuable means of help is the Clothes' Mission, superintended by Mrs. Mearns. Upwards of 130,000 garments have been distributed during the last four years, and in very many cases these habiliments have been the means of securing permanent employment, and of giving new impulses to men and women who by force of circumstances had come down in the world.

Tools are sometimes redeemed from pledge, and, in cases of extreme necessity, arrears of rent are paid, to prevent the furniture which has been gathered bit by bit passing into the hands of the brokers. to be disposed of for a few shillings, to meet the landlord's claim and the expenses of distraint. Persons in a weak state of health, or who are tardily recovering from sickness, are sent to Mrs. Mearns's Convalescent Home at Folkestone, and large numbers of children are provided with country holidays, some for a few days and others for a fortnight or three weeks. Of the usefulness and real value of this Mission there is abundant evidence, not the least gratifying being that afforded by the letters received from time to time from those who in various ways have been benefited.

Applications for help are received at all hours of the day, and are forthwith investigated. Many cases are extremely urgent, and a large proportion are truly heartrending. The following are ordinary, every-day illustrations. A poor woman with a family of young children, whose husband is in the hospital, sends to us for a loaf of bread and a little tea and sugar. What if the latter are luxuries, they serve to make the trials of life more bearable, and to dispel for the time some of its gloom. Another is sorry to have to ask again, she hopes it will be the last time; but if she could have a little beef tea for her husband, who is ill, and food of some kind for her children, she would be so thankful. Another testifies that she and her children have lived on the oatmeal given to her three weeks previously, and that without this they must have starved. Cases such as these, coming from the immediate neighbourhood are well known to the visitors and workers connected with the Mission, and do not need special inquiry. The applications for articles of clothing, tea and sugar, bread and oatmeal are very numerous.

The writer's "Week at Collier's Rents" commenced on a Saturday at midnight; when, in company with one of the missionaries and a couple of friends, a start was made for the bridges, the Thames Embankment and the principal thoroughfares of the City and West-end, in search of the homeless and destitute, the Hall having already been lighted and arranged for their reception and preparations made for the breakfast, to which as many as possible were to be invited. The night was fine and dry, somewhat lessening the trials of those who were compelled to walk about because they were homeless and penniless. Men and women of all ages were met with, and with scarcely an exception, the offers of shelter and food were very gratefully accepted. In some parts of the City and West Central district there was an entire absence of the class of persons sought for. The explanation given by some of the men was that the police are down on them, and rigidly enforce the order to "move on." Within two hours, however, more than two hundred people were on their way to the Hall. At the east end of the Embankment, near Blackfriars Bridge, a large number were congregated, some resting on the seats, others standing in groups, and others again walking about on either side of the roadway. When it became known that breakfast tickets were being distributed, there was an eager rush to obtain the coveted tokens.

On returning to Collier's Rents soon after daybreak, the scene was especially striking, owing to the character, appearance, and attitude of the congregation. The Hall was well filled, the women sitting apart by themselves. Nearly all were asleep, either on the chairs, or at full length on the floor, wherever there was available space. The scene altogether was a study, a fit subject for an artist's genius. Breakfast was served at six o'clock, when each person was supplied with hot coffee and a paper bag containing about a pound of bread, a portion of it buttered, and the remainder sandwiched with a cut of cold beef which soon disappeared.

Breakfast was followed by a religious service, brief and to the point, conducted by the missionary in charge, who engages in his work with earnestness and kindliness of disposition. He is practical in what he says, and successful in attracting and maintaining the attention of his hearers. After singing, and a short prayer, another address was given, characterised by simple earnestness and well adapted to the occasion. The speaker was evidently in sympathy with his hearers in their unfortunate circumstances, and while not losing sight of their temporal wants, he affectionately urged them to consider their spiritual needs, as a matter of vital importance to all of them, and expressed the hope that notwithstanding the sorrow and adversity through which many of them were passing, such consideration would move them to a preparation for a better life in the world to come. Both speakers were listened to with rapt attention. It was somewhat significant that when, at the commencement of the religious service, an opportunity to leave the Hall was given to any who were unable or unwilling to remain, only eleven availed themselves of the permission. The simple earnestness with which this strange congregation joined in the singing of "The old, old story" and "O! how He loves" might be taken as indicating a longing for something that would satisfy the want of the soul, as fully as the material food had satisfied the need of the body. At half-past seven, the majority of the people separated to go their several ways, their course rendered less wearisome by the experience of the early morning.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN S. AMERICA.

In connection with the Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church in these countries there are fourteen ordained men; there are also thirteen licentiates, four of whom are elected for ordination. One of these, Señor Correa, has opened a station, and been doing good work for over a year in Porto Alegre, Brazil. Another, Señor Villanueva, has been labouring in Asuncion, Paraguay. Of the ordained men, eight are in Argentina and six in Uruguay. The Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church owns in these countries eight churches, and has four more properties ready to build on.

In this field there are also eight agents of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society, besides a large number of unpaid workers. This Society owns one school and orphanage, besides having over twenty evangelical day schools, in most if not in all of which Sunday-schools or classes are held.

Much of the pioneering has been done by the Bible colporteurs. The circulation of the Scriptures by the American Bible Society for the last three years has amounted to over 57,000 copies. During last year a new agency of the Society was established on the West Coast. The centre of work will be Lima. Señor Penzotti, who is appointed agent for the West Coast, has been delayed by cholera, quarantine, &c., but probably he will be in Lima now. He feels encouraged with the results of his work so far.

The annual meeting of the Bible Mission will take place next month at Monte Video. We expect it will be the largest and most important of the annual meetings we have yet had. I would ask your readers to join us in earnest prayer for this work and this field, also to praise and thank God for what He has already done.

THE MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT, whose office is 8A, Red Lion-square, W.C., has recently been holding special meetings among the poor outcasts of London. Hundreds of young women have attended, and quite a number have been rescued from a career of sin and shame, the murders among their unhappy class having greatly impressed them. The organising superintendent (Mr. J. M. L. Christien) has succeeded in gathering round him a goodly band of earnest workers to assist in visiting the lodging-houses where the women resort, and thus, so far as it is possible, every "unfortunate" will be reached and warned of the consequences of sin, and invited to accept practical Christian help. Mr. C. Wilson McCree is the secretary of the Movement.

THE BELFAST CONVENTION.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4.

At the early prayer-meeting an address was delivered by Rev. John Riddell, of Glasgow, on "The Tabernacle filled," the life of holiness being illustrated by statements in Exod. xl. Special attention was paid to the latter part of the chapter, which was found to yield important consecration lessons.

THE SPIRITUAL CONFLICT.

Speaking again at the morning meeting, Mr. Riddell dwelt upon the spiritual conflict described in Rom. vii. 22—23. The battle field is the life of every child of God while here on earth. The forces or armies are, the law in the members, the law of the mind, and the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus. The first is the constant, unalterable, sinward and downward tendency that is in the flesh, the self, the man. It is a disease in the members, and not part of the man, as is the second law, which pertains to the rational being as created by God. It is from the law of the mind which delights in the law of God that there arises the wail and cry, "Who shall deliver me?" The third law, moreover, is not a part of the human constitution, but rather it comes in like a blessed medicine to chase away the disease. The Holy Spirit in believers is an indestructible link between the glorified Head and the members of the body.

The opening of the conflict is set out in verse 23 of the chapter cited; it begins immediately upon the "inward man" putting the crown on the head of Jesus, and is a life-and-death struggle. Some of God's children consider that the best thing to do is to quietly wait until death delivers them from the troubles of temptation. It is agreed that by looking away from self to Christ we get pardon for sin. In like manner also must we look away from ourselves, if we are to escape defeat and despair in the fierce conflict with the power of sin. The Apostle Paul thanked God that he found deliverance "through Jesus Christ our Lord." The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus not only comes to the help of the law of the mind, but takes the matter entirely in hand. Henceforward the battle belongs to Christ, who, however, does not deliver his Daniels from the lions' den, but in them; does not deliver those who trust Him from the fiery furnace, but accompanies them and brings them through, without even a smell of the fire upon their garments.

Mr. Gregson called attention to the teaching of Phil. ii. 7: "Who emptied Himself," and Ezek. xxxvii. 26, 27: "I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh." Those who empty themselves may receive; deny self, and then you will know that God is your portion, and that Christ is a Saviour to the uttermost.

WHAT CONSECRATION INVOLVES.

In the afternoon Rev. Hubert Brooke gave a Bible-reading which was highly appreciated. The basis of study was found in Jer. xxxii. 6—12, wherein there is a record of the prophet's purchase of the field of Hanameel, in Anathoth, the evidences of the transaction to be preserved by Baruch as tokens of the people's return to their land. The incident was treated as a parable of the Great Salvation, inasmuch as, to describe it, the writer had to employ among others the following very significant terms:—inheritance, redemption, purchase, price, and evidence, counterparts of which are found in the New Testament in connection with the record of the redemption of our souls by the precious blood of Christ.

In order that He might have the right or privilege of redemption, Christ put Himself in the place of the sinner; He effected the redemption, as was also the case in the transaction by Jeremiah, when those to be redeemed were yet in the power of the enemy; the price was his own precious blood, and the purchase involved his death as the sinner's substitute. Pilate, Judas, the centurion, and others were among the witnesses who attested the transaction. Possession comes afterwards, and an early question here is, Has Christ taken possession of all whom He purchased? None can talk of holiness who have not given up to the Lord Jesus his purchased possession. Until they are "delivered out of the hand of their enemies," men cannot "serve God without fear."

In the story in Jeremiah the evidences are twofold, the one secret, or "sealed," and the other public, or "open." Probably the one was stored in an official place, while the other was given to the purchaser. 2 Tim. ii. 19 shows that in human redemption also the evidence is twofold; the sealed evidence has to do only with Christ and God—"The Lord knoweth them that are his"; the open evidence is between Christ and the world—"Let everyone that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity." As on some seals there is an upper and an under motto, so likewise here the inscription is twofold.

The "open" evidence as to Christ's possession must be public, 2 Cor. iii. 2, 3: "An epistle known and read of all men...manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ." Certainly the writing is sometimes very blurred, and even illegible.

Having cited several cases in which the secret and open evidence are conjoined in the Scriptures, of which Luke v. 13, 14, 20, 24, will serve as specimens, the speaker pointed out that the inward and outward testimony are intended to go together throughout the life of the believer. God intends that the life shall attest the fact that the heart is set upon God, that we should "walk in newness of life," be "dead to that wherein we were held."

As salvation is a gift of the Lord to man, so consecration is a gift from man to God, and it is obvious that it cannot be effected by degrees, but must date from some moment in the experience. The "holy nation" and "peculiar people," mentioned in 1 Pet. ii. 9, is expected to "show forth the praise of Him who hath called them," and those who have received the first evidence should trust the same Lord to give them the second, for their own salvation in holiness, and the glory of God.

In the evening Mr. Grubb spoke with much earnestness on Dan. v. 23: "The God in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified," urging his hearers to keep themselves from the service of self, which is of the essence of idolatry. Mr. Gregson followed with some equally fervent words on the duty of believers presenting themselves as living sacrifices to God, as set forth in Rom. xii. 1.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 5.

The prayer-meeting this morning was for God's blessing upon Ireland. He who "taketh up the isles as a very little thing" was asked to graciously take up Ireland.

THE KNOWLEDGE OF CHRIST.

Mr. Brooke gave another very instructive Bible-reading to-day. He called attention at the outset to 2 Peter i. 2: "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord." Multiplication, not addition, is spoken of, and this truly wonderful abounding of grace and peace is effected in a very simple way—through the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord. In the last verse of the Epistle quoted from, the saints are imperatively commanded to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." One of the simplest things in every-day life is for a man to fill four or five characters, and people may know him in one while not knowing him in others. Those who have received forgiveness of sins have only just begun to know Christ. For He is much more than a Saviour from sin's penalty. Every different name by which the Lord is known in Scripture, and they have been reckoned at considerably over two hundred, implies a different character, and also a different need in us for Him to supply.

John's Gospel shows Christ as introduced or manifested to us in five important characters. In chap. i. 31, we read the words of John the Baptist: "That He should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water." That is the purely historical introduction to Israel; it enlightens the mind, but nothing more. The next manifestation of which we read is spiritual as well as historical (ii. 11): "This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and manifested forth his glory; and his disciples believed on Him." Those who thus know Christ spiritually must show forth, or give, to others the light of the knowledge of the glory God (2 Cor. iv. 6). The next manifestation of Christ was to his disciples, after He had risen from the dead. It is mentioned in chap. xxi. 1, 14, He appeared unto them many times during forty days, and by degrees taught them that whether they saw Him or not, He was always with them. They seemed to have learned this lesson when He went away, saying that He would be "with them alway." That is one of the glorious paradoxes of the Gospel; Christ went away, and yet remained with us—Immanuel, "God with us"; always with us.

When Christ was with them, the disciples turned everything over to Him—the storm, the want of food—everything. And now, when the Lord is "with us alway," it is the simplest thing in the world to pass everything over to Him. If you believed in Him once, cannot you realise how peace is multiplied unto you indiscribably, when your eyes are opened to see that that same Jesus who saved you from the past guilt and penalty of your sins is ever with you? Do you thus know the risen Lord?

It is a really practical thing to know the Lord Jesus as an ever-present Master by your side. To accept the service of the Lord Jesus, to say that He has a claim upon you, is a divine thing; and if you see that you may have Christ "with you alway," the sooner you range yourself on his side the better.

It is a grand life to be ever with Christ; but there is something better even than that. Another and greater manifestation is given in chap. xiv. 21, 23, "He that loveth Me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him and will manifest myself to him....And my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." That is an entirely new manifestation. It is all bound up with the promise of the Holy Ghost. It is no longer the risen Lord being "with us alway," but the ascended Lord making his abode within us, manifesting Himself unto us as "He doth not unto the world."

One more manifestation is referred to in chap. xxi. 22: "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" This was shown, by references, to be an allusion to the yet future glorious appearing of Christ. Those who have experienced the manifestations of the risen and indwelling Saviour will then meet Him with joy, while others will meet Him with shame, and only be saved "as by fire," their works being destroyed.

Enforcing an exhortation to consecration, Mr. Brooke said: The historical manifestation has been made; the grace of God has appeared, and the glorious appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ is absolutely certain. Your joy and happiness then, and in expectation thereof now, depend upon how you treat the three intermediate manifestations. If you do not know Him as your Saviour, go and tell Him so. Then go and tell Him, "I never thought of Thee as the ever-present Saviour; I want to know Thee like that." Then, again, go and tell Him you want this permanent abiding of which we have also read. Then may you be changed step by step, from glory to glory, until at last you see Him as He is, and are transformed into his blessed likeness.

CLOSING WORDS.

On Friday afternoon some closing words were spoken; passages of Scripture were quoted from the platform and the audience; and testimony was borne as to blessing having been received by many during the Convention. The Chairman followed with an address, descriptive in some measure of his own experience since assured of the filling of the Holy Spirit. The meeting was followed, on Saturday, by a thanksgiving meeting, and the entire proceedings are now remembered by many with great joy.

WOMEN ON WOMEN'S WORK.

A CONFERENCE of women on women's work was held in Aberdeen last week. The proceedings opened on Tuesday with a public meeting of welcome to the delegates, presided over by the Countess of Aberdeen, who, in an interesting address, gave an account of the origin of the Conference, which was convened by the Ladies' Union. Her Ladyship also spoke of the need for women's work, and called upon Christian ladies to address themselves with all diligence to the many duties which lie before them.

On Wednesday several meetings were held. The Hon. Mrs. Ferguson, of Pitfour, presided over one in furtherance of the operations of the Scotch Girls' Friendly Society, the objects and methods of which she explained at length. A lodge in connection with the Society is about to be started in Aberdeen. Mrs. Gilchrist Clark spoke of work done in Dumfries, and Miss Mary Davidson, of Inchmarlo, described the progress made in Aberdeen. Miss Leigh, of Paris, followed with an address, showing that, by early recognition and timely help, girls have been rescued from danger, and guided into happy and pure ways of living.

Miss Anne Macdonald presided over a conference on Emigration. The report of the committee stated that of the eighty-three girls who had been sent out since 1884, all of whom they had any knowledge had done far better than could have been expected at home. The girls sent during last year had done even better than those of the preceding year in repaying their passage-money. The Hon. Mrs. Joyce maintained that Canada is the most favourable country for emigrants, because it has to a large extent a Sabbath-keeping, sober, and temperate people. Rev. R. Mackay, secretary of the Self-help Emigration Society, pointed out that the women who should not emigrate are those who are not prepared to adapt themselves to the circumstances of colonial life.

The members of the Sanitary Association met under the presidency of Mrs. Webster, of Edgehill. The Association was formed nearly thirty years ago, for the purpose of diffusing sanitary knowledge by means of lectures and publications. The rooms and clothing of the aged and sick have been cleaned; articles of clothing have been given to the needy; and many works of mercy have by its agency been done in a quiet way in Aberdeen. Mrs. Smith, of Newhills, gave an account of the Bible-women's Association, whose object is to co-operate with churches of all denominations to elevate the masses socially and intellectually. The work is carried on in the poorest parts of Aberdeen, and a sick-nurse attends the feet of the messengers of the Gospel.

Several workers spoke of endeavours to reach prisoners on their release. The Hon. Emily Kinnaird presided over the meeting on Temperance, at which addresses were delivered by Miss Dickson, of Peebles, and Mrs. Inglis, of Edinburgh. The latter indicated drunkenness as the greatest hindrance to all evangelical and mission work. Scotland is, she said, a very drunken country, and what temperance workers have to do is to open their eyes to what is going on about them, and in prayerful sympathy help those who have fallen to rise again to respectability. Workers must use all means and agencies for the prevention, which is far better than the cure, of drunkenness.

At a meeting on "Women's Work at Home," presided over by the Countess of Aberdeen, Miss Louisa Stevenson, of Edinburgh, maintained that want of public spirit is one of the greatest evils of the present day. She urged ladies to endeavour to serve the public, as they may be able, on the school and parochial boards. After twenty years' experience in public work, she had come to the conclusion that the work of the world was best done by men and women working together—not by men alone, nor by women alone. Mrs. Henry Kingsley, of Durham, pointed out that as poor law guardians women can do much good work. Mrs. Herbert, of London, spoke of woman's work in the congregation and the Sunday-school. The day's proceedings terminated with an evangelistic meeting for young women.

On Thursday a large meeting was held in connection with the Y.W.C.A. Lady Balfour, of Burleigh, presided. A paper, by Mrs. Gordon, of Parkhill, was read on "All Round Work and Workers for Christ." In a forcible manner Christians were asked to address themselves to meeting the many spiritual needs of the time. "The Practical Way of advancing the Interest of Y.W.C.A.'s" was the subject of a paper by Lady Victoria Campbell. The sorest hindrances in promoting work are in the workers. Were all rivalry, censoriousness, pride, selfishness, impatience at being misunderstood and thwarted, self-confidence in one's own methods or one's own association to be "amongst those things which we are leaving behind us," then, indeed, would workers find hindrances few and less formidable than they sometimes appear. The Hon. Emily Kinnaird spoke of the great importance of the work of the Association, and called upon ladies to help it forward.

At a meeting on Emigration, a paper full of facts, by Miss Emily Faithful, was read. Hospital and educational work were considered at other meetings. Mrs. Bannerman, Perth, gave an interesting address, dealing with the work of the Christian Women's Educational Union. The main objects are to encourage the study of the higher branches of education in a womanly and Christian spirit, without neglect of home duties; to urge on Christian girls the duty of keeping up their accomplishments and studies, and not to think it their duty to give up all their time to what might be called strictly religious work. It was urged that higher education and accomplishments should not be left to be cultivated only by those who do not care for religion.

The Dowager Countess of Aberdeen presided over a conference on work amongst mothers and fisher girls. "Women's Work Abroad" was discussed with much vigour at another meeting. Miss Philips, of the London Missionary Society, and Mrs. Stott, of the China Inland Mission, spoke of the needs of China, as well as on the general question of Christian labour abroad. Miss Leigh, of Paris, described work on the Continent. A congregation of children was also addressed by Miss Philips, who described the Chinese people and their country.

In the evening an evangelistic meeting was held, the speakers being Mrs. Forbes, of Dunlugas, and Mrs. Hind-Smith and Mrs. Herbert, both of London. The proceedings were very cheering to the promoters.

EAST LONDON SEAMSTRESSES.—About a year ago, Mr. W. J. Walker spent several days in visiting the homes of victims of the sweating system in the East-end of London. In the end he made arrangements with a merchant in the City whereby twenty-five women should receive fifty per cent. more for their work than they had formerly been paid. This experiment has resulted in more than was at the time expected, and a warehouse has been taken for the sale of shirts direct from the makers to shippers and the trade generally. Orders sent to the Direct Labour Shirt Company, 36, Spital-square, Bishopsgate, E.C., will definitely help the poor seamstresses.

HOUSE OF REST, KILBURN.

THE first all-day meeting for the winter season was held on Friday. There was a large attendance throughout the day. At the morning meeting Miss Mason gave an inspiring address. Amongst those who afterwards took part was Mrs. Garnet Barboza, a coloured lady, from Liberia. At the close of the morning's proceedings Miss Mason mentioned that, though the work of these Houses had greatly enlarged, God had met all the necessities that had arisen.

At three o'clock Major Swanson presided, and gave an interesting address on Luke xxiv. 28, showing that as witnesses for Christ we were to be endued, or, as it is in the Revised Version, "clothed with power." Pastor Frank White gave a very helpful and suggestive address from several passages in Paul's Epistles to the Thessalonians as to the importance of filling up that which was lacking in their faith, aptly illustrated by references from Bunyan's Holy War. A conference followed, in which various Christian workers took part.

At seven o'clock Miss Mason presided, and gave a very stirring address based on Matt. xxv. 31-46. After further prayer and testimony the meeting closed, giving the promise of greater blessing than ever in the year to come.

On Sunday afternoon the first of the series of Sunday afternoon services at 3.30 in the House of Rest was conducted by Miss Mason.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—An important meeting was held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday last, when a union (long contemplated) was effected between the two Boards, known as the "Free Church of England," and the "Reformed Episcopal Church." After much consideration, an organic union was carried by acclamation, and the united churches will henceforth bear the name of "The Free Reformed Episcopal Church of England." A joint committee was elected to prepare rules and canons, and to report after Christmas.

SHELTERING THE OUTCASTS.—The Mission at 59, Mile End-road, superintended by Mr. G. Hamilton, are keeping the hall open every night, comfortably warmed and lighted. One night recently there were 134 found shelter. The police are working heartily with the Mission. One young woman, seventeen years of age, and unfallen, had been turned into the streets because she could not pay for her lodging. An orphan, homeless, friendless, hungry, with nowhere to go, she wisely went to the police-station and told her tale, and the authorities brought her to Mr. Hamilton's hall. She got work the next afternoon, and the Mission gave her temporary help till her wages could be received.

CHANGES IN THE HOLY LAND.—Anyone who has watched the rapid changes that have taken place in Syria and Palestine during the last quarter century, must have a certain feeling of alarm as he calls to mind, one after another, the interesting old customs which have doubtless clung to this land for more than 2000 years, dropping out of sight for ever. It is a moderate statement to say that these twenty-five years have seen more transformations than the many centuries that have gone before. Western ideas and methods are coming in with resistless push. Only an obstinate Government has prevented the railroad schemes from maturing; and the moment Gaza and Jerusalem and Acre and Damascus are greeted with the shrill scream of the engine-whistle the changes will be vastly augmented.—New York Independent.

THE PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE IN LONDON, though small, has the merit of keeping up a students' missionary society of great activity. Not only are lectures delivered every month to the students on missionary work and kindred subjects, but the students themselves work during the session and the summer months in collecting money for missionary objects, and in diffusing missionary information. Each year some particular scheme of missionary effort is taken up. The students make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the details of the work, and then preach in the different congregations of the church and obtain collections. In this way nearly £400 has been gathered during the past twelve months, being more than double the sum obtained during the previous year. More than fifty churches were visited, and warm interest kindled and increased both in the college and the medical mission work which was described.—Christian World.

Personalia.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe left New York for Liverpool by the ss. Umbria on Saturday last.

Dr. Miller, Principal of the Madras Christian College, will not return to India till December, owing to ill-health.

Mr. Robert W. Perks suggests that a Methodist Church Congress be held triennially in crowded centres like Manchester, Leeds, Birmingham, and London.

Rev. J. G. Paton, of the New Hebrides, has written his autobiography. It will, by and by, be published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, and is said to be a work of thrilling interest.

The late Professor R. A. Proctor was one of that numerous class of men brought up in the Roman Catholic faith, whom the erroneous demands of that Church upon the faith of its members have driven into infidelity.

Mr. George Muller, of Bristol, by latest accounts, was in China. He will go next into Japan. In his travels he stops long enough to see how people live and what they need, and to do some preaching and lecturing.

Rev. George Kerry, the highly esteemed Calcutta Baptist missionary, who has laboured in India for over thirty years, recently had a narrow escape by his horse running away and colliding with a tramcar. His neck was nearly dislocated, he was sorely shaken, and has not since been fit for much work.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon.—On Monday, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon was seized with another attack of his old malady, rheumatic gout, which prevented him from keeping his engagements at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The usual Monday prayer-meeting was presided over by Rev. James A. Spurgeon. At the opening of the service it was announced by one of the deacons that Mr. Spurgeon was suffering considerable bodily pain.

Mr. W. F. Davis, of Boston, U.S., being asked whether, after his imprisonment for preaching on the Common without permit from the mayor, he would do the like again, answered: "Yes, if I saw occasion for it." "Would you ask for a permit?" "Never." But a permit has been obtained for him, without his knowledge or consent, by his legal counsel. Mr. Davis may, therefore, preach on the Common without being stopped by the police.

Dr. Adolph Saphir.—Arrangements have been made for the delivery of a series of lectures, on Thursdays, from 11.30 a.m. to 12.30, by Dr. Adolph Saphir, in the St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington, W.; subject—"The Bible." The first lecture will be given on Thursday, November 1. Mr. Robert J. Masters, 327, Vauxhall Bridge-road, Victoria Station, S.W., will be pleased to send tickets to any friends willing to help in making these lectures known.

Mr. George W. Cable, the American novel writer, is to continue teacher of the Saturday afternoon Bible-class in Boston, formerly conducted by Dr. Meredith. It is attended by over 2000 persons. Mr. Cable is analytic, comprehensive, and practical in his methods. He impresses you with his thorough earnestness, fairness, and loveableness, and continually insists upon personal righteousness as the end sought by Christ's teachings. The gentle courtesy with which he answers all questions is characteristic of the man.

Mr. Frederick S. Arnot, recently returned from Central Africa, will give an account of his missionary travels and labours in the Dark Continent during the past seven years:—Y.M.C.A., Whittington-avenue, Leadenhall-street, on Monday, October 22, at 6.30; at Clapton Hall, Alkham-road, Cazenove-road, Upper Clapton, on Tuesday, October 23, at 7.30; at Welbeck Hall, Welbeck-street, on Thursday, October 25, at 7.30; and at Kilburn Town Hall, on October 31, at 7. Christians of all denominations are invited.

Rev. Peter Thompson recently said that the previous Sunday he had experienced a long and painful strain. The body of "Long Liz" lay within fifty yards of where he was in the habit of preaching, and they trod the pavements of the courts and alleys where the terrible tragedies had been committed. The whole neighbourhood was overwhelmed by the terrible revelations which had been made of dark deeds and shameful life. It was a terrible strain, and God alone supported them. Young ladies visited and worked in dark courts and squares where policemen trembled and would not visit alone.

Mr. Wharton, of Barrow-in-Furness, has again left England to labour for a season among the coloured freedmen of the Southern States. He asks prayer that God's blessing may follow his work.

Mr. Denham Smith's condition throughout the week has been fluctuating, more especially since there has been a threatening of the return of those symptoms which recently have brought him so low.

Rev. S. A. Selwyn, of Hatcham, has concluded a very successful mission at Maldon, Essex. For several months united prayer was offered for much blessing on the effort, and the realisation has proved cheering beyond all expectation.

Rev. C. B. Sawday, of Leicester, and late of Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, was presented on Monday evening with an address and a purse of sovereigns by his former congregation, as a token of esteem and gratitude for his twenty-five years faithful pastorate.

Mr. Henry J. Atkinson is making a strenuous effort to raise the sum of £10,000 to pay off the debt of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. He and his wife are ready to give £500, and he hopes that some of the wealthy Methodists of England will come forward with similar amounts, so as to end the difficulty.

Rev. J. Mountain and Mrs. Mountain have returned to England after an absence of nearly seven years, during which they have conducted evangelistic services all round the world. Mr. Mountain's health is now, we are glad to say, fairly good. We hope in one or two succeeding issues to give from his pen some recollections of his tour. His address is 267, Camden-road, N.

Lord Mount-Temple is lying extremely ill at Broadlands, Hampshire. His lordship was present at a service in Romsey Abbey on Sunday, the 7th inst., and was then in his usual health. The same night he was taken ill, and on Monday medical aid was summoned. The patient took to his bed, suffering from a chill, which was followed by low fever and erysipelas. Mr. Maclean, of Netley, was called in on Wednesday, and spoke hopefully of the case. On Thursday, however, a change for the worse took place, and on Monday morning inquirers were informed that the sufferer was decidedly worse, and in a very prostrate condition.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A new temperance hall, costing £1500, has been opened at Chester.

The Scottish Leader says:—"Whitechapel, in respect of gin taverns, must be as Grosvenor-square, should the people so desire it."

At the recent Church Congress temperance was prominent in the discussions. We trust it is an indication of the awakened conscience of the Established Church on the subject.

The Liverpool City Council has resolved to apply to Parliament for powers to take energetic action against publicans who encourage "free and easies" and similar entertainments on their licensed premises.

The Alliance anniversary meetings, Manchester, were a great success. Sir W. Harcourt, who presided at the evening meeting, declared for local option and against compensation. Rev. Charles Garrett made a powerful speech.

At a recent agricultural exhibition in the Province of Quebec, the Women's Christian Temperance Union undertook the catering. They provided good food, but no intoxicants, and there was an entire absence of drunkenness.

An eight days' Gospel temperance mission has been held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Rev. W. J. Mayers was the missioner. Numerous pledges were taken. At one of the meetings Mr. Spurgeon gave a telling address.

Rev. J. P. Foster, vicar of Oxenhall, Gloucestershire, has offered £5 and £2 for the two best essays upon "Converting cider and perry fruit into jam or any other marketable commodity, except alcoholic beverages." The prizes are to be awarded on November 9.

Mr. Axel Gustafson, founder of the English National Prohibition Party, has sailed for Australia, in acceptance of the cordial invitation extended to him by the executive committee of the International Temperance Convention opening in Melbourne on November 19.

Mr. Sims recently addressed the 1st Battalion Royal Irish at Plymouth. A temperance society was formed, fifty-six men signing the pledge. Captain Chichester, when asked to be the first president, said he must first become a teetotaler; if the men proved to be in earnest in the work, he was quite prepared to do so.

On Friday evening last a new Gospel Temperance society was inaugurated at the Wellington-road Hall, Wellington-road, Stoke Newington-road. Judging by the opening ceremony, the society has a bright, useful future before it. The hall was crowded throughout, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. William Noble, G. F. Collins, S. Hawley, John T. Rae, and "Old Dr. Wade." A large number of pledges were registered. The meetings will be continued every Friday evening.

SALVATION ARMY IN ROME.

Dear Sir,—The officer who was in command having fallen into ill-health and having returned to England, I was left in charge at the end of June last. We shut up the hall for a few days for repairs, and since we opened we have had meetings every night throughout the summer. The meetings have been well attended through the season, notwithstanding the terrible heat. Lately the disturbances have recommenced, and we need prayer, for this is a very hard station indeed, and we have much to try us, as we can see the persecution is an organised affair by the priests, who do all in their power to ruin and stop the work. On the other hand we have had great blessing, and we are sure that we shall reap if we faint not.

Would you kindly let any friends coming to Rome know of the work of the Salvation Army here, and give them our address, as below, near the Railway Station, as we have changed our house. J. H. Gordon, Staff Captain.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Grattan Guinness is conducting a mission this week in Belper, Derbyshire.

Rev. George F. Pentecost, D.D., is to conduct Gospel services in Helensburgh, N.B., this week.

Mr. Richard Murphy, evangelist, has finished a month's mission in Coatbridge. The Lord has greatly blessed the preaching of the word. A number profess to have been brought to the Saviour.

Gosport.—Mr. W. Monro Collings has conducted a very successful eight days' mission at the Camden Town Mission-hall. A goodly number of children were among those who professed to find peace in believing,

Dr. H. Grattan Guinness will hold a mission to men in Edinburgh next month under the auspices of the Scottish Evangelistic Association. Earnest prayer is desired that abundant blessing may be vouchsafed.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has conducted a week's mission in Charlotte-street Church, Carlisle. The meetings were well attended, and a large number—chiefly senior scholars—consecrated themselves to the service of Christ. Meetings for mutual help and prayer are now being arranged.

The Brixton Y.M.C.A. is arranging for a special mission to young men to be conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, November 1 to 12. Our readers are asked to pray for a blessing on the work; any of them who live in Brixton could help by influencing young men to attend the meetings.

Tent Work.—Gospel addresses have been given in a large tent erected by Lady Ashburton in the district of Victoria Docks. The evangelists have preached the Gospel very clearly, and with power. In my daily visitation among the people I find a great many who have either been restored from a backsliding state, or brought from gross darkness to the light of the Gospel. A hall is in course of erection for the continuance of this good work. J. Waite.

Plymouth.—Very much blessing has been granted in connection with a mission arranged for by the Y.M.C.A., conducted from October 1 to 12, by Mr. J. Crofton Rainey. For a long time united prayer had been offered; careful preparation was made, the power of the Holy Ghost was sought, and God graciously gave the increase. From the first there was no flag either in interest, attendance, or awakening. About fifty names and addresses of young men, who had received definite blessing, were taken, and they are being introduced to churches.

NORWICH VICTORIA HALL MISSION.—We were recently favoured with the presence of Mr. J. McKittrick and his interesting protégé "Bampoli," from the Congo. At the conclusion of a most instructive account of mission work in the interior of the Dark Continent, a collection was taken for the funds of "the Balolo Congo Mission." This missionary meeting was preceded by a social gathering, and the proceedings throughout were of the most enthusiastic character.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

SEVERE CASE of BRONCHITIS & ASTHMA —CASE of Rev. W. R. CAPEL, BICKENHILL VICARAGE, near BIRMINGHAM.

In August, 1887, the wife of this clergyman applied to me for advice for her husband. He had been always delicate when a young man; had been sent to Madeira on that account. Afterwards became subject to Bronchial Colds, which increased, until after reaching middle life, when the attacks became frequent and severe; the chief symptoms being night cough, thick expectoration, soreness of the chest, and great difficulty of breathing. The bronchial attacks became complicated with asthma.

The dreaded winter was passed through well. Writing me himself, on the 18th July last, he says:—"Before Mrs. Capel wrote you, every winter I was regularly attacked with asthmatic bronchitis on the slightest cold. You recommended me to use your Elixir, and to take it regularly as a preventive. I did so, and passed through last winter entirely free from my old malady, except that once I caught cold, but it passed off rapidly. While thanking God for His mercy, I thank you too for such wonderful medicine. I recommend it right and left. Make any use you like of this."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

THE DEACON'S WEEK: or, A Week of Prayer turned into a Week of Practice.
By ROSE TERRY COOKE.

PRINTED IN AN EIGHT-PAGE QUARTO TRACT FOR GENERAL DISTRIBUTION.

With Full-Page Illustration and Five Smaller Engravings.

3/6 per 100; or 500 for 17/6.

This Story may also be had as a Booklet for enclosing in the modern square envelope. Price 1s. per dozen.

"A clever little story, showing how for one week, instead of meeting together for prayer for certain objects each evening, the members of the church had a week of PRACTICE. At the expiration of this time they met, and the lot fell upon one, a deacon, to give his experience. It was not the best of records, as he said himself, but it was very instructive withal. The little book should be widely read, and will be found interesting and profitable."

SOUL-WINNING.
QUALIFICATIONS FOR IT.
AN ADDRESS
By MAJOR D. W. WHITTLE.

1s. per dozen, 7s. 6d. per 100, post free; or may be had singly, 1d. per copy.

"If you are not converted, then it is useless to think that you can win a soul for the Master."

"I remember, when a boy in New England, and just learning to swim, that there was a big rock, some distance out in the river under water, which we would swim out to and rest upon, and then swim back again.

"On one occasion a little crowd of us swam out towards the rock, stretching out our feet in order to try and touch it, but we failed to find it. There were some pale faces amongst us when we found the position in which we were placed, our strength being nearly exhausted. I remember taking a few strokes, when suddenly, my feet touched the rock, and I soon planted myself upon it. When I had done so I lifted up my voice to my comrades, and called out, "Here is the Rock!" and I was able to help them; but until my feet were placed on the rock I could do them no good.

A Temperance Tale.

Mrs. M. A. Paull-Ripley has written a strong temperance story, Vermont Hall (5s. Hodder & Stoughton). She powerfully depicts the evils of intemperance, mainly confining her purview to those in the well-to-do ranks of life. Drinking ministers and distilling deacons are hit very hard, and the gratifying increase of total abstinence principles among divinity students is noted. Two of the leading characters, the young squire and the son of the brewing deacon, are staunch abstainers, so that the book has a special claim on the attention of young men. We wish it God-speed on its noble mission.

Church History.

The first volume of three of the Church History of Professor Kurtz has just been published in the "Foreign Biblical Library" series (7s. 6d.) of Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. It is a goodly book, translated from the latest edition of the German original into excellent English by Rev. John Macpherson. In the Fatherland, Kurtz's work has long held a distinguished place, being generally used as a text-book in the universities. We have no doubt that in this English form it will be of special service to theological students, who will find it as accurate in detail and lucid in statement as it is exhaustive in its treatment of the subject in its many phases and bearings. The first volume brings the history down to 911 A.D.

A Preachers' Help.

The Weekly Pulpit, vol. iv. Elliot Stock. This book, as the title-page declares, is designed "for the use of preachers." The strain for the preacher was never so severe as now, and anything that can help to lighten his labour, and to give efficiency to his ministry, may be welcomed. The contents of this book are well calculated to accomplish its purpose. There are sermons and outlines on a great variety of subjects, pulpit hints, illustrations, and homiletical expositions, for all which many a preacher will be thankful. One is tempted to ask why the expositions should be dealt out in such homœopathic doses? The space devoted to it is often less than a single page. There is nothing which our congregations need more than consecutive exposition of Scripture; and there is nothing which preachers so seldom attempt with success. The sermons and outlines are devout and evangelical in tone; some of them striking and original; and all thoughtful and suggestive.

Rev. M. Guy Pearse's New Book.

The West Central Mission has given us one of the best volumes that have come from the fluent pen and graceful fancy of Rev. Mark Guy Pease. The Christianity of Jesus Christ (2s. 6d. T. Woolmer) contains the substance of Mr. Pearse's Friday noon addresses at St. James' Hall, and is dedicated to his colleague, Rev. H. Price Hughes. It deals with the practical and ethical, rather than the doctrinal, aspects of the Christian system. Mr. Pearse's expositions of the Christian life are intensely radical in the true sense: they go to the very root of the matter. He has no quarter for the unfruitful or inconsistent professor; and though his arrows are barbed by the graces of smooth and poetic speech, they go straight to the mark and stick. "The Christlike life," he says in a pregnant sentence, "is the only power that can subdue the world": it would be well for the churches to ponder this in an age when doctrinal and ecclesiastical controversy runs so high. Such preaching as these chapters reveal, in the centre of West-end life, ought to do much in transforming society; may there be many readers as well as hearers.

STORY BOOKS.

Across the Channel. By James Crowther. 3s. 6d. Sunday School Union. An excellent work by a well-known author. Numerous illustrations greatly add to the value of the letterpress, which is made up of sketches, descriptive and historical, of the most interesting spots of Europe. Instruction and entertainment are very happily combined, and the book will certainly be a favourite with those young people who may be privileged to read it.

PICTURE BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG.

Three of these come to us from Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. Bible Pictures and Stories (1s.), with selected narratives and splendid pictures to match, will help to fix the sacred stories in the mind of the young.—Sunny Faces (1s.) is truly described as "a picture-book for happy hours."—Anecdotes in Natural History (2s.) by Rev. F. O. Morris (with a profuse supply of engravings after well-known artists), tell some wonderful tales about the lower creation, and is well fitted to create a proper regard for animals.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.

This house sends out its usual autumn budget of books for the young. Among them are:—Lizzie Hurst. By P. W. Darnton. 9d. An attractive exhibition of the fact that God takes care of those who put their trust in Him.—One Stormy Night. By Mary Onley. 9d. A sad tale of the sea, along with a good dog story.—The Magic Runes. By Emma Leslie. 9d. A tale of the times of Charlemagne, showing how some noble Saxons forsook the worship of idols in order to serve the living and true God.—Rivals at School. By C. J. Hamilton. 1s. This book tells of a clever and generous-minded boy who took pleasure in the superior achievements of one still more capable than himself.—The Making of a Hero. By Emma Leslie. 1s. A realistic picture of the struggles of French Protestants in the first half of the eighteenth century.—Dulcie Derwent, Artist. By Mrs. A. F. Muir. 1s. This tale, with which a second is bound up, presents the experiences of one who was brought to see that it was for her good that affliction came upon her.—"Doctor Phill." By Mrs. Skinner. 1s. 6d. "That sin will out," and the opportunities of life should not be neglected, are the principal morals of this story.—Lindéman Brothers. By Jessie Saxby. 1s. 6d. A tale of affection between brothers while in circumstances of adversity. Some incidental lessons are also well presented.—Ethelwyn's Light and Gerald's Protégé. By Lucretia Maybury. 1s. 6d. "Honesty is the best policy" is well illustrated here, while principles of truth and justice are admirably enforced.—The Old Lock Farm. By Annie Gray. 2s. An intensely interesting story of canal life, calculated to serve a very useful purpose. Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, contributes an appendix on our canal population, and the steps that have been taken to improve their condition.—The Cave by the Waterfall. By E. C. Kenyon. 2s. Another tale of heroism is bound up with this "mountain story, founded on fact." Both are full of incident, and likely to give delight to many young readers.—Who was Guilty? By W. J. Lacey. 2s. 6d. A school mystery solved and related with considerable skill.—Tom's Nugget. By Professor J. F. Hodgetts. 3s. 6d. Well illustrated by Gordon Browne. This story of the Australian goldfields is a great success. Every page is brilliant with adventure, such as our boys will be glad to read.—The Red Lion, by James Compton. 1s. 6d. This tale describes how, through the instrumentality of one man in humble position, the inhabitants of a village were persuaded that total abstinence is the safest and best course to pursue. It is suitable for young or old.

ANNUALS.

The Church Monthly is a capital annual. The contents are as varied as the object is good, to provide wholesome reading for the family circle.

As to the bound volumes of Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.'s family magazines, we can scarcely give them higher praise than to say that they show no signs of falling off in contents, and the covers are as rich as ever in colouring. The Friendly Visitor has big type for the waning eyesight of the old folks; The Mother's Companion contains a large storehouse of varied, interesting, and useful reading for the busy housewife; The Family Friend caters successfully for everybody; The Children's Friend has a marvellous array of splendid pictures, not to speak of well-told stories; The Infant's Magazine has an exquisitely coloured frontispiece, "Master John Bull," and is altogether such as will attract the occupants of the nursery. All the foregoing are priced at 1s. 6d., 2s., and 2s. 6d., according to binding. There will be no dull winter evenings in the family circle where these beautiful serials are on hand. The Band of Hope Review (1s.) and The British Workman (1s. 6d.) are old favourites, but they seem every year to renew their youth; they are splendid preachers to eye and heart on behalf of temperance and all the other virtues.

The Child's Own Magazine. 1s. Sunday School Union. A bright little book for the young. The pictures and stories serve a useful end, as well as entertaining the readers.

The Herald of Mercy. 1s. Morgan & Scott. The annual volume of this monthly is replete with instructive and interesting sketches and articles, profusely illustrated. In many cottage homes and village libraries it would be welcome alike to old and young.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From Constantine to Charles the Great is the title of a very useful manual by W. F. Adeney, M.A., giving an abstract of the history of Christianity from the third to the eighth century. It is one of the "Normal" series, and deserves high commendation, for it is at once comprehensive in scope and concise in statement. 2s. Sunday School Union.

Anecdotes on Bible Texts. 1s. The Sunday School Union has published two more volumes of anecdotes, collected and edited by Mr. J. L. Nye. One is devoted to the illustration of the Epistles to the Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Thessalonians, and Timothy; and the other takes in all the remaining books of the New Testament. Some hundreds in number, and selected from a wide range of reading, the anecdotes will doubtless prove useful to many preachers and teachers.

Mediæval France. By Gustave Masson. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin. This is another volume of the "Story of the Nations" series, and a specially valuable one, too. The period covered is that between 987, when Hugues Capet assumed the title of King of France, and 1515, when Louis XII. died in very troublous times. Chronological details are given with much precision, and considerable attention is paid to the intellectual activities of the period. An interesting feature is the condensed information as to early French literature, and by means of a glossary at the end the student is enabled easily to understand such archaisms as occur in the illustrative passages quoted in the text.

The Beatitudes. By Richard Glover, Bristol. Religious Tract Society. The Ministry of the Church to the Young: Fve Lectures, delivered in Regent's Park College, to Students and Teachers, by Richard Glover, Bristol (1s. 6d. Sunday School Union). It is not often that the press issues books so small as these, that contain so much thought and fire. In things theological we differ from Mr. Glover very seriously; but his strength is not in his theology; it lies in a very different direction. He is a modern mystic, with a rare gift of insight and imagination, that makes him to all intents and purposes a poet of no mean order. So, while we distrust his theology, we receive gratefully the noble thought and impulse, exquisitely expressed, with which these books abound. Discriminating readers will find a mine of wealth in either of these little volumes.

Some pretty Christmas and motto cards have been published by the Christian Police Association, 18, Adam-street, Strand. They are suited for general distribution, and cheap at 5s. 6d. a hundred.

Messrs. Bell have issued a cheap edition of the Memorials of the Hon. Ion Keith Falconer. The whole of the first issue has been taken by the trade, and another edition will be issued shortly.

Deanery Guide to Westminster Abbey. By M. C. and E. T. Bradley. Cloth, 1s. Pall Mall Gazette Office. Visitors to the Abbey will find their many questions answered in this work, which is at once concise and complete.

Gems for Young Men from King Solomon's Mines. Extracted by J. Jackson. 1d. Partridge. The "gems" are words of wisdom, counsel, and reproof, whereunto all will do well to take heed; they are selected from the Proverbs, and ranged under appropriate headings.

Some Thoughts on Following Christ. By S. A. M. H. 1d. Nisbet. Important truth is here emphasised. Those who have come to Christ as their Saviour are urged to go after him as their Leader and Master, taking care to show fervour and diligence in loving and faithful service.

The American magazine for the young, St. Nicholas (T. F. Unwin), sends out a wonderful programme for its next year's issues, beginning with November. Besides papers specially written for boys and girls, it will contain tales and articles illustrative of life in almost every country in the world.

Lepers in India. Colonel E. H. Paske, late Deputy Commissioner of Kangra, Punjab, in a small pamphlet, published by Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co., gives a sadly interesting account of the condition of the poor lepers of India, estimated to be half a million in number. Some particulars are also given of the beneficent operations of the Mission to Lepers in India, a society which seeks the spiritual good as well as bodily comfort of the victims of this terrible disease.

The True Priesthood. By Rev. J. Chambers. 2d. J. F. Shaw & Co. In order to make clear what the true sacrifice is, the writer of this pamphlet had first to describe the counterfeit. His facts are reliable, his arguments sound, and his conclusions in harmony with the obvious teachings of Holy Writ.

In Memoriam: Katherine Frances Haire. Mrs. W. Bradbury has written a short and simple record of the life and death of a well-known lady evangelist, who not long ago "finished her course with joy" in the midst of the work she so much loved. Copies of this little book may be had at 15, Claremont crescent, Weston-super-Mare.

Biblical Teachings for the Young. By E. C. A. 8d. Partridge & Co. Twelve short readings on Old and New Testament subjects for the help of parents or teachers. The language is simple, the doctrine on cardinal points sound. Older scholars might read with profit Abraham's Faith, the Character of Paul, and other readings.

Bridewell Royal Hospital, Past and Present. By A. J. Copeland, F.S.A. Wells, Darton & Co. How the old Castle near St. Bridget's Well became first a royal residence, then for a short while a cardinal's palace, then a house of correction and finally a hospital, is here related in an interesting way. Excellent woodcuts of Edward VI., Bishops Ridley and Atterbury, and various London buildings are given, and curious memoranda hitherto unpublished.

Learning to Read in South China. Rev. J. C. Gibson, of Swatow, pleads with much force for the wide use of the various vernaculars of the Chinese Empire, rather than mainly the so-called "Book" language, in the work of disseminating the Gospel in written form. He advocates the adoption of the Roman alphabet in the phonetic expression of those vernaculars which have as yet no literature, and shows that great results may be expected from measures which will make it easy for the Chinese people to read the Scriptures in their own tongue. The pamphlet contains much to interest Christians who think upon the great needs of China. (Hazell, Watson & Viney).

Among recent small publications of the Sunday School Union may be mentioned: International Daily Text Book for 1889 (4d.), a companion for students of the International Lessons; The Sunday-school Teacher's Pocket Book and Diary for 1889 (2s.), which will undoubtedly be of great service to many teachers in the detail of their work; The Sunday-school Illustrated Almanack for 1889 (1d.); New Year Addresses (1d. each), by Revs. R. Glover (to children), C. A. Berry (elder scholars), Dr. J. Monro Gibson (teachers), and R. Robinson (parents); two additions to the "Bright Star" series (3d. each); The Pride of Greenwich, and The Young Shetlander; and two capital sixpenny books for children, entitled, The Fairy of Rose Alley by J. F. Higgs, and The Jessamines, by Grace Stebbing.

Letters to the Editor.

TESTIMONY FROM A MISSIONARY.

Dear Sir,—Please allow me to thank cordially the kind friends who have been regularly and so long sending me The Christian. I fully appreciate and highly value the paper; I admire and prize its high Christian moral tone—its undenominational character, and its pure evangelical principles. Its weekly record of the biography of Christian heroes and Christian worthies, its strong advocacy for the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom, its valuable information and instructions on the work of Christian missions makes it truly what it professes to be a "weekly record of Christian life, Christian testimony, Christian work and missionary enterprise."

None but God alone knows the blessed results of this healthy Christian publication. I wish you success more and more, and God's blessing in this "work of faith and labour of love." I look forward every week to its arrival, and peruse it with avidity, even its minutest detail.—Yours in Christ,

H. P. Thompson, Native Pastor.

"REVIVAL AMONG WALDENSIANS."

Dear Sir,—I have just read in The Christian of August 31, which was sent to me by a friend, a letter with the heading, "Revival among Waldensians," signed by Mons. Elie Vernier, itinerating pastor. Mons. Vernier exaggerates the results obtained in speaking of the conversion of a "multitude of young worldly men and women, and persons of every age." Would that it were true! He also represents the Waldensian Church as opposed, both now and in days gone by, to a work of revival! So far is this from being the case that it seems incredible that anyone should even suggest it.

Notwithstanding the insinuations of Mons. Vernier, which represent "The Table" and the whole Church as not friendly to the awakening of souls, and notwithstanding the slowness of our spiritual progress, we are nevertheless thankful to God for what He has done for us during these last fifty years. Half a century ago Sunday-schools scarcely existed; now we have eighty-eight, with 394 teachers and 3437 scholars. The Bible is taught in our 202 day schools to 5052 pupils. The religious instruction of our catechumens is thorough and careful. Hundreds of prayer-meetings are held in our churches, and are well attended. Every third year our pastors are sent, two by two, on a home mission tour throughout all the churches. Voluntary contributions, which in 1858, were only £148 sterling, have risen to £2781, as indicated in this year's report. God has entrusted to us a work of evangelisation in Italy, where we have 128 labourers, forty-four organised churches, and forty-four preaching stations, with 4074 communicants, 2323 pupils in day schools, and 2621 in Sunday-schools, and these mission churches have this year contributed for religious purposes £2633. Two Waldensian missionaries are labouring in Basutoland and on the banks of the Zambesi; one was ordained at this year's Synod for the same mission, and others are preparing to follow.

These facts will serve to prove to every unprejudiced mind that the Waldensian Church is not opposed to the awakening of souls. Let English Christians help us with their prayers and their sympathy. Zeal is good, but it must be accompanied by knowledge and prudence. H. Bosio, Pastor,

Vice-Moderator of the Waldensian Table.

THEOLOGICAL COLLEGES.

Dear Sir,—Many thanks are due to you for your straightforward rejoinder to "Vindex," in a recent issue, with reference to Mr. Horton and the Baptist Union, touching, as it does, the real fundamental issue.

May I be permitted to add that, in glancing at your advice on p. 18 of the same number, as to pulpit defection, I could not but wonder when and where would arise a Christian courage, faithfulness, and power adequate to raise and follow up the question of "COLLEGE" teaching, training, &c., in regard to the plenary inspiration and supreme authority of the Holy Scriptures throughout. It cannot but be, I think, that the defection of these ministers from the evangelical faith, now so prevalent, must proceed largely, or mainly, from this source. If so, there is small hope of remedial measures in the streams, while the fountain gives forth as before.—Yours faithfully, J. L.

MUSIC HALLS.

Sir,—In classing "the enormous number of 450" as "music-halls," your correspondent "E. O." is a trifle unjust. There are, in reality, only about twenty, or, at the most, thirty music-halls properly so-called. These, too, are conducted—I am speaking generally—in a most orderly and respectable manner, and are certainly not the vile dens which "E. O." would make them appear to your readers. No gambling, card-sharping, blasphemy, betting, or solicitation by "gay" women is allowed, and no lewd or disgusting song is for a moment entertained or permitted; in fact, should any vocalist attempt to foist anything of this kind upon the public attending the halls to which I am referring, the singer would be immediately dismissed, if not ejected by the proprietor or his acting manager.

I am not, of course, speaking for every little public or beer house with its "harmonic meeting" nights. These I know very little of.—Yours faithfully, Augustin Wellington.

CORRUPTING LITERATURE.

Dear Sir,—I have just come from a trial before our magistrates of two youths for a singularly cruel and cold-blooded murder. The victim was an industrious, well-conducted man, who was engineer and time-keeper at a large sawmill, and whose only offence was his conscientiousness in reporting late comers. A visit to the barracks of the Salvation Army last week led to confession of the crime.

It is said that "penny dreadfuls" were found in the lads' rooms. They were not silly youths, nor were they brutalised by drink. They looked like those who had grown by their reading so familiar with the taking away of the life of another that it came to be looked upon as no more heinous than robbing an apple orchard. The light of religion awoke them from the death-sleep. They both went to the penitent-form, and two days afterwards confessed their deed. The effect of the kind of reading in which our boys now indulge, and the false notions of bravery and revenge they form, presented a phenomenon quite new to me, and inexpressibly serious.—Yours truly, W. G.

Dear Sir,—With reference to the hymn by Mr. Moreshead, printed at page 14 of The Christian of the 28th ult., I should be glad if any of your readers who may be in possession of the original leaflet would kindly forward the same to me for inspection. It shall be safely returned.—Yours obediently,

SLAVE TRADE ON THE EAST AFRICAN COAST.—Paris, Oct. 12.—It is semi-officially announced that the French cruiser Destaing has arrived at Zanzibar, in order to see that the slave trade on the East African coast is not carried on under the French flag. It is added: "Although information on the subject received in the first instance by Admiral Krantz contradicted the reports which had been current, the Minister of Marine decided to take all necessary measures to put a stop to any possible abuse. As slavery exists in Madagascar, the French Government cannot at present prevent it, but it will not permit the traffic to be fraudulently carried on under the French flag."

PRAYER AND FASTING.

In reply to your correspondent, Mr. G. E. Strickland, I venture to suggest that although fasting is not specially commanded in the law of Moses, there can be little doubt from Ps. xxxv. 13, and Ps. lxix. 10 that the command in Lev. xvi. 29, 31, xxiii. 27, 29, 32, and Num. xxix. 7, to "afflict your souls," was in reality a command to fast, especially as, according to Lev. xxiii. 34 and Num. xxix. 12, this affliction of soul was followed by feasting. This is also confirmed by Isa. lviii. 3, 5. The reason why we never fast as a religious rite, I suppose, is because neither Christ nor the Apostles have enjoined it; but there is nothing to prevent any disciple from fasting if he is so disposed, and fully persuaded in his own mind. With regard to the second question, Why does fasting add power to prayer? I cannot find that any such power is attributed to fasting in the Word of God, but true fasting being an afflicting or humbling of the soul before God, it seems clear that it prepares the soul for the exercise of true faith in God, and therefore assists in obtaining the blessing sought for in prayer. IMMERSION.

Dear Sir,—In answer to the letter of your correspondent, Rev. E. B. Moncrieff, on this subject, may I say that an ordinary reader of the New Testament cannot fail to observe, in the cases in which details are given with respect to baptism in the times of our Lord and his Apostles, that the baptisms took place in the river or water. For example, it is written that Jesus was baptized of John in (into R.V.) the Jordan...and straightway coming up out of the water"...(Mark i. 9, 10). Again, in Acts viii. 37, 38, we read, "They went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water."...Further, in John iii. 23 we are told that the Baptist baptized in Ænon, because there was much water (many waters) there"; clearly showing that "much water" was required for the baptizing which he practised.

If, however, there were no other evidence to show that immersion was the baptism of Scripture, the question would be settled by a reference to Rom. vi. 4, "Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism unto death," where the waters of baptism are regarded as the grave of the baptized. Thus Mrs. Pennefather, remarkng on this and other Scriptures in her valuable book entitled "Discipleship": "If, then, baptism is being buried with Jesus, going down into the water (literally drowning), and coming out into a new life, it signifies that the baptized person leaves in the grave all former things, and comes out altogether into a new position, and to the new associations connected with a new life," Our honoured brother, Rev. Marcus Rainsford, like a true Churchman, says* to the same effect: "We have baptism to teach us our union with Him by the Spirit—that we are immersed into Him, incorporated into Him, and our natural selves gone. The figure of baptism teaches us that we have gone down into death, and come up into life, and that we are identified with Him evermore."

As, however, your correspondent seems to desire to know what the learned say on this point, I will venture to quote the testimony of my friend Mr. M'Arthur, of Calvary Church, New York, which I have just noticed in an article in The Century of July, 1887:

"Lexicographers, such as Donnegan, Schleusner, Greenfield, Liddell and Scott, Robinson, Wahl, Wilke, and many more, distinctly and emphatically affirm that 'baptize,' which is properly a Greek word, means to dip, immerse, to plunge. Such religious teachers as Calvin, Luther, Melancthon, Archbishop Leighton, Wesley, Conybeare, and Dean Stanley say that immersion was the original mode. Such commentators as Chalmers, Zwingle, Ewald, De Wette, Meyer, Godet, Alford, Plumptre, Bishop Ellicott, and many more, say in substance the same thing. Such historians as Mosheim, Neander, Geikie, Pressensé, Edersheim, Farrar, Weiss, Hagenbach, and Döllinger, and such recent theologians as Luthardt, Van Oosterzee, Dorner, agree substantially with the learned Dr. Schaff when he says, "Immersion, and not sprinkling, was unquestionably the original form."

Yours very truly, Frank H. White.

10, Chepstow Villas, W.

Dear Sir,—I shall endeavour, as briefly as possible, to respond to Mr. E. B. Moncrieff's request for information in the spirit in which he writes.

He says baptizo has at least four principal meanings. This is scarcely in accordance with the universal testimony of scholars, or the current use of the word in the Greek language, either now or in the past. It is universally acknowledged that the one principal meaning of bapto is "to dip," and bapt-ism is simply dip-ism. The affixing of the terminal izo, English ize, as in real-ize, author-ize, has in no other case ever been supposed to alter the root significance of the word. It has in Greek, as Ogilvy points out in his dictionary, the same significance, denoting "to make, cause to be, or become," as has the Latin ate, as in formul-ate, consecr-ate, &c. A further proof that the root significance is the same in bapto, "to dip," and baptizo, "to immerse, or render dipped," lies in the fact that they both have the same noun in common, bapt-ism, a dipping, or immersion. But, if there were four baptisms, Christian baptism is one baptism. There is, according to the Apostle Paul, but one Lord, one faith, one baptism in the Christian Church. By the universal, or all but universal, acknowledgment of the most distinguished scholars and commentators this one baptism is described by Paul in Rom. vi. as immersion. This then is the meaning for Mr. Moncrieff to adopt. If he accepts it, he will find his other supposed meanings to harmonise perfectly with it, and in reality to be nothing more than such figurative use of the word as is common to all languages.

But, that I may satisfy him on points of learning, permit me to quote from the late Dean Stanley, in The Nineteenth Century magazine. He says: "For the first thirteen centuries the almost universal practice of baptism was that of which we read in the New Testament, and which is the very meaning of the word "baptize"—that those who were baptized were plunged, submerged, immersed into the water." Again, "The substitution of sprinkling for immersion must to many at the time, as to the Baptists now, have seemed the greatest and most dangerous innovation." But, confining ourselves to the New Testament, we find the word for dipping and immersion, baptisma, distinguished clearly from that for sprinkling, which is rhantismos, so that there is no dubiety here.

Yet we are not shut up to the study of the mere context of the New Testament, as if it contained the only Greek in the world. Greek is an ancient, but it is not a dead language; it is spoken and written by millions of living people at the present day, and, alike in ancient literature and modern speech throughout the centuries to this time, baptism, which is not strictly or peculiarly an ecclesiastical term, has meant, and at the present moment means properly immersion, and nothing but immersion. The entire Greek Church, which at present numbers about seventy millions of communicants, and whose custom it has always been to immerse, thus strongly expresses itself in its great standard, the "Pedalion," sent forth under the authority of the Patriarch and Holy Synod, on pp. 29—33: "The distinctive character of the institution of baptism then is immersion (baptisma), which cannot be omitted without destroying the mysterious meaning of the sacrament, and without contradicting at the same time the etymological signification of the word which serves to designate it. The Western (Roman) Church, therefore, has separated from the imitation of Jesus Christ; she has caused all the sublimity of the external sign to disappear, in short, she is guilty of an abuse of words and ideas in practising baptism by aspersion, the mere announcement of which is a laughable contradiction."

We may excuse the vehemence of the language, if we could suppose the case of Spaniards or Portuguese, who had the most imperfect knowledge of English, insisting upon attaching a significance to some word in our native tongue utterly diverse from its universal acceptation amongst us.

Now, Dean Stanley, whose learning will not be called in question, is perfectly frank about the matter; he simply pleads that it is a matter of convenience, and claims that the Church has a right to make the alteration. Professor J. Agar Beet suggests "modification" as the proper word. Others call it "corruption," in view of the words of Jesus, "In vain do ye worship Me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

Let me recapitulate:—

(1) There is but one Christian baptism in the New Testament—that is immersion.

(2) Sprinkling in the New Testament is always rhantism, never baptism.

(3) The frank acknowledgment of the best scholars even who practise sprinkling is that baptism is properly immersion.

(4) The whole Greek-speaking population of the globe testify that, in both secular and sacred use, baptism means immersion, and nothing else.

(5) The Greek Church has officially declared that Christian baptism is, and always has been, immersion, and nothing else, and ridicules the substitution of any other meaning.

ACTS xiii. 48.

Dear Sir,—It seems to me that the best way to determine the meaning of the word "ordained" is to examine it in the various places in which it is found in the New Testament. They are as follow:—Matt. xxviii. 16; Luke vii. 8; Acts xiii. 48, xv. 2, xxii. 10, xxviii. 23; 1 Cor. xvi. 15; and Rom. xiii. 1, which I mention last, as exactly the same part of the verb is there used. Kindly compare both versions. I think the study of these passages will serve to show that Calvinists in their interpretation of this text are not walking "in the light of their own fire," as Dr. Adam Clarke considers. J. Collier.

As your correspondent, Mr. A. W. Elliot, no doubt continues his "daily reading of the Word," he will soon arrive at Rom. viii. 29, which passage will throw some light on the above, and from which he will see that "being ordained to eternal life," or predestination, is based upon the foreknowledge of God, not the reverse, as is often erroneously supposed. It is, therefore, evident that God foreknew who would believe in Christ, after listening to Paul's preaching of the Gospel, and who, therefore, were saved by grace through faith (Eph. ii. 8), salvation being the gift of God to those who believe, and who were, therefore, ordained to eternal life. The Apostle Peter confirms the same view in 1 Pet. i. 2: "Elect, according to the foreknowledge of God the Father."

A Bible Student.

I fully receive the truth of God's predestination according to his foreknowledge; yet, if I understand rightly, that is not the truth which is referred to in this passage. Paul and Barnabas had been declaring at Antioch to the "children of the stock of Abraham, and those amongst you that fear God," the word of salvation. A week afterwards, when the Jews saw the multitudes who gathered to hear this message, they gave way to jealousy, and contradicted and blasphemed. They thrust it from them. By so doing, they judged themselves unworthy of the eternal life promised to the fathers, and fulfilled in raising up Jesus. On the other hand, the Gentiles heard the word of salvation, and were glad. They thankfully accepted it as true and precious, and were willing not only to listen, but to continue in the grace of God.

They glorified the word of God. "Word" is specific in all such passages, and means the message of salvation through the Lord Jesus. "They believed, as many as had become disposed for eternal life." We are not reading here of the action of God, but of the action of men, believers and unbelievers. The Jews acted in one way, the Gentiles in another. A message was brought from the King of kings. Will you attend to it? The former would not, if they were to be treated as not having a right to it, but must come in on the ground of mercy like the multitude of uncircumcised Gentiles. The latter gladly listened, believed, and received the blessing. There is a similar expression to "were ordained" in 1 Cor. xvi. 15. The house of Stephanas addicted, set themselves, to minister to the saints. They were not ordained to it. Exterior action does not come into view, though doubtless God is in all good; but this household was so disposed, and they so acted.

Sunday Afternoon, October 28.

The Woman of Samaria.—John iv. 1—26.

The Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans, but Jesus had. He spoke well of one of them (Luke x. 30—37), healed another of leprosy (Luke xvii. 16), and rebuked two of his disciples for wishing to destroy some of their number with fire (Luke ix. 55, 56). Our lesson relates to a conversation which He had with a woman of Samaria. Note here—

(1) The Lord's Method.—Observe that: (a) He went to the woman.—To her country (ver. 4), to her city (ver. 5), to her (ver. 7). To reach some men we must go to them (Matt. xxii. 9). (b) He went a long way.—Judea to Samaria, 40 miles (1 Peter ii. 21). "If," said Chas. Peace to the chaplain of Clerkenwell Prison, "a minister really believed in his work, it would pay him not merely to go on a Sabbath day's journey, but to go there on his hands and knees on broken bottles." (c) He worked while others rested.—The sixth hour (ver. 6), our noon. The hottest part of the day. Many would be under shelter; Jesus was at work. Some would have said it was not the right time (2 Tim. iv. 2). (d) He worked while He rested (ver. 6).—While He rested He sought to give rest. Usefulness may be combined with recreation. (e) He dealt with the woman when she was alone.—Comp. "disciples gone away," ver. 8. See also Mark vii. 23. (f) He used common things to prepare the way for spiritual things.—Comp. vv. 7, 14. Dr. McLeod got at the heart of an infidel shoemaker by talking first about leather. (g) He went to the point without delay (ver. 10).—So with Nicodemus (iii. 3). (h) He dealt with the woman's conscience (vv. 16—18).—A sense of sin precedes the desire for salvation (comp. Acts ii. 36, 37). (i) He knocked away her props.—She rested upon religion, but she was taught how vain her religion was (vv. 21—23). Comp. Rom. x. 3. (j) He revealed Himself to the woman (ver. 26).—This is the sinner's great need, a personal Saviour (comp. Gal. i. 16).

(2) The Woman's Condition.—Observe that (a) She was not without knowledge.—She knew something of Jewish history (ver. 12), of sectarian differences (ver. 9), and of the Messiah (ver. 25). All knowledge is not saving knowledge. Comp. "We know" (John iii. 2), and "knowest not" (ver. 10). (b) She was without a knowledge of Jesus.—"If thou knewest." The gift here is a Person—the Person. "He would have given thee." Comp. Isa. ix. 6 and John iii. 16. With some such ignorance is wilful (2 Pet. iii. 5). It may not have been so with this woman. Note that she was ignorant of Jesus, though He was so near to her (Isa. lvi. 1). Her ignorance was manifest in her refusal to give Jesus the drink of water. Had she known Him as He may be known, she would have been willing to have given anything she had (2 Cor. viii. 5). Her ignorance of Jesus involved ignorance respecting the Father (ver. 22). Comp. Luke x. 22. (c) She was living in sin.—Had as a husband one who was not her husband. The Samaritans had the Pentateuch, and in this was the law against adultery. Here is sin against light (John v. 45). The woman was under the curse of the law (Gal. iii. 10). (d) She was probably longing for deliverance (ver. 10).—Had she known Jesus, she would have asked for the "living water" (Ps. cxix. 25). Her condition was one of misery. She had had five husbands, therefore death had probably invaded her home upon five occasions, and now she had fallen into deep depths of sin. To have asked Jesus for the "living water" would have been an evidence of humility and of earnestness. This evidence she probably gave. By Jacob's well she saw Jacob's star (Numb. xxiv. 17), and ascended Jacob's ladder (John i. 51).

(3) The Living Water.—Observe concerning this that it is: (a) The gift of God (ver. 10). Comp. "no money" (Isa. lv. 1). (b) Jesus Himself.—Note the personal pronoun in ver. 10. (c) Easily reached.—The woman went far ("all the way hither," ver. 15, R.V.) to get the water at the well, but she had not far to go to get eternal life. (d) "Living water." "That is," says Westcott, "perennial, springing from an unfailing source (Gen. xxvi. 19), ever flowing fresh (Lev. xiv. 5)." Representing Christ, it may be said to have in it the property of life of the highest kind (John v. 26). (e) Satisfying.—"Never thirst" (ver. 14). (f) A stream that never runs dry.—The water in the wilderness a faint type of this. Other rivers may fail, but this "runs on for ever" (Ps. xvi. 11). (g) A blessing that must be received to be enjoyed.—"Whosoever drinketh." That sweet "whosoever" was echoed from the throne of glory (Rev. xxii. 17).

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, October 28.

THE FALL OF JERICHO.

Josh. vi. 1—16; Golden Text, Heb. xi. 30.

Jericho, "the City of Palms," stood on the western border of "a vast grove of majestic palms, nearly three miles broad, and eight miles long.... It was the key of Western Palestine, as standing at the entrance of the two main passes into the central mountains."—Stanley. It was famous for its walls and gates, rich temple, and wealth of gold, silver, iron, and brass.

Intervening History.—(1) By a general circumcision the covenant is renewed (ver. 1—9). Thus Israel was careful to be right with God before attempting the conquest of their enemies and his. (2) The Passover is kept (ver. 10) on 14th Nisan, just forty years after the first passover, and four days after the passage of Jordan. They began their new life of conquest by the careful observance of God's ordinance. (3) The Manna ceased (vv. 11, 12).—It was needed no longer.

The Captain's Orders.—Anyone reading chaps. v. and vi. together can see that vi. 1 is a parenthesis, and that chap. v. 13—vi. 5 should be taken as one whole; chap. vi. 2—5 being the message given to Joshua by the Captain of the Lord's Host when they met face to face, as described in v. 13—15. It is very probable that Joshua was alone reconnoitring the city, trying to discover some method of attack. He would see the impossibility of storming the walls, and so a long and painful siege with a view to reduction by famine would seem to be the only course left. But this plan was very perilous: it gave the rest of the inhabitants such opportunity to combine to harrass and attack the besiegers. Joshua knew the city would be taken somehow, because of God's promise; but how he knew not. In his perplexity he prays, let us suppose, and that prayer is heard by the appearance of the true Captain of Israel, who gives Joshua his marching orders. We believe this Captain was no other than the Second Person of the Trinity, whom we know as Jesus, the Son of God. After this Joshua could not doubt; neither could he forget that he was only a servant at best, the Unseen Lord being the true Leader.

How Jericho Fell.—In the strangest manner possible. Picture the procession: (1) A long train of armed men. (2) Seven priests blowing large horns perpetually. These, whether actual rams' horns or metal instruments that went by that name, were specially connected with the worship of God; they were not the silver trumpets used in war. They were the trumpets of jubilee, and their sounding forth is the symbol of the preaching of the Gospel. (3) The ark of the covenant borne by priests. This was the visible sign of the Invisible Captain, whose presence alone could give victory. (4) The rear-guard following after the ark. With the exception of the seven priests who blew the horns, all these marched in perfect silence. Once every day this strange procession marched out from the camp at Gilgal and round the circuit of Jericho. Did the enemy scoff? Probably not; they were stricken with fear. They had seen God's power in the passage of Jordan, so they would gaze on this strange march, and specially on the ark with deadly fear. The seventh day must have been, fully occupied with the sevenfold march; so it was near evening time, probably, when the signal was given, the mighty shout of triumph burst forth, and the great walls suddenly fell, all but the part on which Rahab's house stood.

Application.—The story of Pentecost (Acts ii.) corresponds wonderfully to this passage, as antitype to type. Bible-class teachers will find this a fruitful study.

Again, both 2 Cor. x. 3—5 and Eph. vi. 12 should be examined in the light of this story, to which they evidently refer.

What Jerichos have we to conquer?—(1) Ourselves. Evil habits of thought, speech, and act; and, worse still, inward tendencies to evil are as far beyond our power as Jericho was beyond Israel's. But true Christians must fight these. Our marching orders are, "War to the death, in the name of the Lord." Further, just as the Lord said, "See, I have given into thy hands Jericho," &c. (ver. 3), so we know that Jesus, our Captain, calls us to overcome every form of evil, and intends that we shall overcome. Again, such victory is his gift: "I have given into thy hands Jericho," &c.; and, therefore, we may well hope for what is otherwise hopeless, seeing the power is entirely God's.

(2) The world without us, which is wickedness and unbelief.—All has to be overcome for Christ. Mighty and impregnable to us as Jericho was to Israel, it is God's world that has been given to his people, and will yet be conquered by them in his name.

A GREAT ILLUSTRATION OF FAITH.

Children are often greatly puzzled by the word "faith." Show them how fully it is explained by this story. Faith is just taking God at his word, and acting accordingly.

(1) A great promise is believed.—It was enough that the Lord had said that Jericho was given to them.

(2) They trusted themselves utterly to their Invisible, but Present Captain.—His promise that He would be with them, and the presence of the Ark, the symbol of their indwelling Lord, were relied upon. So to us faith is a quiet trust in One whose help and presence is promised, but not seen.

(3) They did their part in simple obedience.—They did not say: "The Lord has given us Jericho, so we need not do anything." They were the more eager to do their duty because of their faith in God. This is what Paul calls "the obedience of faith." It must have tried their faith greatly, this walking round Jericho, exposing them to the seeming danger of sudden disaster in case of a sortie for the city. But true faith simply obeys at all hazards.

(4) Faith fights in God's way, and with his weapons.—The marching, the trumpets, and the shouting, these were their weapons of war. How weak and foolish they were to human sight! How mighty through God. So, to-day, the bold obedience of faith that marches to attack evil, of faith that preaches God's Word, and of faith that shouts for a victory believed in but not seen is always mighty. "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God," &c. The great weapon is the Gospel.

(5) Faith endures.—Thirteen times the city was encircled before any result was seen. The seven days and the sevenfold march on the seventh day suggest the completeness of their work and their patient continuance in the appointed way.

(6) Faith triumphs in prospect.—They shouted, for the Lord had given them the city, and that shout of glad anticipation levelled the walls. The trumpet-blowing needed the shout to complete it. So the faith that does great things is that which (1) attempts; (2) proclaims God's truth boldly; and (3) expects great results from its doing and preaching.

FULTON STREET PRAYER-MEETING.—The attendance on the thirty-first anniversary of the Fulton-street, New York, prayer-meeting, filled the chapel. Six or eight gentlemen made addresses, and the hour was one of special interest and wholesome spiritual enjoyment.

MR. MOODY'S SCHOOLS at Northfield and Mount Hermon, Mass., illustrate the marvellous energy of the man. The trustees lately met and made additional plans for the enlargement of the work. The Boys' School at Mount Hermon has 318 students, and over 300 had to be refused. About the same number are in the Girls' School, and over 400 were turned away. There are about sixty teachers in these schools. Mr. Moody has enlisted quite a number of influential men in these schools. Mr. Moody is about to begin eight months of evangelistic labour on the Pacific coast.

THE MISERIES OF EAST LONDON.—At the noon-day prayer-meeting on Monday, at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, Mr. George Hamilton, of Mile-end, gave a brief account of a new effort in East London. One of the poor women recently murdered was on the streets at the time because she had not fourpence with which to pay her sleeping accommodation. To meet such cases of need, he has thrown open his hall, No. 59, Mile End-road, every night at eleven o'clock, and it has been crammed. The people who have made use of the premises have not all been of the dissolute class; indeed, the assemblage has been very varied, and included some persons who were sorely in need of help.

"It is a nicely got-up volume, of good, Scriptural, and plain teaching as to spiritual life, its impartation, its enemies, and its friends, by Mr. Whittle, an American evangelist, well known in this country. The book was designed originally for those led to Christ by the Author's ministry, and is refreshing, stimulating, and replete with anecdote."—Irish Baptist Magazine.

"It is a thoroughly characteristic book, by a man who is evidently on fire with holy enthusiasm."
The Christian Leader.

"Just the book to put into the hands of young converts. The title aptly expresses the contents, which are both spiritual and instructive."—Railway Signal.

Or, The Pleasure and Profit of Bible Study. Being an Introduction to the Study of the Holy Scriptures.

By DR. G. F. PENTECOST, M.A.

With Introduction by Rev. Joseph Cook,
and Rev. J. H. Vincent, D.D.

Presentation Edition: Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"No one can read this almost unique volume without being stimulated to a more diligent study of The Book. It is not, strictly speaking, evidential; yet the key to valuable Scripture evidence is to be found within. It is not exegetical; but the careful reader will be taught thereby a sound method of exposition. It is not homiletical; although the seed corn for dozens of addresses are contained in its brief compass. Buy it, we can say to all; read it with your Bible open and a common-place book to hand, ready to catch up and store away the many precious things so lavishly scattered throughout its pages."—Night and Day.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. Dr. Cassel, missionary of the London Jews' Society at Berlin, reports that he baptized during September two Jews, one Jewess, and one child, on the profession of faith in Christ, the true Messiah.

In connection with the departure of the large party of C.M.S. missionaries for various parts of the foreign mission field, meetings to bid them "God speed" have been held in several provincial towns, as well as in Dublin. Much interest has been aroused in foreign mission work.

Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence preached his last sermons as incumbent of St. Luke's, Liverpool, last Sunday, and will commence his new duties as vicar of St. Michael's, Blackheath, on Sunday next. He will, says The English Churchman, be a decided gain in the evangelical interest to the London diocese.

On Sunday week the Bishop of Wakefield delivered an address to working men in St. Andrew's Church, Wakefield. It was the first of a series of Sunday afternoon services which have been specially arranged for working men by Rev. A. G. Whaley, the vicar of the parish, in which the working class element very largely predominates.

The annual meeting of the Church Missionary Society Lay Workers' Union for London was held on Monday week at the Mission-house in Salisbury-square. Addresses were delivered by Mr. H. R. Arbuthnot (chairman), Mr. Eugene Stock, General Hutchinson, and Rev. R. J. Kennedy, one of the members of the Union, who has just been ordained, and who is proceeding to the Punjaub. The Union now numbers 300 members, many of whom are actively engaged in helping forward the missionary cause.

CONGREGATIONAL.

During a seven days' special mission, just conducted by Rev. Robert Balgarnie in Harley-street Chapel (W. Evans Hurndall's), Bow, E., more than 400 persons came forward and professed decision for Christ.

Rev. Lyndon Parkyn, who is one of the most prominent Nonconformist ministers in Swansea, has resigned the pastorate of St. Paul's Congregational Church, having accepted an appointment at an Episcopalian church at Chiswick.

During the past year 80 members have been received at Clifton Church, Peckham, making a total of 681 during the eleven years' pastorate of Rev. H. J. Perkins. The present membership is 502. During the coming winter the church is to be thrown open to strangers on the fourth Sunday evening of each month, the seatholders worshipping in the school-room.

The subject of "Church Guilds, or Christian Endeavour Societies," was brought before a meeting at Sion School, Attercliffe, on the 3rd, by Rev. J. Lewis Pearse, who said the guilds would unite the societies of the Church and concentrate their strength, thus giving zest and encouragement to all the workers. The formation of a general guild for both sexes was afterwards decided upon.

Since the advent of Rev. J. Ossian Davies at Richmond-hill, Bournemouth, the church has been thronged with worshippers, the regular attendants having to be present some time ere the services commence, to secure their seats. Already there is talk of an enlargement of the building being essential. There are no pew rents, and the offertory collections for the past month have averaged about £35 each Sunday.

PRESBYTERIAN.

At the invitation of Dr. Dykes's old congregation, Rev. Dr. Black, of Inverness, will conduct a week of special services in Regent-square Church, beginning on November 4.

One of the best working Presbyterian congregations in England is that of Aldershot. It has four mission stations, conducted by seventeen workers from the parent church, whose labours are regulated by a quarterly plan, after the manner of a Wesleyan circuit.

The ten-days' mission at Newcastle and Gateshead closed on Wednesday, last week. The meetings were many and varied, and large audiences were attracted. The mission was conducted with considerable spirit, and the promoters have good reason to thank God for the result.

Haverstock-hill Church was the scene of an unusually interesting gathering on the evening of Sunday week, when Rev. Duncan Sillars delivered, by request, the annual sermon to railway men, hundreds of whom are employed at the Camden goods depôt. There was a large congregation of the men and their friends, and the preacher addressed them on "Some Secrets of a Happy Home," founded on the text, "To-day I must abide at thy house."

Sir C. E. Lewis, Bart., M.P., on Saturday afternoon laid the memorial stone of St. George's Presbyterian Church, Willesden-lane, Brondesbury. At a public meeting held Sir Charles Lewis referred to the great success of local Presbyterianism, and to the great value of the Presbyterian Church in England as an evangelising power. In these loose days a creed of theology which recognised and defined the leading doctrines of Christianity was, he said, of paramount value.

BAPTIST.

Towards the erection of a new Baptist Chapel at Tring, Lord Rothschild, of Tring-park, has given a donation of £100.

The year's work at Parson's-hill, Woolwich, includes the reception of 130 members, with fewer erasures than usual. The chapel has become much too small for the congregation. A mission chapel has therefore been erected.

Rev. Walter J. Mathams, in preaching his farewell sermon at Falkirk, previous to leaving there for Birmingham, recalled the fact that when he first came to preach in that town he had some difficulty in discovering the place of worship and preached to about eighteen persons.

During the past two years the membership of the church at Whitchurch, Salop, has nearly doubled. The Sunday-school premises have been enlarged at a cost of £250, and nearly the entire sum has been raised during the year. The pastor, Rev. H. Reid, has just completed his second year of settlement.

METHODIST.

At the request of the family, Rev. Thomas McCullagh, a well-known ex-president of the Wesleyan Conference, has undertaken to write a suitable memoir of the late Sir William McArthur.

In connection with the Wesleyan Church at Jaffna, Ceylon, a gracious revival has been in progress. Many nominal Christians have been converted, and a powerful influence is being brought to bear upon the non-Christian community.

A three weeks' mission has been conducted at Coventry by Mr. W. Thorpe, of Nottingham. As a result of the services nearly seventy have decided to live for Christ, and new vigour has been thrown into the spiritual life of the church.

Rev. S. Atkinson has set on foot a movement in South Wales similar to The Joyful News Mission. Mr. R. Cory, of Cardiff, has promised a subscription of £100 per annum for three years in aid of the scheme, and an appeal is being made for further assistance.

The Princess Alice Orphanage, Birmingham, in connection with Dr. Bowman Stephenson's work, has received a cheque for 3000 guineas from the foundresses of the Nichell's Charities, to be devoted to the erection and partial endowment of a Home for orphan girls.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Dr. Wilson, of the China Inland Mission, has been lecturing on China in Friends' schools and meetings in the West of England.

In Madagascar, Friends supervise the religious gatherings of 72,000 persons, in 139 churches, besides educational and medical work.

Through the Gospel labours of Friends in Indiana, 20,000 persons have professed conversion, and 8000 have joined Friends' Church during the last seven years.

In our first note on October 5, we should have said, "the recently re-opened meetings in Cumberland," instead of "he recently re-opened," &c. Edinburgh is an old and long-established meeting.

The Manuscript Essay on War, by the late Jonathan Dymond, has been presented to the central library of the yearly meeting by the heir of the essayist. 20,000 copies are likely to be printed as a first edition for general circulation by Lancashire and Cheshire quarterly meeting.

Owing to the operation of French Conscription Law, and the consequent depletion of young men and families, J. B. Braithwaite and Fielden Thorp are going over as a deputation from the permanent committee of the yearly meeting to advise and help Friends in France, as seems needful.

The ministers of New England yearly meeting have had a Conference in Lynn, Mass , for (1) The cultivation of fraternal feelings and sympathy; (2) The advantage of united prayer; (3) Increased knowledge, better methods, and proper tests of work; and (4) to carry back blessing to these meetings.

SALVATION ARMY.

Operations are about to commence in Bechuanaland, also in Finland and Japan.

In Scotland, stations have been opened at Helensburgh, Loanhead, Buckie, and Huntly.

Latest statistics from Australia show that the Army now has 589 stations, including five Rescue Homes.

Five Jews of different nations narrated at a meeting last week how they had found in Jesus their Messiah.

At Kilmarnock, on the sixth anniversary, three brothers, whose aggregate years of drunkenness were one hundred and eleven, testified.

The Army operations in Pietermaritzburg, Natal, South Africa, are being wonderfully blessed. Hundreds have professed conversion, eighty among them being military.

A prize fighter, well known in the Midland counties, who said he had never been in a chapel in his life, came the other day to the penitent form completely broken down.

At the inauguration of a new hall at Neuchâtel recently, the mob behaved in a very riotous manner. The building, one capable of holding a thousand people, was the first erected by the Army in Switzerland, and precautions were taken to render the proceedings inoffensive to the people. At the close of the meeting, however, a gang of roughs attacked the building, and severely assaulted the friends of the Army. Gendarmes appeared, and, having protected the Salvationists, cleared the street. Major Clibborn was expelled, and conducted to the frontier by a gendarme.

South Africa is asking for thirty more officers, and volunteers are wanted for the opening up of China; at present, however, the Indian work seems to be the chief attraction—more than 300 having recently volunteered for that Empire.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Rev. Mr. Stewart Gartley, Perthshire, is conducting evangelistic meetings this week in Keppochhill Free Church.

A Y.W.C.A. has been formed at Galston through the labours of Miss McMillan, of Glasgow. The hall of the U. P. Church has been placed at their service by the managers.

The Gospel tent services at Galston were brought to a close by a crowded meeting in the Templars' Hall. Rev. Mr. Crosthwaite, E. U. Church, addressed the young Christians. Mr. Donelly, the evangelist, adverted to the hopeful results of his labours at Galston.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A successful Church mission has been held at Durrus, in West Cork, by Revs. Messrs. Archdall and Thorpe. The people attended in large numbers, and it is believed much good has been done.

Rev. Joseph Potter, of Londonderry, has closed a most interesting series of mission services in the Episcopal Church at Bray. The attendance was very large and the power of God was manifest.

Dr. Van Someren Taylor, Church Missionary Society medical missionary in China, is at present in Dublin, and has been giving very interesting addresses in various suburban parishes, in connection with his "Ten Years' Medical Mission Work in Fuh-Kien."

A noteworthy instance of Christian union has occurred at Arklow. Rev. Jas. Kirkwood, Conference evangelist, assisted by Rev. J. J. Hoffe (Episcopalian), has conducted Gospel meetings in the Methodist Church in that town. It is believed many found the Saviour.

A Methodist town mission is about to be recommenced in Belfast, and already two lay evangelists and a colporteur have been employed for the purpose, and these are to be assisted by bands of voluntary workers. For this kind of work there is a fine field in Belfast.

At the invitation of Rev. Wallace McMullen an interesting social meeting has been held in the large hall of Wesley College, Dublin, with the object of promoting Christian intercourse and sympathy between the members of the various Methodist congregations in Dublin.

A series of special mission services in St. James's Church, Bray, co. Dublin, opened by the Archbishop of Dublin, and carried on by Rev. Joseph Potter, incumbent of Christ Church, Londonderry, has been brought to a close with very encouraging marks of a deep and widespread interest.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. C. F. Vernon, of Stratford, E., late pastor of Parnell-road Baptist Church, Victoria-park, London.—Rev. J. M. Macpherson, minister of the Free Church, Killean, Kintyre. In the great revival of 1859-60, Mr. Macpherson worked with so much zeal as to break down his constitution.—Rev. William Craig, Methodist minister of Cookstown, Ireland; he was an earnest godly man, and had twice been president of the Irish Wesleyan Conference.—At Belfast, in his 71st year, Mr. William Hogg, for many years an elder in the Presbyterian Church, Belfast.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

PARIS EXHIBITION.—Two Evangelistic Halls will be opened near the Exhibition of 1889. Mr. McAll is at the head of the enterprise, but he will be helped by English and French societies and pastors.—Le Signal.

ZAMBESI.—Mr. Westbeech, the English merchant who has shown so much kindness to missionaries, and in whose arms young Dr. Dardier, of the French Foreign Mission died, has himself succumbed in the Transvaal.

BALE.—The Foreign Missionary Society here has received and expended in the past year one million francs. The Society is to be congratulated that the outlay has not exceeded the receipts; debt being no more permitted to Christian Societies than to individuals.—Le Réveil.

THE INDIAN CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT was expunged from the Statute-book on Sept. 5. When introducing the final measures for its repeal, Sir Charles Aitchison was able to promise that the cantonment question would be dealt with in a Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to cantonments, which as it stands is but the Contagious Diseases Act in another form. It is proposed by the new Bill to abolish the compulsory examination of women, the system of registration, and the granting of licences.

Epileptic Home, Polegate, Sussex.—Mrs. C. E. Dodson, one of the lady patronesses of this Institution, appeals for help in providing needful fuel and other comforts during the winter for the afflicted inmates of this Home.

Dock Labourers' Mission (32, Chamber-street, London Docks, E.).—The unemployed labourers round the dock-gates are much in need of help. Will your readers supply us with the needful means at once to assist these poor sufferers with free meals?—C. H. Coleman.

Forthcoming Meetings.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1883.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received [illegible]ds will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

THE ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS, Earlswood, Redhill, Surrey.—For the Care and Education of the Idiot and Imbecile.—The AUTUMNAL ELECTION of this Charity will occur on Thursday, the 25th instant, at the Cannon-street Hotel, E.C., for the purpose of choosing thirty-five applicants, for the ordinary period of five years, from a list of 146 approved candidates, without prejudice to scrutiny.

The Board would willingly advance on the number of admissions, but can only do so in proportion as they are encouraged by increased contributions.

The poll will commence at 12 and close at 2 o'clock precisely.

HOMES of HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE, GRAY'S-INN ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case if it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

The Committee are in very urgent need of £250.

FATHERLESS.—The Board of Managers of the ASYLUM for FATHERLESS CHILDREN, Reedham, Purley, Surrey, earnestly APPEAL for HELP to maintain and educate the 300 Children now under their care. These children have been admitted to the Asylum at ages varying from six months to eleven years, and will all be retained and cared for until 15 years of age.

The Institution is entirely Unsectarian, has no endowment, and is, therefore, dependent upon public benevolence for support.

The necessary expenditure averages £8,000 per annum, but the only reliable income—that from Annual Subscriptions—does not provide one-third of that amount, hence the necessity for this Appeal. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS will be most thankfully received. HENRY SPICER, Treasurer.

PREVENTIVE AND RESCUE WORK,

WILL BE HELD (D.V.) IN THE

COUNCIL CHAMBER, EXETER HALL,

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7.

MRS. F. A. BEVAN has kindly consented to Preside.

Several Papers will be read, of which notice will be given IN NEXT WEEK'S "CHRISTIAN."

Afternoon Sitting at 2.30. Tea will be provided at 5. Evening Sitting at 6 o'clock.
To close about 8.30.

The recent atrocities at the East End have brought painfully to light the fearfully degraded condition into which vice leads; and if by any means young women can be prevented from sinking so low in the social scale, such an end is indeed worthy of the prayerful Christian consideration and labour especially of their own sex.

PRINCIPAL MACVICAR,

Presbyterian College, Montreal.

IF he who makes two blades of grass to grow where only one grew before is counted worthy of the grateful acknowledgment of his fellows, much more must we esteem and render sincere thanks to one who has been instrumental in moulding the religious thought and influencing the morals of a people. Such an one is the subject of this brief sketch—Rev. DONALD H. MACVICAR, D.D., LL.D., Principal of the Presbyterian College, Montreal, and Professor of Systematic and Pastoral Theology and Homiletics. Like so many more of our great colonial worthies, he was born in the old country, being a native of Dunglass, near Campbeltown, situated in the peninsula of Cantire, near the beautiful Firth of Clyde.

A few years after his birth in November, 1831, his parents removed to Canada, and settled near Chatham, in Kent, Ontario. His education was conducted by a private tutor until he entered the Toronto Academy, from which he passed to the University, and then to the Theological Hall of Knox College in the fall of 1855. During the second and third years of his course he taught classics and English in his brother's academy, Gould-street, Toronto. In the summer of 1858 he engaged in mission work at Collingwood, county of Simcoe. In the following year he was licensed to preach the Gospel by the Presbytery of Toronto, after which he conducted mission work for some time in the west end of Toronto, receiving most valuable assistance in Sabbath-school work from the Hon. John McMurrich.

He declined an appointment of the Foreign Mission Committee to labour in British Columbia, but accepted a call to Knox Church, Guelph, refusing calls presented to him from Collingwood, Erin, Brantford, and Toronto. His first pastorate was brief, only lasting one year, yet eminently successful in increasing the number and stimulating the zeal of the people. Towards the close of 1860 he was invited to become the minister of Coté-street Free Church, Montreal, as successor to Dr. Donald Fraser, now of Marylebone Presbyterian Church of England, London. Accepting this call, he was duly inducted January 30, 1861. Here he continued for nearly eight years. Under his ministry the membership almost doubled, and several mission stations were established that now form independent charges. Special attention was given to the systematic instruction of the young, and his Bible-class was not only the largest in the country, but a source of great blessing to the church—being the "missing link" that retained the senior scholars of the Sabbath-school, and passed them into the membership of the church as active and earnest workers. It was not, however, until the year 1868 that his great life work was given him in the shape of an appointment by the Assembly as Professor of Divinity in the Presbyterian College, Montreal. It is characteristic of the courage and faith of the man that he should have accepted such an office, as at the time it was made there were no students, no money, no building. It was a college only in the charter. But the call was from the Master, and was accepted in faith, and in like spirit the work was begun and continued. For four years he was the only professor, and a room in the basement of Erskine Church—traditionally known to the present generation of students as "the cellar"—was their only building. Now the stately and commodious pile of buildings that adorn the mountain slope adjoining McGill University on the west side would do credit to any church. The library contains some of the rarest and most valuable theological works on the American continent. Its dining hall, lecture rooms, dormitories for seventy students, besides the principal's residence and convocation hall (the gift of Mr. David Morrice), make up one of the best appointed and most desirable of modern college residences. The staff now consists of four professors and four lecturers, besides a classical and mathematical tutor resident in the buildings. One hundred and thirty students have passed from its halls into the ranks of the ministry.

(From Photograph by Messrs. W. Notman & Son, Montreal.)

There is a unique feature of this college, due to the keen foresight and Christian prudence of its principal. It is triglot in character, lectures being given in Gaelic and French as well as in English, furnishing preachers for the large districts in Canada peopled almost exclusively by Scotch Celts, many of whom understand no English, and missionaries for the propagation of the Gospel amongst the million and a quarter of French-speaking Roman Catholics of the Dominion. To Dr. Macvicar is due very much of the eminent success achieved by the French evangelisation scheme of the Canadian Presbyterian Church. He it was who, by overture to the Presbytery of Montreal and to the Assembly, originated the work of training French and English-speaking missionaries and ministers, and organised the existing aggressive evangelical work which has not only conserved the true faith in many a district against the encroachments of Rome, but every year brings many of its devotees, priests as well as people, out of its darkness into the marvellous light of God—a work than which none is more noble or necessary in the province of Quebec, of whose provincial Parliament it has been said that its action forms the measure of Britain's apostasy to Rome.

His services to the cause of education have been repeatedly acknowledged in public, and his educational works are well known, being used in the schools of both the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. In 1876 he lectured to the Ladies' Educational Association of Montreal on Logic, and in 1878 on Ethics. During the session of 1871 he was lecturer on Logic in McGill University. The University of Toronto conferred upon him the degree of LL.D. in 1870, and in 1881 he was chosen Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, an office for which his business tact and courtesy eminently qualified him.

By successive Assemblies Dr. Macvicar has been appointed a delegate of the Canadian Church to the meetings of the General Alliance of Presbyterian Churches holding the Reformed Faith, more familiarly known as the Pan-Presbyterian Council, in each of which he has taken a leading part. Those who had the privilege of attending the immense meeting held in Exeter Hall on Thursday evening, July 5 last, will not readily forget his wise and earnest words on the subject of the relation of rich and poor. He has had repeated calls away from his present post. One of these was from the South Church, Brooklyn, U.S.A., at a salary thrice his college stipend, but he declined it. In 1860 he married Eleanor Goulding, of York, Ontario. His eldest son has nearly completed his theological course, and is about to go to China as a missionary.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.

Pastor A. Haegert, director of this Mission, writes to us:—

"You will be pleased to hear that seventeen men and women were baptized in August at Bethel, and more were to follow in September. At our nine dispensaries patients from 111 villages were attended. Among others, four persons were successfully attended for snake bite. Two thousand New Testaments and Gospels were disposed of at two heathen feasts.

"This year we have completed four new churches. Although they are built in the Orient, they are neither of marble nor of alabaster. The walls are of clay and the roofs thatched; but Jehovah is worshipped in them, and his praises ascend to the heavens."

A meeting, to take leave of six new missionaries who were accompanying Mr. Haegert on his return to India, was held at Clifton on the 16th inst. The names of the new workers are: Messrs. G. W. Panes, Rowatt, Hurn, Mr. and Mrs. Hinder, and Miss Pilditch. The Hon. Secretary of the Mission is Miss M. C. Gurney, Granville Lodge, Granville-road, Eastbourne.

PRAYER AND FASTING.

By Rev. ANDREW MURRAY.

The faith that can overcome such stubborn resistance as was seen in the evil spirit, Jesus tells the disciples, is not possible except to men living in very close fellowship with God, and in very special separation from the world—in prayer and fasting. Faith needs a life of prayer in which to grow and keep strong; prayer needs fasting for its full and perfect development. Prayer is the one hand with which we grasp the invisible; fasting, the other, with which we let loose and cast away the visible.

In nothing is man more closely connected with the world of sense than in his need of food and his enjoyment of it. It was the fruit, good for food, with which man was tempted and fell in Paradise. It was with bread to be made of stones that Jesus, when an hungered, was tempted in the wilderness, and in fasting that he triumphed. The body has been redeemed to be a temple of the Holy Spirit; it is in body as well as spirit—it is very specially, Scripture says, in eating and drinking we are to glorify God.

It is to be feared that there are many Christians to whom this eating to the glory of God has not yet become a spiritual reality. And the first thought suggested by Jesus' words in regard to fasting and prayer is, that it is only in a life of moderation and temperance and self-denial that there will be the heart or the strength to pray much. Fasting helps to express, to deepen, and to confirm the resolution that we are ready to sacrifice anything, to sacrifice ourselves, to attain what we seek for—the kingdom of God. And He who accepted the fasting and sacrifice of the Son, knows to value, and accept, and reward with spiritual power, the soul that is thus ready to give up all for Christ and his kingdom.

While ordinary Christians imagine that all that is not positively forbidden and sinful is lawful to them, and seek to retain as much as possible of this world, with its property, its literature, its enjoyments, the truly consecrated soul is as the soldier who carries only what he needs for the warfare. Laying aside every weight, as well as the easily besetting sin, afraid of entangling himself with the affairs of this life, he seeks to lead a Nazarite life, as one specially set apart for the Lord and for His service. Without such voluntary separation, even from what is lawful, no one will attain power in prayer. This kind goeth not out, but by fasting and prayer.

Points for Preachers.

A CLEAN MOUTH.

A distinguished author says, "I resolved when I was a child never to use a word which I could not pronounce before my mother." He kept his resolution, and became a pure-minded, noble, honoured gentleman. His rule and example are worthy of imitation.

DEPTH AND STEDFASTNESS.

Little boats always totter about on the surface of the water, going all ways, as it happens, and overturning in a breath, while the great ship sinks deeply and more deeply in and goes steadily on. The cause of its steadiness is its depth. So abiding in the great truths of God gives steadfastness of motion to the soul. Under all the pressure of error and unbelief and false doctrines it is unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

LOST IN SIGHT OF HOME.

During one of the severe storms in Colorado a young man perished in sight of home. In his bewilderment he passed and repassed his own cottage, to lie down and die almost in range with "the light in the window" which his young wife had placed there to guide him home. All alone she watched the long night through, listening in vain for the footsteps that would come no more; for, long before the morning dawned, the icy touch of death had for ever stilled that warm, loving heart. The sad death was made still sadder by the fact that he was lost in sight of home. How many wanderers from the Father's house are lost in sight of home, in the full glare of the Gospel light! They have the open Bible overflowing with its calls and promises, the faithful warnings from the sacred desk, the manifestations of God's providence, all tending to direct their steps heavenward, and yet from all these they turn away, waiting for the more convenient season, and they are lost at last in sight of the many mansions.

A SECONDHAND LIFE.

In Norwich I went into a shop to buy a dress. When I had selected one and was paying the young person who had served me for it, I said, "Now, you'll be sure and send me this dress?" "Oh, yes, ma'am," "You'll send it me now, at once, to-day?" "Certainly, ma'am." "You won't take it and wear it out first, and then send it to me when it is worn out, will you?" The young woman seemed quite hurt and offended. "Why, you surely don't know our house, ma'am; this is one of the first houses in Norwich; of course we should not dream of such disgraceful conduct! I never heard of such a thing!" "My dear young friend," said I, "are you not serving the Lord Jesus Christ so? Are you not wearing out your precious life, which He bought and paid for with his own priceless, precious blood, in the service of the world and self, and sin and Satan? Have you given Him what is his own by right of purchase? You are not your own; you are bought with a price! Have you given yourself, body, soul, and spirit to God?" The young woman burst into tears, and said, "Oh, ma'am, no one ever spoke to me about my soul since my mother died."—Mrs. Dening.

PRAYER.

Prayer is not always petition. There is much more than this in prayer. Sometimes it is just waiting before Him that He may speak to us. Sometimes it is just to allow the mind with an open heart to drift on the current of the Spirit. How often when in silence and alone with God the words of truth come floating through our hearts with rest, instruction, and refreshment for our souls! Just to be with God in order to know Him better, submit to Him, and lean upon Him, is help. But the child of God who knows prayer knows the gladness of confidence in which nothing is kept back either in confession or petition; of talking everything out with him, and knowing that He heareth us. "Lord, teach us how to pray."—Dr. Pentecost.

THE BOOK OF ESTHER.*

IF any have not yet discovered all the things which they think are wanting, in ESTHER, to stamp this book with the impress of Divinity, that is a proof rather of their ignorance, than of the deficiency, much less the apocryphacy, of the book itself....In this very book, calumniated by some and little read by others, the Gospel of Christ is, if not in words yet by events and facts, not only foreshadowed and foreshown, but made to stand out in bold relief; and the way of salvation is emblazoned, as it were, on these handposts in the road to heaven, in characters so vivid that "he that runs may read." And the Lord Jesus Christ—his person and work, his glory and grace—so far from not being alluded to—is, in a figure, made its sum and substance, its end and aim, its alpha and omega, its all in all...

In fact, the whole scheme of redemption, the whole economy of mercy, from the earliest revelation of God's will to his fallen creature, man, down to the final destruction not only of the wicked but the wicked one; and going on to that final consummation, of all others the most devoutly to be wished—the everlasting happiness of all the people of God in the beatific vision of Christ and his Spirit, and in the bosom of God, are all, figuratively indeed, but yet most strikingly displayed; extorting from the heretofore unobserving (if candid) reader, the confession, "Surely the Lord is in this book, and I knew it not."

PHILLIPOPOLIS.—In a recent letter to Mrs. Mahan, of Eastbourne, Mrs. Mumford tells about her Girls' School at Phillipopolis. She had resolved only to take for the next year such pupils as could pay. It was, however, impressed on her in prayer that the Lord would have her take the same course as before, and trust to Him for the means. So she decided to entertain the applications from those who could not pay. Her faith was rewarded by afterwards receiving several pupils whose parents can pay, and whose influence will help the school.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.—An interesting meeting was recently held in the hall at Tilbury, when an address was delivered by Mr. G. L. Dashwood, one of the most energetic members of the committee. Rev. H. Bloomer, the clerical superintendent and secretary of the Mission, stated that their day-school at Tilbury is now recognised by the Government, and they would receive the Education Department's grant. The attendance is increasing, there being now 120 scholars. The other departments of this branch of the Mission are also in a flourishing state.

A Week at Collier's Rents.

[CONCLUDED FROM OUR LAST.]

THE Mission aims at something more than temporary help by means of an occasional meal. Its object is to permanently benefit those who are found deserving of help, by means of regular employment. During the breakfast and afterwards, a few friends were moving about sympathetically and inquiringly among the people. The revelations were sad and melancholy enough. It goes without saying that men and women alike were, as a rule, wretchedly clad and apparently in great distress. Some of them were not only friendless, but without a character. The workhouse and the casual ward were evidently regarded with no favourable feelings. Not a few of those who were gathered together had lived in happier circumstances. Their misfortunes were due to various causes. Some had "gone the pace," and were now reaping the harvest. Others were intelligent, respectable mechanics out of employment, unable to get anything to do. Others again had failed in business, and had gradually drifted into absolute penury. An ironmonger from Birmingham had suffered extreme privation for more than a month. A short time before, he and his wife had started to walk to London, but the partner of his sorrows was taken ill on the road, and died soon afterwards in a workhouse infirmary. Work was provided for the man on the following day. A lad, about sixteen, sharp and intelligent, had been living in the streets and sleeping in the parks for six weeks, getting very little to eat. The poor boy had lost his father, and his mother, on marrying a second time, had gone to America, leaving him destitute. A lady was found ready to lend him a helping hand.

A young man who described himself as an invoice clerk and collector, whose character was gone "through a mistake made in an unguarded moment," was hoping to get away by working himself out in a vessel about to leave the docks.

A solicitor's clerk, decently clad, but looking exhausted, was "out of collar," and had run through a course of drink and dissipation.

A draper, formerly in business in South London, who had failed, lost wife and child, been sold up by landlord and other creditors, and had not slept in a bed for nearly a month, was anxiously expecting to be helped on to Manchester, where a better prospect of work awaited him than in London.

A man of shabby clerical aspect, under middle age, Micawber-like in manner, but somewhat reserved, was quite destitute, having lost everything by "going wrong." He did not care to explain matters. While admitting that in his case the climax of wretchedness had been reached, he was still "hoping for the best."

A young fellow of 17 or 18, subject to fits, who was found in the city in a deplorable condition, had been in London a week without shelter, and existing on the barest scraps of food. He had walked up from Reading, where he had been doing nothing for three months previously, and in consequence had been turned out of his lodging. He had been employed in a well-known firm in Reading as a packer, receiving a pound a week, but he left of his own accord, feeling, as he said, unequal to the work and unable to continue in it.

A young man, twenty-six years of age, found in the Strand just before daybreak looking very exhausted, had made a rapid descent, and had become homeless and destitute after a course of folly, recklessness, and dissipation, for which he expressed deep regret, and appeared to be sincerely repentant. He had graduated at Oxford; been trained for the medical profession, which for some reason he had not followed, subsequently he was employed as a chemist's assistant, and might have done well, but temptation again overtook him, and he was led into further dissipation. The poor fellow had parted with everything that could possibly be spared from his stock of clothing, and had spent his all. It was a repetition of the old story of the prodigal son. Steps were at once taken for communicating with his friends, and in a few days a loving father and a penitent son met in London, the former rejoicing over the recovery of one whom he had mourned as lost; the latter, chastened by bitter experience and severe discipline, resolved in God's strength never again to yield to the temptations which had wrought out so much wretchedness. If this had been the only result of the night's search for homeless wanderers, it would have well repaid those who were engaged in it.

A gas engineer had parted with all he possessed in better times in consequence of non-employment and illness, and was now destitute, and a similar case was that of a butler formerly in service at the West-end.

These are only a few illustrative cases taken from the experience of a single night. It requires but little imagination to picture the results of an entire year, and to understand the deep interest attending some of the midnight wanderings in quest of those who somehow have lost their way in the journey of life.

Meetings of a social and religious character are held in the Hall every day in the week. On Sunday, in addition to the free breakfast, school services, conducted in the morning and afternoon, afford interest and instruction to the young of both sexes, who are very regular in their attendance. There is also a religious service in the evening, after open-air services in the neighbourhood, mostly in the courts and alleys, where people unconcerned about spiritual subjects, and indifferent to their own moral welfare, are drawn from their dwelling-places and invited to the Hall.

An attractive feature of the indoor services is the singing, led by a choir of girls and a pianoforte and organ accompaniment. The addresses are of a very simple and practical character, dealing largely with the every-day life of the people, and the adaptability of the Gospel to their common needs. On Monday evening, Bible-classes for men and women are held, at which the Scriptures are read and expounded. On the same evening there is a girls' sewing-class, a very useful one of its kind, as well as a penny bank for the encouragement of thrift and the reception of small savings. On Tuesday evening there is a mothers' meeting, in connection with which a depôt has been provided for blankets and maternal bags, the former being lent to the poor during the winter, and the latter to poor women during confinement. Bands of Hope, junior and senior, meet on Wednesday evening, when there is also a boys' recreation class. Choir practice takes place on Thursday evening at a well-attended singing class, after which a prayer-meeting is held. On the same evening, and also on the following evening, recreation classes are provided for girls.

In connection with the mothers' meeting and Bands of Hope there are quarterly tea-meetings and social gatherings. On Saturday evening there is a free popular entertainment, consisting of vocal and instrumental music supplied by some of the best church choirs in London, and by other friends interested in the Mission. By means of these entertainments the people are not only drawn from music-halls of a debasing character, but a taste for good music is cultivated, which, in due course, exerts a brightening influence in the homes.

So the work progresses from Sunday morning till Saturday night. Not a day passes without some blessed ministries being brought to bear upon the people, and the results achieved abundantly prove that this Mission is a power for good in the neighbourhood.

Help will be gladly welcomed by Rev. Andrew Mearns, at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.; and parcels of old or new clothing will be devoted to useful service if sent to Mrs. Mearns, 277, Coldharbour-lane, Brixton, S.E.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

THE WORD OF GOD.

Heb. i. 1.

GOD! What word could more fittingly stand at the head of the first line of the first paragraph in this noble epistle? Each structure must rest on Him as foundation; each tree must spring from Him as root; each design and enterprise must originate in Him as source. "In the beginning God" is a worthy motto to inscribe at the commencement of every treatise, be it the ponderous octavo or the ephemeral tract. And with that name we commence our feeble attempt to gather up some of the glowing lessons which were first addressed to the persecuted and wavering Hebrews in the primitive age, but have ever been most highly prized by believing Gentiles throughout the universal Church. The feast was originally spread for the children of the race of Abraham, but who shall challenge our right to the crumbs? In our attempt to gather them be Thou, O God, Alpha and Omega, first and last.

But in the original Greek the word "God" is preceded by two other words, which describe the variety and multitudinousness of his revelation to man. And the whole verse is full of interest as detailing the origin and authority of the Word of God, and as illustrating the great law which appears in so many parts of the works of God, and has been fitly called the law of VARIETY IN UNITY.

(1) That law operates in Nature—the earliest book of God. No thoughtful man can look around him without being arrested by the infinite variety that accosts him on every side. "All flesh is not the same flesh...there are celestial bodies and bodies terrestrial, but the glory of the celestial is one and the glory of the terrestrial is another...One star differeth from another star in glory." You cannot match two faces in a crowd, two leaves in a forest, or two flowers in the woodlands of spring. It would seem as if the moulds in which natural products are being shaped are broken up and cast aside as soon as one result has been attained. And it is this which affords such an infinite field for investigation and enjoyment, forbidding all fear of monotony or weariness of soul.

And yet, amid all natural variety, there is a marvellous unity. Every part of the universe interlocks by subtle and delicate links with every other part. You cannot disturb the balance anywhere without sending a shock of disturbance through the whole system. Just as in some majestic Gothic minster the same idea repeats itself in bolder or slighter forms, so do the same great thoughts recur in tree and flower, in molecule and planet, in diatom and man. And all this because, if you penetrate to Nature's heart, you meet God. "Of Him, and through Him, and to Him are all things." "There are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all." The unity that pervades Nature's temple is the result of its having originated from one mind, and having been effected by one hand—the mind and hand of God.

(2) That law also operates throughout the Scriptures. There is as great variety there as in Nature. They were written in different ages; some in the days of "the fathers," others at "the end of these days" for us. In the opening chapters, beneath the guidance of the Spirit of God, Moses has embodied fragments of hallowed tradition, which passed from lip to lip in the tents of the patriarchs, and its later chapters were written when the holy city, Jerusalem, had already been smitten to the ground by the mailed hand of Titus.

They were written in different countries. These in the deserts of Arabia, those under the shadow of the pyramids, and those amid the tides of life that swept through the greatest cities of Greece and Rome. You can detect in some the simple pastoral life of Palestine, in others the magnificence of Nebuchadnezzar's empire. In one there is the murmur of the blue Ægean, and in several the clank of the fetter in the Roman prison-cell.

They were written by men belonging to various ranks, occupations, and methods of thought. Shepherds and fishermen, warriors and kings; the psalmist, the prophet, and the priest; some employing the stately religious Hebrew, others the Chaldaic patois, others the polished Greek; every variety of style, from the friendly letter, or sententious proverb, to the national history, or the carefully prepared treatise, in which thought and expression glow as in the fires—but all contributing their quota to the symmetry and beauty of the whole.

And yet, throughout the Bible, there is an unmistakeable unity. What else could have led mankind to look upon these sixty-six tractlets as being so unmistakably related to each other, that they must be bound up together under a common cover? There has been something so unique in these books, that they have always stood and fallen together. To disintegrate one, has been to loose them all. Belief in one has led to belief in all. Their hands are linked and locked so tightly that where one goes all must follow. And though wise and clever men have tried their best, they have never been able to produce a single treatise, containing that undefinable quality, which gives these their mysterious oneness, and to lack which is fatal to the claims of any other book to be included with them, or to demand the special veneration and homage of mankind.

(3) The world is full of religious books. But the man, who has fed his religious life upon the Bible, will tell in a moment the difference between them all, and the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament. The eye can instantly detect the absence of life in the artificial flower; the tongue can immediately and certainly detect the absence or presence of a certain flavour submitted to the taste; and the heart of man, his moral sense, is quick to detect the absence in all other religious books of a certain flavour which pervades the Bible, from Genesis, the book of beginnings, to the Apocalyptic announcements of the quick coming of the King.

And in the possession of this mysterious attribute, the Old and New Testaments are one. You cannot say there is more of it in the glowing paragraphs of the Apostle Paul, than there is in the splendid prophecies and appeals of the great evangelic prophet, Isaiah. It is certainly there in the Gospels, but it is not less in the story of the Exodus. Throughout there is silence on topics which merely gratify curiosity, but on which other professed revelations have been copiously full. Throughout there is no attempt to give instruction on science or nature, but to bend all energy in discussing the claims of God on men. Throughout the crimson cord of sacrifice is clearly manifest, threading the books as beads upon a thread. And throughout there is ever the subtle, mysterious, ineffable quality called Inspiration—a term, which is explained by the majestic words of this opening verse, "God having spoken of old, hath at the end of these days spoken to us." Scripture is the speech of God to man. It is this which gives it its unity. "The Lord, the mighty God hath spoken, and called the earth." The amanuensis may differ, but the inspiring mind is the same. The instrument may vary, but in every case the same theme is being played by the same master-hand. We should read the Bible as those who listen to the very speech of God. Well may it be called "the Word of God."

(4) But the Scripture is God's speech in man.—The heavenly treasure is in vessels of earth. "He spake in the prophets...He has spoken unto us in his Son." It is very remarkable to study the life of Jesus, and to listen to his constant statements as to the source of his marvellous words. So utterly had He emptied Himself, that He originated nothing from Himself; but lived by the Father, in the same way as we are to live by Him. He distinctly declared that the words He spake, He spake not of Himself, but that words and works alike were the outcome of the Father, who dwelt within. Through those lips of clay the Eternal God was speaking. Well might He also be called "the Word of God."

And here the words of the prophets in the Old Testament are levelled up to the plain of the words of Jesus in the New. Without staying to make the least distinction, our writer tells us, beneath the teaching of the Spirit, that He who spake in the one spake also in the others. Let us then think with equal reverence of the Old Testament as of the New. It was our Saviour's Bible. It was the food which Jesus loved, and lived upon. He was content to starve from all food else, if only He might have this. It was his one supreme appeal in conflict with the devil, and in the clinching of his arguments and exhortations with men. And here we discover the reason. The voice of God spake in the prophets, whose very name likens them to the up-rush of the Geyser from its hidden source.

(5) As God spake in men, it is clear that He left them to express His thoughts in the language, and after the method, most familiar to them.—They will speak of Nature just as they have been accustomed to find her. They will use the mode of speech, whether poem or prose, which is most habitual to their cast of thought. They will make allusions to the events transpiring around them, so as to be easily understood by their fellows. But, whilst thus left to express God's thoughts in their own way, yet most certainly the Divine Spirit must have carefully superintended their utterances, so that their words should accurately convey his messages to men.

In many parts of the Bible there is absolute dictation, word for word. In others, there is Divine superintendence, guarding from error, and guiding in the selection and arrangement of materials: as when Daniel quotes from historic records, and Moses embodies the sacred stories, which his mother had taught him beside the flowing Nile. In all, there is the full inspiration of the Spirit of God, by whom all Scripture has been given. "Holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit... Searching what, or what manner of time, the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify" (2 Tim. iii. 16; 2 Pet. i. 2; 1 Pet. i. 11).

We need not deny that other men have been illuminated, but the difference between illumination and inspiration is as far as the east is from the west. Nor do we say that God has not spoken in other men, or in these men at other times, but we do say that only in the Bible has God given the supreme revelation of his will, and the authoritative rule of our faith and practice. The heart of man bears witness to this. We know that there is a tone in these words, which is heard in no other voice. The upper chords of this instrument give it a timbre which none other can rival.

(6) The earlier revelation in the Old Testament was given in fragments.—This is the meaning of the word rendered in the Old Version sundry times, and in the New divers portions. It refers, not to the successive ages over which it was spread, but to the numerous portions into which it was broken up. No one prophet could speak out all the truth. Each was entrusted with one or two syllables in the mighty sentences of God's speech. At the best the view caught of God, and given to men through the prophets, though true, was partial and limited.

But in Jesus there is nothing of this piecemeal revelation. In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. He hath revealed the Father. Whosoever hath seen Him hath seen God; and to hear his words is to get the full-orbed revelation of the Infinite.

(7) The earlier revelation was in many forms.—The earthquake, the fire, the tempest, and the still small voice—each had its ministry. Symbol and parable, vision and metaphor, type and historic foreshadowing—all in turn served the Divine end. Like the ray which is broken into many prismatic hues. But in Jesus, there is the steady shining of the pure ray of his glory, one uniform and invariable method of revelation.

Oh, matchless and glorious Book, the Word of God to men—to us: revealing not only God, but ourselves; explaining moods for which we had no cypher; touching us as no other book can, and in moments when all voices beside wax faint and still; telling facts which we had not been able to discover, but which we instantly recognise as truth; the bread of the soul; the key of life; disclosing more depths as we climb higher in Christian experience: we have tested thee too long to doubt that thou art what Jesus said thou wast, one of the most indispensable and precious gifts of God.

AMONG CORNISH SEAMEN.

The Cornish branch of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society makes considerable progress in establishing agencies for good along the Western Coast. At the second annual meeting, held recently at Fowey, strong testimony was borne to the importance of the work, of which Mr. W. Lightfoot has charge.

Temporal comfort is in many ways dispensed to the fishermen and others frequenting the ports of the county, and thus the Gospel is practically commended. Much blessing has resulted from the medical help which the missionary has rendered under trying circumstances and when most welcome. A fishing lugger has just been purchased, to reinforce the Mission "properties," which consist of boat, yawl, and steam launch, visiting all the ports along the coast, with the exception of Falmouth and Penzance, which are worked by another organisation.

The Mission has several interesting adjuncts, and a freehold building has recently been purchased at Fowey for transformation into a Sailors' Rest. The work is distinctly evangelical and unsectarian. Mr. W. J. Graham, solicitor, Fowey, is the hon. secretary.

THE LAND OF LUTHER.—2.

There are many ways in which we can help the cause of Christ in Germany. One is by earnest, persistent prayer. Another is by practical help towards evangelistic efforts in the country. It is for one of these that I would seek to enlist sympathy. The name of Pastor Rohrbach is known to many through these pages. His work may be in some measure familiar to them also. It is carried on in Moabit, a large and very populous suburb of Berlin, and in Charlottenburg, a town two miles distant, which has risen, and is rapidly rising, in importance through the recent residence of the late Emperor Frederick and the projected residence of the young Emperor Wilhelm in the Charlottenberg Schloss.

Moabit has nearly half a million inhabitants, consisting for the most part of the lower classes. The spiritual needs of these thousands are met, or supposed to be met, by two places of worship —one church and one chapel. The people are, for the most part, either encased in pharisaic pride, most difficult to pierce, or recklessly unbelieving. The first class, alas! brought up to regard baptism, confirmation, and communion as the cardinal points—indeed as the only essentials of Christianity—consider any further effort on behalf of their souls as absolutely superfluous, often as a form of madness calling for actively expressed antipathy.

"Now we shall have another madman in the house" was the remark angrily uttered the other day about a man who seemed to be yielding to the influence of the Gospel preached in the Charlottenburg mission tent. The first madman had been a young fellow whom his wife described as a "lion" before his conversion, a "lamb" after! Thank God, many such transformations take place in Moabit and Charlottenberg.

The proportion of openly avowed unbelievers is of course larger in Germany than in England, and, as a result, the proportion of suicides is also greater. There are 400 cases annually in Berlin alone, and every year the number increases. Many of these, sad to say, are child suicides, and large numbers very young men and women. They seem to breathe from their cradle a sceptical and materialistic atmosphere, and this develops only too early into a reckless disregard of anything but the present, a scornful unbelief in any future life, that on the slightest occasion induces suicide. Oh, the pitiful trifles that ruin these souls capable of unspeakable possibilities! "Why not," they argue, "I am unhappy now; then, I shall sleep, and it will all be over. Better, surely, so?" A child with an unfavourable school report, a young shop woman suspected of a theft of which she might not be able to clear herself, a young man failing of the absolute attainment of his college ambition, are cases which occurred just recently, and are only typical.

One very hopeful feature of the Moabit and Charlottenburg work is their large and flourishing Sunday-schools. These hundreds of children, who come Sunday after Sunday, and listen with such intelligent earnestness to the "Old, Old Story" will surely be preserved from ever falling victims to the blank despair of the utter unbeliever. The weekly children's services, too, are well attended, and it is very cheering at the fortnightly children's prayer-meeting to hear one after another of the little ones, who have learnt to love Jesus, pour out their childish petitions to Him.

Amongst the adults, the work of God steadily progresses. Gospel services, Bible-readings, mothers' meetings, special classes for young men and women are carried on in Moabit and Charlottenburg, and earnest little churches have sprung up in both places. It is for the Charlottenburg Gospel work, and the Church there that I would specially enlist practical and prayerful sympathy. For many summers past evangelistic services have been carried on here in a Gospel tent. This is a comparatively new thing in Germany. It is also new that ladies should take any part in the work, and the consequences of so novel a method of proceeding are sometimes most unpleasant. One Sunday evening, a few weeks ago, a young German lady, belonging to a refined and sheltered home, was standing outside in the pouring rain, inviting people into the tent, and was assailed by a torrent of such indescribably vile abuse as could not be repeated here. This is simply indicative of the spirit that is prevalent, one—too often — of intense antagonism; in many cases, too, simply one of uncomprehending astonishment: "I do not want to change my religion," said a man who was being urged to give his heart to Christ. "My old one has done very well all my life, and is quite good enough for me!" But on such apparently unpromising soil the good seed is taking root, and the Lord's blessing on the efforts in Charlottenburg is a cause for deep thankfulness.

In the winter, of course, the tent must be taken down, and those who attend its services must migrate elsewhere. The work in Moabit has a permanent home, a hall, and mission premises to itself, built on freehold ground. We want this for Charlottenburg. Last winter the work was carried on under extreme disadvantages in the only place that could be hired in the whole town, a music-hall and dancing-saloon. But this will not do any longer. To have theatrical performances and dances treading on the heels of religious services, sometimes before these are properly over, to have the latter liable at any moment to postponement by a godless landlord, if a more lucrative engagement offers itself, hinders work sadly. Besides this, Germans will not come to Gospel services held in such a place, and the attendance suffered greatly on this account last winter. Last, but not least, a church, if it is to consolidate and develop as it ought, requires a home, not a dancing-hall decorated with the world's insignia and owned by one of her servants, and hired once or twice in the week!

Who will do what they can to house a homeless church, to encourage German brothers and sisters to "stand up for Jesus" where there are but few to witness for Him, and to make further effective evangelistic effort possible in Charlottenburg? £1000 would cover the expense of the erection of a hall in every way suited to its purpose.

The work in Moabit, too, is very seriously needing help, and needing it immediately. The Lord lay upon the hearts of his people this portion of the land of Luther. I should be glad to receive help, addressed to me at Harley House, Bow, London, E.

(Miss) Edyth E. Fooks.

MORAVIAN MISSION IN ALASKA.

Three years ago the Moravians sent missionaries to commence work amongst the Esquimaux at Bethel, on the southern shore of Alaska. They have patiently toiled on since, though with little visible result of their labours. At last the Spirit of God has begun to move in the hearts of the people. The history of Greenland is being repeated on the Kushokwim river, and Bethel has already become "a house of God and the gate of heaven." Like an echo of "Kayarnak's" cry 150 years ago—"How was that? tell me that once more, for I would fain be saved too"—there comes the cry of Alaskan inquirers, on hearing of the shedding of the Saviour's blood for sin: "'Kuyànak' (thank you); we, too, desire to have our badness taken away by that blood."

As an instance of their eagerness to hear the Gospel, Rev. J. Kilbuck tells of natives coming long distances to listen, and to offer to collect logs and build places of worship in their several villages.

Leaves from my Note-Book.

By Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.,

Author of "From Death into Life: An Autobiography."

XXX.—"THAT'S A BARGAIN."

Travelling home one day after some weary work, I sought and found an empty carriage, that I might be alone. After a stage or two of the journey, as the train was stopping, I got out to walk a little. A friend caught sight of me, and asked if I would come into his carriage.

"No," I said, "I want to be quiet and rest."

"But," he continued, "there is some work for you here; I have been told you can 'never rest without working.' Come here. We have a gentleman with us who says he is not saved, and that he does not wish to be."

By this time I was in the carriage. My friend said, pointing to the gentleman, "There he is, in the corner." Taking a seat by his side, I said to him, "It is not well to be unsaved in a train journey, especially in such a train as this; for presently we shall be going at a terrific pace down hill, and should anything go amiss, there would not be a chance for any of us!"

"Oh, you will not frighten me like that," said the gentleman; "I know this train too well. It has been going up and down here for years without accident."

"That may be a reason," I replied, "why there might be one to-day."

"No such thing; I don't believe it, sir."

"That may be; but, any way, it is a good thing to be saved, notwithstanding we may get to the end of our journey safely."

However, our efforts only seemed to irritate the gentleman in the corner; so I turned from him, and began to talk with my friend.

When first I knew him, several years before this, he used to be a very fashionable and worldly man. I asked him to tell me how he had become so changed. He complied readily enough, and then his wife told me how she was brought to God.

After this, my friend went on to tell me of the conversion of his father, who was a well-known man in the city, and had been Mayor no less than three times.

The gentleman in the corner happened to know something of this far-famed Mayor, and became interested in our talk; so much so that he asked questions about the Mayor's conversion.

Now that he was come into the circle of our conversation, my friend said to him, "That clergyman," pointing to me, "was converted in his own pulpit, while he was preaching, under his own sermon. What do you think of that?"

"Why," said the gentleman, turning towards me with surprise, "you never mean to say that you are the man!"

"Yes, I am, thank God," I replied.

"And did you write that book?"

Guessing what book he referred to, I replied, "Yes, I did."

"Why, that is strange. Did you really write that book, 'From Death into Life'? And are you the man?"

I nodded assent.

He said again, "Well, I am surprised; I was reading about you last week, and the book had such an effect upon me that my dear wife said she would take it away. However, I would not part with it; I have it here, in my bag."

"Do go on," I said, "and tell me more of your story."

He continued, "I went on reading the book, and became very miserable; I could not sleep at night, or rest by day. My wife was in great trouble about me, and so was I about myself. Whether I read the book or not, it made little difference, I was still miserable.

"Two nights ago, I tossed about in my bed sighing and groaning in great anxiety; then I suppose I fell asleep. I dreamed that the Lord said to me, 'If you will give Me your heart, I will pardon your sins.' I struck my hands together instantly, and said, 'That's a bargain, I will give my heart.' I woke out of my sleep so full of joy, I was surprised at myself. I shook my wife to wake her up, and said, 'My dear, God has pardoned my sins.'

"'Be quiet,' she said, 'and go to sleep; you are going out of your mind. Oh, what shall I do!'

"'If this is going out of my mind,' I replied, 'I wish with all my heart that you would go out of your mind too.' She began to cry, and said, 'Oh, how I wish it was day.'

"When daylight came, she sent off immediately for the doctor. He came to see me before I was up. 'Yes, yes,' he said, feeling my pulse, 'you must keep very quiet; stay in bed, and I will send you something.'

"'What for?' I inquired. 'I am neither sick nor sorry; I am happy.'

"'Yes, yes,' he said, 'exactly so. You go on rejoicing; but keep very quiet. There is a little perturbation of the brain. There's a good man, just do as I tell you.'

"As soon as he was gone, I rose up and came to breakfast as usual. My dear wife was very much upset, and said, 'I cannot bear to look at you; you look so different. Oh, dear, dear, what shall I do?' and she went off again into a flood of tears.

"The doctor came after this and had a long talk with me. I told him about the book, and the dream too. He said, 'Yes, yes; are you fond of pictures?'

"I replied, 'Yes, I am; very.'

"'Well, I advise you,' said the doctor, 'to go to London for a week and see the Exhibition. Go to-day.' No, I could not do that. 'Then go to-morrow, without fail.' And here I am on my way there."

Just then the train stopped, and my friend and his wife had to get out to take another train to their destination. I was then left alone with the unknown dreamer.

He looked at me, and said, "Is it not strange that I should fall in with you, the very man I have been reading and thinking about so much for days? I did not know but what you had been dead for years."

"Never mind me," I said, "let us go back to your dream. You tell me that you struck hands, and said you would give your heart to God. Have you done that?"

"I did in my dream, you know."

"Do you mean this?" I asked. "Will you keep to the bargain now you are awake?"

"Oh, yes," he said; "I do not want to go back from that."

"Then you may be sure that God will not go back. He is ready to pardon your sins; let us kneel down and ask Him here in this carriage. Why not? we are alone. The Lord Jesus," I continued, "shed his blood to obtain your pardon; and He loves to give it to every sinner who comes to Him."

We prayed together, and then I put the question to him, "Do you believe that God will keep his word? If you promised to do me a favour, you would expect me to thank you. Now let us thank God for his promise."

Before we reached the next stopping-place we were both rejoicing in the Lord. The gentleman was full of joy and wonder too. He was altogether out of his old mind and into a new one.

As we were approaching London, I asked him whether had any friends there.

"No," he replied, "I do not know who is in town at this time of year. I have written to a young man who may be in London; but he is one who can do me no good."

"Perhaps you will do him good," I suggested. "Tell him your wonderful story."

"Oh, he would make fine game of me!"

"Never mind that," I said; "make up your mind to speak to him."

When the train arrived at Euston, he said, "There is my friend," pointing to a young man who came up to the carriage door. The stranger had a blue ribbon on his coat, and told us that he had something better under it, in his heart. I left these two friends rejoicing together.

PROGRESS IN JAPAN.

In the town of Fugioka, there lives a man sixty-four years of age, named Machida Totaro. He has long been afflicted with a weakness in his eyes. He went from place to place, and to various doctors and priests, for some remedy, but his efforts were of no avail, and he became almost totally blind. Then he heard that there was a skilful foreign physician living in Tokyo by the name of Whitney, and he went to him for relief. After careful treatment for a while, his sight was partially restored, and he was greatly rejoiced and thankful for the services that had been rendered. He was very ready to hear the Gospel; and, after some instruction from the doctor and others, he made confession of his faith in Christ.

On the Island of Yesso is a large portion of country that was formerly uninhabited. It having been proposed to occupy the land by means of colonisation, a Daimio at Nagoya sent about twenty men each year to a spot called Yakumomura. In this way the village has grown to consist of about one hundred houses. The people in general were much attached to their old ways, and have little thought or desire to make any special change either in their temporal or spiritual condition. But one of their number favoured Christianity, and invited Rev. Mr. Nakasu, of Sapporo, to come and teach them. The invitation was accepted; and so great was the encouragement that a second series of meetings was held. In December last, four men were baptized. Fifteen more have applied for baptism, and have been taken on trial.

The pastor of the church at Shidzuoka has been visiting the prison and holding services for the benefit of the inmates. The result has been a most marked change in the minds and conduct of many of the prisoners. Several have united with the church upon their release from confinement. A Christian has been employed for some time as a teacher of morals in the Kobe prison. He reports the conversion of some of the most hardened criminals. These men have been released and are now living honest and industrious lives. The Governor of Nagasaki has applied to the missionaries in that city to conduct services in the prison for the benefit of the inmates. It seems to be more and more understood by all, and especially the officials, that Christianity is one of the best and most important factors in the reformation of the criminal class.

On a recent trip to Nagasaki I became acquainted with a Japanese who is at the head of a cotton factory at Osaka, which employs about one thousand persons. He said that he was not a Christian, but he believed that Christianity was good, and thought he would like to have some person sent to the factory to conduct services for the benefit of the employés. He was confident that the adoption of the religion of the Bible would make all the people happier and better.

One of the large temples at Sendai has been purchased, and is now used as a Christian church. There was one Christian teacher in the Medical School at Kumamoto, and, as the result of his efforts, thirty of the students have been converted.

The membership of the Kaigan Church, in Yokohama, has become so large that the services have been divided. The communicants alone are sufficient to fill the church completely. Now the pupils from the schools come in the afternoon, and the morning service is intended for all others. In the city of Mishima a former brewery has been changed into a Christian church and a school for girls. The press has been made into a pulpit, and the tubs into seats. The proprietor is an earnest Christian, and rejoices in a new-found love and experience. What a blessed change!

Yokohama, Japan. H. Loomis.

The Religious Press in France.

On Wednesday, Oct. 17, an interesting meeting took place, in the Salon of the Depôt Central, 4, Place du Théâtre Français, Paris. It was convened on the occasion of the visit to the French capital of Messrs. J. B. Braithwaite and John Taylor, of the Society of Friends, founders and proprietors of the two illustrated periodicals, L'Ami de la Maison and Le Rayon de Soleil. They were accompanied by Mr. R. C. Morgan, whose counsel was much appreciated in connection with the management of the French magazines.

Few invitations had been issued, owing to the limited capacity of the premises, which were more than crowded before the meeting began. Pastors, evangelists, city missionaries, and Christian workers of all kinds, had made it a duty to come, and thus pay their tribute of gratitude and respect to the honoured brethren who have so generously carried on the work of evangelising France by means of the Press.

Miss de Broen, Rev. R. W. McAll, Pastors Appia, Fourneau, G. Meyer, Théodore Monod, Matthieu Lelièvre, Wm. W. Newell; Messrs. Lockie, Soltau, Vignal, Paul Passy, &c., were present. The absence of Pastor Armand Delille, who was not in Paris, was much regretted.

Mr. J. B. Braithwaite opened the meeting with a few verses from Phil. ii., and said how his heart was cheered by the sight of such a large company of Christian workers. He expressed his strong sympathies for France, which, he believed, has a great influence for good or for evil on the whole Continent of Europe. He saw great promise for the future in the fact of so many efforts being put forth at this time, both by the French churches themselves, and by the missionary agencies, such as those conducted by Miss de Broen, Rev. R. W. McAll, &c.

He informed the meeting that the Ami de la Maison and the Rayon de Soleil were about to part with their editor, Miss S. P. Blundell, who for more than fifteen years has published them, month after month, with untiring zeal and great freshness. He wished to express his own and his co-proprietors' gratitude to her, and to commend to the prayers of the Christians present her successor, Pastor R. Saillens.

Mr. John Taylor, in a few words, told the story of the magazines. They were an outcome of the visit of a deputation of the Friends to Paris, where they brought relief to the famished population immediately after the siege. An illustrated sheet was published, which was, in fact, a translation of The British Workman. It was so well received, and so much valued by many that it was decided to start a monthly journal for wide circulation, without controversy or polemics, a simple and bright messenger of God's love to the homes of the French people. A sum of £3000 had been received by Mr. Taylor from Christian friends in the course of a few weeks. That sum had long ago been spent, and a good deal besides, but millions of copies have, during all these years, been issued, and have been scattered all over France. Mr. Taylor joined in expressions of thankfulness for Miss Blundell's past activity, and of good wishes for the new editor.

Mr. Saillens followed with a few words, in which he earnestly requested the prayers of his friends. With so much already on his hands, he said, it was next to a rash thing on his part to undertake this great work. But he trusted the Lord had put it in his hands. He wished to follow in Miss Blundell's footsteps, to lift up, as she has ever done, the banner of Jesus crucified.

Mr. R. C. Morgan, in a very forcible and pointed way, urged the union of all Christian workers in view of the great work before them. He expressed his interest in the journals, and hoped that during the coming exhibition, a special effort would be made to reach through them a vast number of people.

Pastor Théodore Monod spoke with great feeling of the long and eminently useful career of Miss Blundell, who was one of the very first pioneers of the Gospel in France. Pastor Appia expressed his heartfelt thanks to the dear friends who have so long provided us with Christian literature. Rev. R. W. McAll said the magazines were invaluable, and the results from their dissemination could not be overestimated. Rev. William W. Newell earnestly asked for the blessing of God upon the new editor. Reluctantly the meeting was brought to a close, prayer being offered by Messrs. Braithwaite and Saillens.

Will not the readers of The Christian remember specially before the throne of grace these French evangelical magazines and their new editor, and will they not do all in their power to further their circulation? The Editor of The Christian has alluded to the grand opportunity which the Ami de la Maison will have during the coming exhibition; and we are sure he will gladly receive and forward to the treasurer any subscriptions which may be sent for that special purpose. SEVEN YEARS IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

On Monday evening last, Mr. Fred S. Arnot, for seven years missionary in Central Africa, delivered an address, descriptive of his travels and work, at the Young Men's Christian Association, Whittington-avenue, Leadenhall-street, E.C. Mr. H. M. Matheson presided over an assemblage including a large number of young men, who listened with much interest to Mr. Arnot's quiet talk.

In some preliminary remarks, Mr. Arnot referred to the fact that he had the privilege of being brought up in the town of Hamilton, very close to the residence of the late Dr. Livingstone. In the labours of that man of God he early took a lively interest, which developed with years, until God opened the way for him to travel over some of the ground which the great missionary explorer had previous convered. He went on to tell of his wanderings during seven years, commencing in the summer of 1881, giving intensely interesting particulars of some of the tribes—humane and intelligent—whom he came across, and with whom he had dealings of the most friendly character, because he went among them as a man of peace. He told without complaining of his privations and illnesses from which God always delivered him, and was heard with special pleasure when referring to the great desire of many of the people to know more of God and the way of salvation. The hospitable nature of the large territory of the Moshide in Central Africa was proved by the excellent health he enjoyed there, and by the fact that Messrs. Swan and Faulknor had had no illness during their residence there. The slave trade curses the region, and the children and the poor women are made short work of by the cruel dealers. In view of this, Mr. Arnot decided to care for deserted children, and when he left Africa eight were being provided for on the mission.

Having emphasised the need of workers who can readily pick up the languages of Africa, Mr. Arnot spoke of the great evil that is now being done in different parts by military expeditions, which are debasing the people in every way. It is time, he said, that the Christian community protested against the coloured races being thus treated as dogs. Livingstone proved that peaceful travelling in Africa is possible; recent events have abundantly shown that such a method is the only possible one.

SANDWICH ISLES.—By thirty-three votes against ten the Legislative Assembly has decided upon the suppression of its army and navy. The little kingdom will henceforth have neither soldier, marine, nor arsenal. A body of police, whose effective number is fixed at sixty-six, is all that it retains.—Evangéliste.

MISSION AT BOURNEMOUTH.

Rev. W. R. Mowll, M.A., from London, is conducting a series of services at the Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth. Commencing on Sunday last, the hall was more than filled in the afternoon, and about 300 failed to obtain admission. In the evening a very telling address was given to men only, the listeners numbering about 450. The subject was Sin.

Mr. Mowll's visit is the third which he has paid to this town, and his powerful physique and bold manly utterances gain for him an attention which many speakers fail to win. A Bible-reading at noon and a Gospel service at night are the order of each week-day, and a well organised plan of visitation proves very helpful in making the meetings known. Much earnest prayer is being offered that the meetings, which are to extend over next week, may be abundantly blessed. G.

"THE RIBBON OF BLUE."

In a recent periodical, the following lines appeared, "from the pen of a Clergyman":—

"The ribbon of blue, the ribbon of blue,
And what, O Christian, is that to you?
Is it you wish the world to see
How self-denying you can be?
Then why not wear a ribbon of black,
To show that on sin you've turned your back?
And why not wear a ribbon of white,
To show to the world you're a child of light?
Nay, why not wear ribbons of every hue,
To show that no evil clings to you?
Christian, live Christ in every act,

Much, O Christian, is that to you!
It is that the tempted soul may see
It will find a helper and friend in thee;
It is that the tempters all may know,
You will shun their wiles as a hateful foe.
To strengthen the timid brother's heart,
To show to the weak that you take their part;
It speaks of the principles you hold fast,
It is nailing your colours to the mast;
That's why you wear the ribbon of blue,
That, Christian, is what it is to you."

MISSION WORK IN SOUTHWARK.—A new hall in connection with the London Wesleyan Methodist Mission is in course of erection in Great Guildford-street, Southwark. For ten years a very successful mission has been carried on in the neighbourhood, under the superintendence of Mr. J. W. Weston. The new building will consist of a chapel, with seating accommodation for 275, and of a school-room of the same area underneath, together with five class-rooms and vestries. The outlay will amount to about £2000, of which sum £1200 is already in hand.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a week's services at People's Mission Hall, Townsend-street, Old Kent-road.——For blessing on an eight days' special mission in Palmer-place Mission Hall, Holloway-road, N., commencing next Sunday.——For blessing on a mission by Mr. Garnett, at Nantwich, Cheshire, from Nov. 4 to 12.——For blessing on special services by Mr. J. C. Rainey, at Soldiers' Home, Aldershot, Oct. 28 to Nov. 6.——For blessing on Gospel services at the Wesleyan Chapel, Haddenham, Bucks., by Mr. W. H. Bird, commencing Oct. 28.——For an evangelistic mission by Mr. William Forbes, at Birmingham, commencing Oct. 28.——Mr. Henry Cook, of Gosport, asks prayer for a month's mission at Trouville, Rev. Mr. Whelpton (of Havre) and others taking part.——For blessing on a mission in York, from Nov. 11 to 20.

For the Young.

THE CRÈCHE GIRLS.

IN former years we have given some extracts from Mrs. Hilton's report, telling of the progress of the little people under its friendly roof. We think our young readers would now like to know how some of them are getting on in the situations in which they have been placed. In her new report Mrs. Hilton says:—

Our elder girls, who caused us some anxiety when they first went out to service, are now doing well. We correspond with them, and their greatest delight is to come and see us when they have a holiday. We will give a few extracts from some of their letters. The long illness referred to brought forth many expressions of sympathy.

"DEAR MRS. HILTON,—I am very sorry to hear that you have been so ill. I would so like to come and see you. I shall never forget the Crèche and the happy days I spent there. I had a letter from my mother the other day. I do hope she will alter. It is so hard for me to bear. I have often wished I had never had a mother.—Your very affectionately, ELSIE.

"I have more to be thankful to you for than most of the others. I wonder what I would be now had you not taken care of me, as you have done, ever since I was a baby. But I never stopped to think of it. My mistress is so kind. When I was ill she had someone to do my work. My sister has been very ill. The doctors told her when she left the hospital that she must give up drinking. I took her to sign the pledge, but she broke it the next day.

"I am, your loving and grateful, ROSE.

"The third letter is from the child known to most of our readers as 'Water-cresses.' Through the kindness of Mrs. J. G. Barclay, she was admitted some years ago into Princess Louise's Home. She works in the laundry, and for the last two years no payment has been required for her, as she is able to maintain herself:—

"It is with much love I am writing to you. I have been getting on nicely since you came last, and have had another prize for laundry work. Dear madam, I am very grateful for all you have done for me, and for sending me here. I shall soon know laundry work well.

"Your loving and obedient servant, EMMA.

"Another dear girl who was with us some years, but has since been taken charge of by some friends of her father who have educated her, writes to inform us of her mother's death:—

"I am indeed sorry that I have not been to see you, but we have had so much trouble that I have felt unable even to write. We have lost our dear mother. She suffered dreadfully, but was quite ready to go. I should like to see you, and thank you for all your kindness to me. Though I can never repay you, yet God will give you a grand and great reward.

"Your ever loving and grateful LIZZIE."

A BARREL OF WHISKY.

A drayman rolled forth from his cart to the street
A red-headed barrel, well bound and complete;
And on it red letters, like forked tongues of flame,
Emblazoned the grade, number, quality, fame,
Of this world-renowned whisky from somebody's
Who arrested the grain on the way to the mill. [still,

So there stood the barrel delivered, but I
Could see that a shadow was hovering nigh—
A sulphurous shadow, that grew as I gazed
To the form of Mephisto. Though sorely amazed,
I ventured to question this imp of the realm
Where Vice is the pilot, with Crime at the helm,
And asked him politely his mission to name,
And if he was licensed to retail the same
Identical barrel of whisky which he
Was fondly surveying with demonish glee?

"Oh, I never handle the stuff," he replied,
"My partners mortal are trusty and tried;
Mayhap, peradventure, you might wish to look
At the invoice complete—I will read from this book.
You will find that this barrel contains somethin'
Than forty-two gallons of whisky galore." [more
And ere I could slip but another word in,
He checked it off gaily, this cargo of sin:—

"A barrel of headaches, of heartaches, of woes.
A barrel of curses, a barrel of blows;
A barrel of tears from a world-weary wife;
A barrel of sorrow, a barrel of strife;
A barrel of all-unavailing regret;
A barrel of cares and a barrel of debt;
A barrel of crime and a barrel of pain;
A barrel of hopes ever blasted and vain;
A barrel of falsehood, a barrel of cries
That fall from the maniac's lips as he dies.

A barrel of poison—of this nearly full;
A barrel of poverty, ruin, and blight;
A barrel of terrors that grow with the night;
A barrel of hunger, a barrel of groans;
A barrel of orphans' most pitiful moans;
A barrel of serpents that hiss as they pass
From the bead on the liquor that glows in the glass;
My barrel! my treasure! I bid thee farewell.
Sow ye the foul seed, I will reap it in hell!"

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, Oct. 28, 2 Kings xxii. 11—20; Monday, Oct. 29, 2 Kings xxiii. 1—14; Tuesday, Oct. 30, 2 Kings xxiii. 15—25; Wednesday, Oct. 31, 2 Kings xxv. 1—16; Thursday, Nov. 1, Heb. i. 1—14; Friday, Nov. 2, Heb. ii. 1—9; Saturday, Nov. 3, Heb. ii. 10—18.

A Convention of American Workers.

THE Third Annual Convention of Christians interested in Christian work among the unevangelised classes in the cities and towns of America will be held in the Tabernacle M. E. Church, Detroit, Mich., for six days, November 15—20 inclusive. Pastors, missionaries, superintendents of evangelisation societies, workers in missions, evangelists, theological students, Y.M.C.A. secretaries, business men, Christian women, and all others especially interested in aggressive Christian effort are invited to be present as delegates without further notice. The purpose of the Convention is mutual acquaintance and conference of workers, discussion of practical themes and methods of work, and prayer for God's blessing upon the workers in their efforts "to seek and save the lost" in America.

Some of the subjects to be considered are:—Child-Saving Work; Christian Living; The Word of God in Christian Work; Co-operation in City Mission Work; Woman's Place and Work; The Baptism of the Holy Spirit for Service; Financial Support for City Missions; Christian Work in Police-courts and Among Prisoners; Self-Supporting City Missions; Industrial Work among Children and Its Relation to Mission Work and Soul Winning; Constitutions and Forms of Organisation for Christian Work; Christian Work among the Fallen; The Caste Spirit as a Hindrance to City Evangelisation; How a Pastor may Promote Revivals and Build Up Converts; Cottage Meetings; &c. Many well-known ministers, mission and other Christian workers of ability and long experience from all parts of the United States and Canada will be present and participate in the proceedings. The preliminary arrangements already made indicate that the Convention will be one of great power and profit.

WRITE AND SEND.

THE motto text of a little occasional report sent out by Mrs. Robertson, of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, is "What thou seest write in a book and send it" (Rev. i. 11). She goes on to say, "Shall not we who have heard Christ's voice, who have had committed unto us the words of eternal life, and who have had our own souls filled with the joy of his salvation, send to our fellow men who are still in darkness and the shadow of death the one Book which cheers the hearts of all who receive as their Saviour the Person whom it reveals—the good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people?" Among the interesting statements from correspondents are the following:—

Bohemia.—"About three years ago, I sent a family Bible to my native country—a town on the Elbe, close to the frontier—having seen from a previous visit the awful spiritual darkness that prevailed; they are all Roman Catholics. On visiting in the autumn after sending the Bible, I was surprised at the eagerness of the people to read it—not only my own relations, but in the neighbourhood it was lent from one to another: the schoolmaster had a turn at it. About two years ago you kindly supplied me with twenty Bibles from your Society, which I sent to this place, and have since received many letters of thanks. I have just received one from one of my nephews, which has cheered me much. He assures me that through carefully reading the holy Book he has found the Lord Jesus Christ, and that, with his wife and family, he has left the Church of Rome."

Amritsar, India.—"To-day a boy, whom I never remember seeing before, came to me from a village called Maridpore, about ten miles from Amritsar. I found that he knew a great many texts, and really seemed to have grasped the truth. He is at present only fourteen years of age, so I could not, according to Indian law, baptize him without some trial. He said he had learned the texts and read the Gospels in a school where I had given some Urdu Testaments. He further said he had never seen a Christian before. To-day I gave him a Testament, and he came back after a few hours and told me the temptations of Christ, and his answers to Satan, as clearly as a Christian. God's Word is now much more sought after by the people. Some time ago an instance came to light of a Fakir, some forty miles away, who got hold of a Bible, and who gave up his heathen ways in which he made great profit, and came and accepted Christ."

RAILWAY MEN IN LEEDS.—The annual tea and meeting in connection with the Leeds Railway Mission was lately held, and was largely attended. Many helpers are needed to send a Gospel paper and tracts to each railway official monthly, also a letter when convenient. Communications to be addressed to Mrs. Cambie, care of the Railway Mission, 18, New Bridge-street, London, E.C., who will supply names, with full particulars.

WORK AMONG THE JEWS.—In a pamphlet entitled "What I Saw at Hamburg," issued by the Irish Auxiliary of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, Miss F. C. Walker gives a brief account of the excellent work carried on by Rev. S. T. Bachert at the Home for Inquirers at Hamburg. The Home accommodates sixteen inmates, who need its shelter on account of their friends having cast them off because of the profession of Christ. The smoothness with which the work proceeds and the blessed results attending it are very gratifying to the friends of the Home, who hear with joy that not a few Jews who have found peace in believing have been saved from temporal want and destitution through the instrumentality of this useful institution. The address of the Irish Auxiliary is 17, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin.

FATHERLESS.—The Board of Managers of the ASYLUM for FATHERLESS CHILDREN, Reedham, Purley, Surrey, earnestly APPEAL for HELP to maintain and educate the 300 Children now under their care. These children have been admitted to the Asylum at ages varying from six months to eleven years, and will all be retained and cared for until 15 years of age.

The Institution is entirely Unsectarian, has no endowment, and is, therefore, dependent upon public benevolence for support.

The necessary expenditure averages £8,000 per annum, but the only reliable income—that from Annual Subscriptions—does not provide one-third of that amount, hence the necessity for this Appeal. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS will be most thankfully received. HENRY SPICER, Treasurer.
JOHN R. EDWARDS, Secretary.

Christian Community.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY 12,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity. Hundreds of poor men have been gathered in, and their need supplied, while scores have been turned away, for want of room, in the most destitute condition.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS of "THE CHRISTIAN."

The CHRISTIAN CONVENTION,
BRADFORD, 1888.

The object of the Convention is the Deepening of Spiritual Life. The Meetings will be held (D.V.) in the Mechanics' Institute. Nov. 7, Wednesday, subject: "Life in Jesus Christ;" Nov. 8, Thursday, subject: "Life Sanctified;" Nov. 9, Friday, subject: "The Life of Faith." Morning Meeting at 11; Afternoon Meeting at 3; Evening Meeting at 7.30. Chairman: H. F. BOWKER, Esq. Speakers: The Rev. Evan Hopkins, Richmond; The Rev. Wm. Haslam, St. Leonard's; The Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming, Glasgow; The Rev. F. B. Meyer, London; The Rev. J. Sloan, Glasgow; The Rev. G. Grubb, Cahir; Colonel G. W. Oldham, Crieff; Robt. Wilson, Esq., Broughton Grange; J. G. Govan, Esq., Glasgow.

THE EARLSWOOD ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS has accommodation for 700 patients. The present income enables the Committee to receive only 570. 150 applicants are earnestly seeking admission by election. Many of these must be disappointed unless funds are forthcoming. Contributions gratefully received. Superior provision made for private cases on payments regulated by the Board of Management.

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

HELP WANTED FOR THE TOILERS OF THE DEEP.

NINE Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year nearly 4,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

In cloth boards, beautifully bound, 3s. 6d., postage free. In cloth, gilt edges, bevelled boards, elegantly bound for presentation, 5s., postage free.

The Publisher has very great pleasure in announcing the re-issue of the above volume. The first edition met with great favour and was speedily exhausted, many friends being unable to secure copies.

It is hoped that this new and improved edition, which contains additional letters, and several new and beautiful full-page illustrations, may have a wide circulation, and that the story of this lovely Christian life may, with God's blessing, lead many a reader to a fuller consecration of their lives to Christ.

"This volume presents a picture of an almost perfect home and a fresh, noble, influential, joyous Christian, in the surroundings and subject of these memoirs. The writer is her mother, and possibly she does not know that in her simple, unselfish, tender record, she has produced what will rank among Christian readers as an unique and impressive, because so real, biography."—The Christian.

PRAYER FOR CHINA.

DEAR SIR,—I recently attended a prayer-meeting of missionaries in South China, in which there was a considerable opening of heart, as one and another, who had come oppressed in spirit over the burdens they carried, were led, in Christian confidence, to "speak to each other," and thus, intelligently and with more result, bow at the feet of the almighty Saviour in the attitude of supplication, having a sense of that human extremity which is often known as the Divine opportunity.

It came upon me then that it would be wise to lay before you a few words which might incite to similar intercession those of your readers who wait for the kingdom of God, that so a full spirit of prayer drawn out at home and abroad might prove a cloud laden with showers of blessing.

My own mind on entering that prayer-meeting had been deeply impressed by a remembrance of one who was truly a man of righteousness. Being dead, yet he speaketh. And the thought which arises is that the progress of the reign of Christ amongst these Chinese may be according to the time needed to develop the true life, and let its influence gently tell on all who can be acquainted with it. So that, when we are bowed in heart at the apparent delay of Christ's kingdom, we have this at least to consider, that it may be as slow and not slower than is required to prove by spirit and conduct what the true life of Christians is, and what is that blessed Gospel of peace, love, and help which the Redeemer makes known to fallen man the same all the world over.

There are many proofs that the Chinese are keenly alive to perceive what true excellence of character is. Not long ago, when opposition was raised against Christianity in a certain place, a mandarin went out of his way to defend it, because of the purity of Christians. Again, the Chinese hold that extraordinary power and influence come by the will of Heaven to those with whom Heaven is pleased. It is not difficult for them to believe that something more than is seen is at the back of the blessings of Western progress and civilisation. We may be glad of any impressions on their mind legitimately favourable to the spread of the truth.

Again, the people here expect great things from Christians. The very boys in the street have been heard to cry out, as to the meaning of Christianity, that it is a forbidding of such and such vices and crimes. Excellence of character and conduct is expected of Christians. Those who are frightened at foreigners are quieted as to the fact that nothing is to be feared from the representatives of Christianity.

These are brief encouragements to an ever-increasing spirit of united and steady seeking of power from on high, so all Christians in China may be as Christ, and then not much fear need be entertained as to greater numbers coming over to the Lord's side, and this from all ranks.

STEWART MEMORIAL MISSION.—The annual meeting in connection with the Sunday-school, Band of Hope, Bible and Sewing-classes, and other agencies of this Mission, was recently held at the Stewart Memorial Hall, Sloane-place. Mr. George Buchanan, the superintendent of the Sunday-school, spoke of the need for parents to aid the work of the teachers in training the young by good discipline and example in the home. Mr. J. Lamb spoke on the importance of acknowledging God by raising the family altar, and bringing up the children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Other friends also gave words of exhortation. During the evening several sacred solos were sung. A very pleasant evening was concluded by some kind words of counsel and encouragement addressed by Miss Shaw Stewart to the workers.

CONFERENCE ON EVANGELISATION.

THE annual conference on evangelisation in the London Presbyteries was held on Tuesday last week, at the College, Queen-square, W.C., Rev. Dr. White presiding. Mr. R. Stark, organising agent, in the course of a statement on evangelistic work, said that 115 church members, other than ministers and missionaries, are on the list of workers willing to address meetings or otherwise help in evangelisation in the North and South London presbyteries. During the past seven months speakers have been provided for 149 meetings, and the work has been highly appreciated by ministers, and blessed to many of the people.

Rev. Dr. MONRO GIBSON read a paper prepared by Rev. W. Martin on the conditions of success in evangelistic work. It was replete with sound advice to organisers. Summing up, the writer said: The conditions of success in evangelistic work are common sense, business ability, unity on the part of all Christian workers in the congregation, capacity for taking trouble, patience, and perseverance, and these all permeated and controlled by a spirit of continual and entire dependence upon God, by a never-fading consciousness that when all is done success comes "neither by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

A free discussion followed. One speaker, referring to the gathering of converts into church membership, instanced a congregation in which poor members have been badly treated. Seats that had been allotted to them, had afterwards been let; and after being removed from pew to pew, the poor people concluded that there was no room for them, and therefore moved out of the door. This point was taken up by other speakers, who mentioned a church in which the sittings allotted to the poor, gathered in by evangelisation, were regarded as equally secure as others; anything that such members could pay was taken, and their names were entered as seat-holders in the same way as other people's.

One speaker attributed the prevailing deadness in the Church to the fact that people rest upon the doctrines of the faith rather than upon Christ Himself. Another urged that evangelistic work should be carried on throughout the year, every service partaking somewhat of the nature of evangelisation. A third speaker maintained that the causes of the poverty of Gospel work are twofold: The Bible is not studied, and the churches are, to a large extent, bound up with worldliness. The literary society and the concert are popular up to the hilt; but the Gospel-meeting, the prayer-meeting, and the Bible-class are stale and dry as dust.

In summing up, Dr. Gibson advised those who are complaining of workers being scarce to begin with what they have, and the number will soon grow. Doubtless the state of the Church accounts for the want of success in evangelistic work. He maintained that all preaching should be evangelistic. Not that the whole sermon should be simply a variation of the appeal "Come to Jesus," but he held that by a few well-chosen, earnest words in the midst of a thoughtful sermon, sinners are more likely to be brought to Christ than by a service which is purely and strictly evangelistic.

SAILORS AT MADEIRA.—A circular has been issued, signed by Lords Harrowby, Fortescue, and Brassey, and other gentlemen and ladies, who have visited Madeira during recent years, warmly commending to public support the Sailors' Rest and Mission to Sailors, carried on in the island by Mr. W. G. Smart, under the auspices of Miss Weston, of Portsmouth. Some Romanisers in Madeira have directed opposition against the Rest and its excellent agencies, but their tactics have been fully exposed. The signatories of the circular call upon visitors to inspect the Rest and its work for themselves, and then, if they can, to render active support to this useful institution.

LIFE—LIGHT—LOVE.

LORD of Life and light and love,
Shine upon us from above;
By the glory of thy name,
Kindle in our hearts a flame;
Burning up the dross of sin,
Purifying all within.

Life unbegotten, life Divine,
Find in us thy chosen shrine:
Live within us, live and reign,
Live in heart and hand and brain;
By thy mighty energy,
Working glorious ministry.

Light that shadow never knows
Fall upon our sins and woes;
Glory of the eternal day,
Chase the things of night away.
Shine around, within us shine
Till our life be all divine.

Love, the crown of living light,
Truth and beauty infinite,
All our selfishness expel,
In our hearts for ever dwell;
By thy fragrance shed abroad,
Manifest the sons of God.

Living love and loving life
Shining on the earthly strife,
Brighter than the summer sun
Which his upward course has run;
Shine and burn in every breast,
Quickening into love and rest.

EVANGELISING IN THE NORTH.

AT the instigation of the Presbytery of Newcastle, a remarkable evangelistic effort has been made at Newcastle and Gateshead. All the churches in the Presbytery heartily seconded the proposal when it was first made, and the mission is now looked back upon with peculiar pleasure, not only by many who have long known the Lord, but also by not a few who have only just found peace in believing. The missioners, fifteen in number, were men of large experience in such work, secured from all parts of the country, and the arrangements made for the meetings were very elaborate and precise.

The services commenced on October 1 and ended on October 10, being carried on daily, without intermission, in the twelve Presbyterian churches of the district. In some cases the attendance was very large, and such was the increasing interest, that at the close there were many expressions of regret that the mission could not continue for a longer period. In some cases nearly 200 persons remained to the after-meetings, and many professed to accept Christ.

Open-air meetings were held, and the children were brought together for instruction. Working men were addressed by the missioners, some of whom also attended Gospel temperance meetings. A powerful impulse was given by the movement to Christian work in general. The noonday prayer-meetings were rendered specially attractive for the time, as the missioners presided in turn, and daily reports were given of the progress of the movement. Bible-readings and conferences were likewise held, and altogether the results of the mission were as cheering as its exercises were profitable, from a spiritual point of view.

A DEMONSTRATION in connection with the Newcastle Young Men's Bible-class Union was held on Sunday week, when the young men connected with a large number of Bible-classes marched to the city cathedral, and listened to an address by Canon Lloyd on "What is man?" In conclusion the young men, between 2000 and 3000 in number, were warned to avoid the three great rocks, drink, gambling, and unchastity, and urged to pray at all times, read their Bibles regularly, and observe the weekly day of rest.

MEDICAL WORK IN SYRIA.

The writer of the following appeal on behalf of the poor people of Aintab is one of the medical professors in the Central Turkish College there; perhaps the fact that the Lord has taken away that eminent missionary, Dr. Trowbridge, from their head, will move some to a deeper sympathy.

T. W. Brown, Secretary,
Turkish Missions Aid Society.
32, The Avenue, Bedford Park, Chiswick.

We have met a sad loss here at Aintab. Our leader has been taken from us. Our College work will, however, go on in the same line as heretofore, under the able management of Rev. A. Fuller, who came to us last year in anticipation of the sad event that has taken Dr. Trowbridge from us. We had known for three years that Dr. Trowbridge might be taken at any time, but the stroke was no less sudden and severe for that.

I wish to make a special appeal for aid in our medical work here for the coming year. For the past two years Aintab has suffered in common with the rest of the Central Turkey Mission, from famine and locusts, and, what is as bad or worse than either for such a city, a great depression in trade. The great industry of this city is the weaving of a striped cotton cloth, called ollaja. For the past fifteen months there nothing has been done in this trade, so that hundreds of men are out of employment. The high price of food last year compelled them to sell their household stuff in order to live, and now, although the wheat crop is abundant, they have nothing with which to buy, and, having no work, starvation stares them in the face. In fact, many of them are slowly starving upon half rations of coarse barley bread.

Because of this state of things disease finds its victims an easy prey, and our free dispensary is called upon to do three times its usual work. Our funds are not equal to the call; our private purses, slender at best, are exhausted, and we are in urgent need of help for the coming year. In many cases food is needed even more imperatively than medicine; to give the latter without the former being useless, while a little good food and judicious medication will save many lives. I am at present treating from thirty to sixty poor patients daily at the out clinic, and as many more at their homes as I can find time and strength for; and the burden of woe that comes under my daily observation would crush me, did I not believe that our Father can in his inscrutable providence overrule it all for good.

Any help that you can procure us will be gratefully received and carefully used in Christ's name for the relief of our suffering fellows.
F. D. Shepard, M.D.

FRUIT FOLLOWING.—Not many weeks since (says The Methodist Recorder) we reported a valedictory service at St. George's, at which several ladies who had been working with Rev. Peter Thompson said farewell on their departure for China. More than one expressed the belief that her departure would be made a blessing to some whom they left behind. Among them was Miss Edith Broomhall, daughter of the estimable secretary of the China Inland Mission. She had been actively engaged, among other labours, in the work of the Girls' Parlour, and only those who know can form any idea of the unpromising character of the raw material with which the ladies who conduct that institution have to deal. Of the poorest and roughest working class, mostly engaged in sack-making or similar hard and poorly paid toil, it long seemed impossible to make any impression for good upon them, insomuch that Mr. Thompson tells us that Miss Broomhall's diary contained such sentences as, "Is it possible for these girls to be saved?" Thank God, the last few weeks have proved the possibility. Since the departure of their friend no fewer than five of these very girls have given clear evidence of a change of heart, and are now regular in attendance at the means of grace.

RESCUED SLAVES AT ADEN.

Dear Sir,—You will have received the welcome news of the capture of three slave dhows, with 213 slaves on board, by H.M.S. Osprey, presently stationed at Aden. They were landed here a fortnight ago, and have been temporarily housed by the Government.

We had an opportunity, last week, of visiting them, and came away with very heavy hearts. Most of them were little more than children, boys as young as six years, and girls from eight to fifteen. They had been wrenched from their homes at such tender ages to be driven like cattle before the merciless lash of the slave driver, and in the end sold like merchandise to cruel, unprincipled men. These unfortunates, according to finding of the Government authorities, are mostly Abyssinian Christians. They were captured in Shoa and the Galla country, a weary march of four to five hundred miles, collected, and shipped at the town of Tajurrah, right under the French flag.

Fathers and mothers whom God has blessed with children, think of your little ones being ruthlessly wrenched from you, and sold to strangers! Difference in colour does not alter the natural affection of parents for their children, so we can well imagine the intense suffering endured by these victims of the awful Mohammedan marauders. Steps are being taken to dispose of these homeless ones, and it is cheering to observe the Christian spirit displayed by the authorities in endeavouring to dispose of them to those who will be likely to take good care of them. After communicating with our committee, we have offered to relieve them of fifty boys and twenty-five girls. About £5 per annum will provide food for one, and we believe we shall receive from Protestant Christians the funds needed for their support.

Yours, &c., M. Lochhead.

THE KOLAR MISSION.

Miss Anstey and her helpers continue to abound in the work of the Lord at Kolar, Mysore, India. The mission department expands on every side. In various ways and at all seasons the good seed is sown, and whether the people hear, or whether they forbear, the message of redeeming love is delivered. Fruit of labour is seen on every hand, in towns and villages alike, many of the people having made profession of Christ.

Miss F. Bird and her assistants in the medical department are doing important work. Zenana visiting is full of opportunities. The Mohammedan women have been taught to sew and crochet; their sympathies have been touched, and they are now listening to teaching concerning God and his Christ. The school children mostly belong to married orphans, and are usually very shy of white faces. They are made happy, however, and, it is hoped, will grow up in the fear of the Lord to lead useful lives.

Knowing what young converts have to endure when scattered among the heathen population, Miss Anstey fosters them with great care. Orphanages supported by Government grants are of no special interest to the natives; but it is known far and wide that no application for such help has been made on behalf of the Kolar Orphanage, and people marvel at the way in which God has answered the prayer of faith. The work is carried forward on this principle, in order that the heathen may see that those who trust in the Lord will have that which is for their good.

It is not often that we have such a truly interesting report in our hands as this of the Kolar Mission from January 1887 to June 1888. Every page is worth reading, and true service is the endorsement of the entire story. Copies (four for 6d.) may be obtained from Miss Hertslet, 18, Dartmouth Park-road, London, N.W.

MANCHESTER WORKING LADS.

About two years ago the first lads' club and gymnasium were opened by Mr. Alex. Devine in the populous working-class district of Hulme. The beneficial influence of an hour or two's teaching on a Sunday afternoon was to all appearance obliterated by hours of contamination during the week in the debasing "school of the street," and the beer-house, and low music-hall. The Hulme Working Lads' Club was therefore established as an attempt at a practical solution of a very pressing social problem.

Since its establishment on Christian but entirely unsectarian lines no lad in the district has any excuse for lounging about the streets and getting into the evil habits which follow. For a subscription of one penny per week (if the lad is out of work or unable to pay, nothing is charged) he has all the benefit of a fine and well-appointed gymnasium. He may spend his spare hours in a bright room where innocent games and periodicals are provided. During the winter months he can attend useful evening classes or learn wood carving, modelling in clay, carpentry, &c., in another part of the building. It would occupy too much space to describe the brass band, summer "camp" under canvas, literary society, cricket, football, swimming, and rambling clubs, to say nothing of the innumerable entertainments, instructive and otherwise, which have formed part of the bill of fare of this institution.

As to the spiritual part of the work, a Sunday evening service is held in the large room, with very pleasing results. The story of the Cross has been listened to by hundreds of those who, in the ordinary course of events, will become our future working men. A Bible-class (asked for by the lads themselves) is well attended, and many by their conduct have shown proofs of having experienced a change of heart.

The chief constable of Manchester has testified in writing to the decrease of juvenile crime in the Hulme district since the club was opened, which happy result he attributes to its agency. As a consequence of the success of the Hulme Club, the Manchester Working Lads' Association has been formed with Lord Aberdeen as president, for the purpose of establishing similar institutions in each working-class district of Manchester. Another large building on a much larger scale has been furnished in Ancoats, the unenviable home of what are known as the "scuttling" fraternity. This is conducted on the same lines as at Hulme. A similar service for lads has been commenced there, and so far the attendance has varied from fifty to over a hundred. It is confidently hoped that the coming winter will witness several hundred working lads reverently listening to the expounding of the Word of God every Sunday evening.

A third club has just been opened in the centre of the engineering district of Openshaw. Others will be planted as funds permit, till the whole city is surrounded by a network of bright places where the working lads of Manchester may have their physical, mental, and spiritual needs looked after.

THE PULPIT.—The New York Herald says that "whenever and wherever there is a pulpit on fire, the people always go in crowds to see it burn."

THE CHRISTIAN MISSION INSTITUTION.—Maintaining that the mission of the Church is Missions, this Institution, whose headquarters are at Denver, Colorado, pursues a serious work with becoming vigour. Rev. Dr. Davis is the life and soul of the organisation, which helps forward evangelistic agencies in America and China. Thirteen native labourers are supported in the "Celestial" Empire; and it is hoped soon to have several medical students in training. Along with other good works, these missionary operations are carried on in the spirit of prayer, and are becoming more and more appreciated throughout the American churches.

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN ROME.

IN a recent letter to Dr. Saunders, Mrs. Wall says:—

Mr. Wall has opened a room for the preaching of the Gospel on the Esquilino, a new quarter where many workmen and their families reside. Our hall was well attended, but principally by men. I felt we wanted something that would reach women, and lead them to break through the superstitions of the Romish Church, and be willing to listen to the Gospel. The medical mission secured the right thing. We were obliged to make a division for the doctor by means of a curtain across the room. The first morning, without any effort, we had seventeen patients, and the extra room filled to the door with listeners. Very soon the room would not hold the patients. We have had continually to send many back, and I believe we could as easily get a hundred as our present number, forty, but we must have a larger hall, and a second room for a dispensary.

Those who come are principally mothers, with their children; many of them have never seen a New Testament before, did not know there was such a book. They listen with rapt attention, and beg us to go to their homes to tell them more of these things. Prayer has a wonderful effect; before it was nothing more to them than penance, now they see there is a reality in it. They now frequently ask us to pray for the husband out of work, or their sick children. Seeing the wonderful effect wrought upon the women through the medical mission, I am very desirous of opening others in our other three preaching stations.

"BEING DEAD—YET SPEAKETH."

A MEMORIAL OF MISS CALEY.

IN a communication with reference to the lamented death of Miss Caley, of the North Africa Mission, Rev. E. F. Baldwin writes from Mogador:—

On the evening of the day which brought us the sad intelligence that Miss Caley's work for Morocco was over, a bright-faced Sousie had met Miss Jennings, who is here temporarily, and had asked after Miss Caley, speaking most admiringly and appreciatively of her. He had been at the mission-house in Larache, and had also accompanied the ladies, including Miss Caley, on their late trip to Fez. I have had a long talk with him, and was rejoiced to find that this dear man had evidently received Christ as his Saviour. He had a Gospel of John, and another of Mark, which Miss Caley had given him, and which he said he had constantly read since, as was apparent, for they were worn out with reading.

The man's name is Abraham. May he become the spiritual father of a great multitude. He spoke of the words he had read as having entered his heart and made him happy. He spoke of five others in one town, and others elsewhere, whom he said he had instructed, and who had also "become happy" through Christ's word. In different towns he has been reading these two Gospels. Some have asked him to get them other parts of the New Testament. He went on to tell us that it was his ambition to go through the land, with a complete New Testament, everywhere acquainting the people with the salvation of God. He is very intelligent, reads fluently, speaks unusually good Arabic for Morocco, and exhibited great acquaintance with the portions he had so much studied.

BREAD CAST ON ITALIAN WATERS.—Mr. E. C. Newberry has had special facilities for distributing the Word of God in Pisa and other places, and asks for a renewed stock of Bibles, Testaments, Gospels, and tracts. He may be addressed at Pisa, Italy.

INDIA'S GREATEST BARRIER.

I HAVE read with much interest in your paper of the work in Scotland by Drs. Pierson and Gordon in the interests of foreign mission work, and I pray God that their efforts may be crowned with a very abundant blessing. At the same time I venture to say, after twelve years' residence in India, during which I have travelled very widely over the land, that it is my strong conviction that it is vain to hope for any large success here unless we couple with our missionary work amongst the heathen a larger amount of effort on behalf of our own countrymen. I am convinced that the greatest barrier to the salvation of India's millions is not to be found in their own idolatrous systems, but in the Christless lives that meet them on every side.

Little can you realise the terrible spiritual destitution that prevails amongst our widely scattered countrymen in India. As an evangelist, I have often gone to places where a minister of the Gospel has never been seen before. Twice I have been in Assam for several months at a time, and there found scores of Europeans who have had no opportunity of attending a religious service for years. One large district had only been visited ministerially twice in twelve years, and on both occasions these visits were made at the request of parents wishing their children to be baptized. In June last I spent a week at a large jute station, where there are a number of Europeans (mostly Scotchmen), and these had not been visited by a minister of the Gospel for three years.

Many of these widely scattered ones (our own kith and kin from Christian homes in Great Britain) feel somewhat bitter at their neglect by the churches at home, whilst so much is being said and done for the evangelisation of the natives. Even where there is not total spiritual destitution, the state of things is often quite as bad, if not worse; as, for instance, where the people are wholly dependent on the ministrations of highly ritualistic or utterly godless chaplains. Many a sad illustration of this could I give.

Our work in connection with the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society is entirely unsectarian and evangelistic. We minister to those who otherwise would be utterly neglected in spiritual things. We need more prayer, more workers, and more means. There is not a single missionary in India who does not hail with joy every effort to bring our own countrymen to exemplify before the native people a pure Christianity. I am glad to report that H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, and His Excellency Lord Reay, Governor of Bombay, have both shown their sympathy with our work by contributing to the funds of the Society. Further information can be obtained through Rev. J. Fordyce, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

GERMAN WORKMEN IN LONDON.—The Christian Home for German Artisans and Bakers, 99, Great Eastern-street, E.C., has proved a very useful institution since its opening in February last year. The demand for sleeping accommodation has exceeded the capacity of the Home, and many of the unemployed inmates applied to the superintendent for temporary help; but, through lack of funds, little could be done for them. Many opportunities were embraced of presenting the Gospel to the men, not a few of whom had been brought down to poverty and misery by vice and dissipation. The applications by employers for workmen far exceeded the number of inmates, but frequently there was no suitable man on the register. The Home is not yet self-supporting. The committee would like to secure more commodious premises in Leman-street. Letters and subscriptions should be addressed to the Secretary of the German Y.M.C.A., 28, Finsbury-square, E.C.

AMERICAN NOTES.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

I MAY be pardoned if I again refer to the most vital subject now under consideration in religious circles, viz., the fight with Jesuitism in Boston and elsewhere. The priests are evidently alarmed at the strong protest made against their interference with the public school policy, so entirely satisfactory to native Americans. A certain Nun, widely known throughout the world, has written stirring articles exposing the deeds of Rome's agents in this country. She uses a sharp pen, and signs herself "A former Roman Catholic." Her identity will not long be hid as she has completely severed herself from the communion of "Holy Mother Church." She is a lady of superior talent, and of great experience, and will use her gifted powers against the delusions of the Papacy and the hypocricies of the Jesuits. As yet the unrealities of her former religion fill her with alarm lest she never find reality in any faith. I mention this to call out the earnest prayers of your readers for this estimable, philanthropic, and highly cultured woman.

Rev. James A. O'Connor, better known as "Father O'Connor," editor of The Converted Catholic, continues the work of preaching Jesus to his former co-religionists. His warfare is peculiarly one of kindness, great charity, and tenderness of appeal towards Catholics. God has greatly blessed his efforts in leading many priests from Mary to the Master, and in directing their eye from the Sacrifice of the Mass to "behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world." His Sunday evening services in the Masonic Hall are largely attended. Your correspondent has spoken there when hundreds of Irish Catholics were present listening most respectfully to the Gospel of Christ. Brother O'Connor preaches the truth in love, yet never ceases to expose the iniquities of the false system from which he has been delivered.

Among the priests recently converted through Mr. O'Connor's instrumentality is a very marked and able man, Rev. John B. McLoy, D.D. After seven years in a French college, he studied in Rome for eight years, where he was ordained a priest in 1874. He was intimately acquainted with the leading ecclesiastics connected with the Vatican. For ten years he resided in Glasgow, frequently preaching as a missioner in the leading cities of England. For two years he was attached to the diocese of Newark, N.J. (U.S.A.), visiting distant States on mission tours. Last August Father O'Connor met him, and Father McLoy was led to the Saviour.

Dr. McLoy is now in Princeton Seminary, where the professors afford him every facility in preparing himself for the work before him, viz., the evangelisation of the Roman Catholics in this country. He is a man of signal ability, and his conversion is a notable event in Catholic circles. Other priests are known to be inquirers, like Nicodemus, coming to Jesus first by night. The mission field here is wide enough. New York city alone has one Roman Catholic cathedral, seventy-five churches, forty chapels, 300 priests, 300 brothers, 2000 religious women, 40,000 students in colleges, schools, and academies. The Catholic population of New York is 800,000, having a capital of thirty millions of dollars invested in their religious institutions.

Notes and Comments.

IN our next issue we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. B. Senior, of Surrey Chapel.

The first annual report of the London West-Central Mission is an intensely interesting pamphlet. It is not only a record of work, but an eloquent justification of great evangelical principles. Among special classes of the community, hopeful labourers have done loving work; moreover, rich and poor alike have had the Gospel preached to them in faithful simplicity. It is an inspiration to read the sections of the report written by Revs. Hugh Price Hughes and Mark Guy Pearse, and we recommend a careful reading of the whole to any discouraged labourers, or to any Christians who may be looking about for a sphere of labour.

To-day (Friday) the first anniversary of the Mission will be celebrated. At noon Rev. M. G. Pearse will preach in Princes Hall; at 3 o'clock a convention will be held in Wardour Hall, Rev. Dr. Rigg presiding; at 7 o'clock Mr. George Williams will take the chair at the annual meeting, when addresses are expected from Revs. J. E. Clapham, M. G. Pearse, H. P. Hughes, and others. By the close of the day it is hoped to receive subscriptions amounting to £2500, towards which some promises have already been made. Copies of the report may be had from Mr. Hughes, whose address is 8, Taviton-street, Golden-square, W.C.

The committee appointed at a recent meeting of the London Baptist Association to draw up a declaratory statement of evangelical belief, submitted their report at a special assembly of the Association last week, when the declaration formed the subject of considerable discussion. Rev. A. G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle, in view of the decisive vote at the previous meeting against the adoption of a credal basis, formally withdrew from the Association, intimating that his congregation would endorse the step he had taken. In some respects this cleavage is to be regretted; but, if there cannot be honest agreement in doctrinal view, it is surely better that all should be free to do their work untrammelled by hampering associations.

The Evangelical Alliance have once more sent forth their world-wide invitation to united prayer during the first full week of 1889. The programme of subjects for petition is drawn up on the usual comprehensive lines. The Alliance Committee say in their circular:—

> Many signs of the times also emphasise the duty of waiting on God. The increasing activity of both truth and error, good and evil, marks the period as critical. Socialistic principles, subversive of the highest interests of society and opposed to authority, prevail to a great extent, while the baneful influence of Romanism, so antagonistic to the progress of Christian liberty, is powerfully felt in many lands. Many thoughtful students and observers are convinced that a solemn era is at hand. And all of us must feel that while we are more than ever bound to faithful testimony and diligent service, we are most impressively admonished to watch and pray.

Copies of the programme can be had from the secretaries, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C.

"The Turning of the Tide, 1688." The continuation of this tale of the Covenanters stands over till next week.

The interesting details given in the October report of the Howard Association show that its special field of effort among prisoners is one that yet affords ample scope for the Christian and the philanthropist. We commend the Association and its humane endeavours to the sympathetic consideration of our readers.

The recently published account of the result of an appeal to the Supreme Court of Madrid, from a sentence passed by the Spanish Provincial Tribunal, will afford instructive reading to those who prate of Romish equity and toleration. A Spanish Protestant was condemned to five days imprisonment, and a fine of one pound and costs, for the offence of not removing his hat when a Popish procession was passing through the streets; the Supreme Court has decided that his conduct was a heinous offence against the religious feelings of those who belong to the Catholic religion, and accordingly upheld the sentence. This decision can only be considered as a flagrant act of religious persecution. Spain is now the only country in the world, where the bigotry of Romanism is all powerful, and those who profess to think slightingly of its power for evil, or imagine that its rule can ever be compatible with liberty and religious equality, will do well to keep a watchful eye upon its unbridled supremacy in that country.

The British Museum has recently become possessed of a number of cuneiform tablets found in Egyptian tombs, whereby we are afforded an interesting glimpse of life in the Nile Valley in times anterior to the Exodus. Amenophis III., of the eighteenth dynasty, having married a daughter of Tushratta, King of Mesopotamia, there was a large emigration of families from beyond the Euphrates, and in time the visitors acquired possession of lands and goods which had formerly been enjoyed by their hosts. Jealousy ensued, and there was much oppression during the period of the nineteenth dynasty. A writer in The Times so runs in the face of historical facts as to say:—

> They were set to the uncongenial task of making bricks, and of building walls and pyramids; and finally the oppression they endured ended in the outbreak which led to their triumphing gloriously over their taskmasters in the waters of the Red Sea.

This latter statement is as extraordinary as it is unwarrantable. It is strange that it should be necessary to remind The Times that Moses delivered Israelites and not a remnant of adventurers from Mesopotamia.

There is much force in Rev. Dr. Randall's reply to the accusation of ignorance and passion because he took strong objection to the Universalist doctrine set forth in the Eschatology debate on the last day of the Church Congress. He still, and, as we hold, properly, objects to theorising on the future state, and setting forth mere speculations as authorised doctrine. No one but the Lord of the dead and living has power to reveal the secrets of eternity, and when we speculate we set forth no more than the crude theories of modern assurance. On such a momentous subject doctors, however learned or daring, ought to turn for light to Him who has the keys of death and hell. This is sound reasoning. Would that preachers would follow it. An assurance is indulged by many of them in proclaiming new views which is altogether unjustifiable.

In our list of forthcoming events will be found particulars of the series of Thursday addresses to be delivered by Dr. Adolph Saphir on "The Bible," at the Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington. The opportunity of hearing a series of lectures on such a subject by such a competent speaker is rare, and we doubt not it will be very widely taken advantage of.

Considerable division, both of feeling and opinion, exists among Congregationalists on the question whether the Congregational Union should speak as a corporate body on the subject of administration in Ireland. It appeared to a majority of the late Nottingham Assembly that the ministers and delegates ought to condemn the action of the Government, and the last morning's session was adjourned to a public hall for this purpose. About a hundred, however, instantly signed a protest against this adjournment, and the protesters included very influential names, some of them being ex-Chairmen. Dr. R. W. Dale has also written to The Nonconformist and Independent to say that he would have signed the protest, had he not regarded it as inadequate. Quoting a phrase which was used concerning the minority at the adjourned meeting, he says: "I am willing, as far as the Congregational Union is concerned, to be 'brushed aside in the interest of freedom and progress.'" We echo the wish he expresses that Congregationalists may not on this Irish question be divided into two hostile camps.

If "The Jewish Quarterly Review" (D. Nutt, London), of which the first number has appeared, is continued, it will throw valuable light on current Jewish opinion, and, at the same time, assist to raise the Jewish mind of England from that apathy and indolence on religious questions which has of late years so fatally marked the well-to-do among them. Few things can be more hopeful than to turn the attention of the Jews to what the Editors term "the greatest and most vital of all works of Jewish literature—the Bible." Even modern Jewish scholarship which turns attention away from traditional dogmas to the true meaning of the Hebrew prophets will help forward that movement which has been awakened in the house of Israel, and is one of the most remarkable providential signs of this age. We observe that Christian expositors and scholars are invited to write in The Review.

A letter in The Times, by Rev. W. Adamson, vicar of Old Ford, emphasises the painful facts as to starvation and destitution being very potent feeders of the terrible army of lost women in our streets. He suggests that steps should be taken to punish men as well as women, for "at present the law is unfair, and oppressive to one sex"; and also that "there should be two grades of Unions—one for the lazy, vicious, and criminal; the other for the honest, distressed, and industrious. They should not be required to herd together under one stigma of reproach." If this latter suggestion were adopted, doubtless the strong objection to the workhouse, which so many of the deserving poor entertain, would be set aside, and there would be less sorrow and shame in our midnight streets.

Rev. Hugh B. Chapman, vicar of St. Luke's, Camberwell, writing upon a kindred topic, similarly cries out for "unflinching and absolute equality being dealt out to both sexes," so-called "degraded" women being the result of degraded men. He urges that the drink traffic is at the bottom of half the misery and vice of the present day, and suggests that it should be dealt with as it deserves. Recent utterances of those in authority seem to point to a revival of the "compensation" theories of a few months ago; we trust, however, that the nation will insist upon the drink traffic being dealt with, not in accordance with its claims, but with its shameful results.

The simultaneous strikes among coal miners for higher wages have created a crisis in the coal trade. Coal has gone up fully two shillings a ton, and is still on the rise. With bread dear, too (remarks a contemporary), the prospects of the coming winter are terrible for the poor.

The Dublin Ecclesiastical Gazette, in dealing with the disgraceful attacks upon Mrs. Smyly's and other Christian work in the Irish metropolis, now being made week by week in a Romanist paper, says:—

> In the slums of our larger towns and cities the children of the poor are practically uncared for and allowed to grow up in a state of illiteracy as young savages. The elementary principles of the Christian religion are not taught to them, and we venture to say that not one in a hundred could repeat the ten commandments—the foundation of all morality. Until the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland does its duty by instructing its children in the principles of Christianity it must be prepared to see the work at least attempted by others.

A dog in the manger attitude, however, is not an unusual one on the part of the Romish apostasy, but it is not until the Bible is introduced by those who are doing good work in the slums and alleys, that Rome stirs. It certainly seems that she would prefer to allow the poor to perish in their poverty and ignorance rather than they should be helped and instructed by anyone holding God's Word.

The preliminary report of the Parliamentary Committee appointed to inquire into the condition of the labouring classes in Holland, contains some interesting but painful facts on this subject. It appears that the small bakers of Amsterdam, for instance, work sixteen hours a day all the week, and on Fridays and Saturdays twenty-six hours at a stretch. The tailors, with their wives and children, frequently work until midnight, and sometimes twenty-four, or even forty-eight hours at once. Extremely long hours—eighteen, twenty-four, and even thirty-six—are common in the Dutch bakeries, steam mills, breweries, refineries, and other industries, the average day in most factories consisting of thirteen or fourteen hours. The number of women and children employed is constantly on the increase, amounting, in one province, to 39 per cent. of the workpeople, and though the employment of children under twelve is forbidden by law, yet, in the absence of proper inspection, these habitually work as long as adults, and at dangerous and unhealthy trades.

One lamentable effect of this female and child labour is to be seen in the great increase of infant mortality, which in five years has advanced nineteen per cent. of the population for the whole of Holland, and in some parts as much as thirty per cent. Wages are stated to be very low, the ordinary yearly earnings of a Dutch workman in constant employment for ten hours a day being about £37. It will thus be seen that the lot of our own East-end toilers is rivalled, if not exceeded, in hardship, in other countries; and assuredly, unless a remedy is found for the above abuses, in pursuance of the urgent recommendations of the Commissioners, the outlook for the working population of the Netherlands is very serious.

A happy contrast to the foregoing picture is afforded by the manufacturing town of Barmen, in Germany. Here, as is gathered from a recent report of the United States Consul, wages are higher than in neighbouring towns. Apart from the insurance required by law, there are stated to be upwards of forty invalid, saving, and annuity funds, under the joint management of employers and employed. Between these two classes excellent relations exist, the former showing that they have the welfare of their workpeople at heart, and the latter remaining in the same factory for twenty, thirty, or forty years, and the amount of litigation being of the smallest. There are also very successful schools which afford a safe home for the children during the parents' hours of labour, and many poor workers, when incapacitated by age, continue to receive full wages until their death. If the relations between capital and labour, employer and employed, were generally based upon Christian principles, and if working men refused to be swayed by irresponsible agitators, who risk nothing by a strike, the economical and social condition of Barmen might become the rule, instead of the exception.

In a recent little book ("Woman, her Rights and Duties," by Minerva) it is stated, on the authority of an Inspector-General, that "of the hundred millions of women in India at least two-thirds are by their social customs debarred alike from receiving the visit of a medical man at their own homes or from attending public hospitals or dispensaries." This points to an open door for English ladies. A knowledge of the healing and nursing art will gain for them an entrance into the zenana, which is the social fortress to be captured, and, as in the case of medical missions, the administering of relief to the body affords splendid opportunities of prescribing also for the heart and soul. Christian ladies of high education and full of love to God and sympathy with his benighted creatures are urgently needed for this work. There are in England many ladies of means and education who are practically frittering away their energies and lives for want of some definite vocation. Here then is a sphere of work to which may fitly be dedicated the noblest talents, attributes, and graces of womanhood.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE has been conducting meetings and missions in and around London since his return from the Colonies and America. In response to many pressing invitations, he intends visiting the provinces to hold special meetings, and will continue this work up till May next, when he will probably carry out another series of marquee meetings in the Metropolis. His varied experiences in Australasia, America, and this country should be helpful to the cause he is earnestly seeking to advocate.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN BELFAST.

Major Whittle's mission in Belfast is being continued with increasing success. On Sunday week he conducted two services in May-street Church, one for women and another for men. Both were largely attended by audiences that listened very attentively to the earnest words of the speaker. During the week following Major Whittle conducted three services daily.

In the dinner-hour he addressed the employés in several of the large warehouses. In one of these establishments a weekly meeting has been maintained since the Major's former visit several years ago by those who received blessing then. Bible-readings have been held every afternoon at the Y.M.C.A. buildings; and in the evenings addresses have been delivered in Rosemary-street Church. Sin in its various aspects has been emphasised, and the grace of God magnified.

Engagements are crowding upon Major Whittle's attention, and both from the north and south of Ireland he is receiving cordial invitations.

GRAY'S YARD RAGGED CHURCH.

The new premises of the Gray's Yard Ragged Church and Schools, James-street, Oxford-street, W., were opened on Monday last, when a public meeting was held, presided over by Lord Kinnaird. The spacious room was crowded by friends and supporters, who were much gratified to find that, after some years of waiting, the Mission has a suitable building in which its important work may be carried on. The outlay has exceeded £8000, and there is at present a deficit of £1400 on the undertaking, not reckoning the cost of needful furniture, and the payment of some bills yet to fall due.

Situate close to the old premises, the new Ragged Church is entered from 13, Duke-street, Manchester-square. It is supplied with class-rooms, and the good work which has been carried on with so much success for many years will be continued within its walls. The hungry will be fed, and the Gospel will be preached to the poor. In the past many tramps have found Christ at the Mission meetings; men of culture also, who have sunk to poverty, have there found a sympathetic ear as well as a warm heart open to their sad tale; and runaway boys and girls have made friends of the workers, who have gladly moved to secure their restoration to the parental roof. These and other matters were mentioned at the meeting, in the course of speeches by Dr. S. O. Habershon, treasurer for the building fund, and Mr. P. Gough, who for sixteen years has been a hearty worker in connection with the Mission.

Lord Kinnaird warmly commended the Mission to the support of Christian people. He was followed by Rev. W. Hay Chapman, who urged the workers never to lose sight of the fact that the Mission is not theirs but the Master's, who said, "As my Father hath sent Me, so send I you." Revs. Nevile Sherbrooke and F. H. White also spoke. On the motion of Mr. George Holland, seconded by Colonel Puget, a vote of thanks was passed to Mr. W. G. Scott, the architect, who gave his time and talents alike in connection with the new building.

"A DARK SPOT IN SOUTH LONDON."—On Wednesday, last week, a public meeting, presided ever by Mr. G. E. Elvin, secretary of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Evangelists' Association, was held in connection with the opening of the Penarth-street New Mission-hall, Ormside-street, Old Kent-road. For the last three years the friends have been desirous of erecting an iron building. Failing to obtain the necessary permission for the erection of the iron structure, a commodious building has just been rented, and what was once a large shed has been converted into a comfortable hall capable of seating from 300 to 400 persons. An account of the work during the past five years will shortly be published. The superintendent is Mr. S. Clayton, 218, Bow Common-lane, London, E.

WORKING GIRLS OF LONDON.

The Homes for Working Girls in London are now ten years old, and accommodate a large number of inmates. The endeavour is to provide Homes in the various districts of the Metropolis for those who are earnestly striving to gain an honest living, but are homeless; it is sought to afford young women profitable recreation, and, above all, to surround them with Christian influences, and extend to them friendly guidance at the most critical period of their lives.

These Homes were during last year centres of much Christian work, as well as serving an important philanthropic purpose. Meetings of various kinds were held, and measures adopted for the intellectual improvement of the residents. The united monthly prayer-meetings were a means of much good. Though many an inmate enters the Homes without any regard even for the observance of religion, something very soon seems to attract them to considering their relation to Him who is "the Way, the Truth, and the Life." "Day's outings" and "invitations to tea" were numerous throughout the year, and, with the "musical evenings," they were highly appreciated. The continued co-operation of friends in these directions is confidently reckoned upon.

The annual report of the Homes contains an urgent plea for that large body of young toilers in London who cannot command a much-needed change and rest in the country. "If," says the report, "at any time God should put it into the heart of anyone interested in the welfare of their poorer working sisters to present to the trustees a roomy house at a suitable distance from London, and of reasonably easy access, we would gratefully accept it on their behalf."

There is much that is deeply interesting in the report, which, along with any other information, may be obtained on addressing the hon. director, Mr. John Shrimpton, 2, Westminster-chambers, S.W.

Last week, in the presence of a number of friends, an extension of Victoria House, Queen's-road, Bayswater, was formally opened and dedicated to the work. Instead of accommodating twenty-eight, this excellently situated house will now afford a home and shelter to fifty-six young working women. The cost of this addition has been £1800, and of that sum about £600 has yet to be made up. In a succinct and very interesting statement made on the occasion by Mr. Shrimpton, he referred to the power of practical womanly sympathy in smoothing the pathway of those who have to toil amid many difficulties for their daily bread. Those women who are possessed of large means have a corresponding responsibility in considering the claims of their poorer sisters. Earnest prayer on behalf of this good work was made by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe and Rev. F. Sulivan, and an address was given by Rev. Dr. Concannon.

A ninth House will be opened in December, when there will be an aggregate accommodation for 520 young women.

FACTORY LADS' CHRISTIAN HOME.—An institute to serve this good purpose was opened last week at 331, Kentish Town-road, N. With the sympathy of Mr. George Hatton, of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, and the active assistance of Mr. W. Wheatley, the well-known prisoners' friend, Mr. J. Markham has promoted the scheme and opened the Home with the encouragement of many Christian workers and others in the district. The object is to reach and care for lads at the critical age of from thirteen to seventeen, who will be welcome, without payment, to the institute and the enjoyment of its many advantages. Needy lads will also be provided with bed and board at a cheap rate, and other agencies will, it is hoped, be in due course established for the good of the class for whom the Home has been opened.

DR. BAEDEKER IN RUSSIA.

Dear Sir,—I have now once more crossed the Russian frontier, and have begun visiting prisons, and giving the Word of Life to the prisoners. May the seed thus sown be watered by the prayers of God's remembrancers, and may much fruit be found after many days. Through the Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures I am enabled to give a New Testament to each prisoner. Going inside the prison walls is like descending into a lower world, where a glimmer of light is a great event in the history of the life of prisoners. There are chains and fetters far worse than prison walls and bars, and in many cases the confinement in prison may prove the entrance into real liberty; but there is also a terrible power in the concentration of sin and darkness which is productive of terrific results, when the glorious Gospel is withheld.

My next step will be Kischinjeff, and then Kiew, Gitomir, Elisabethgrad, &c. I purpose returning to Odessa before I go further east and south-east. I reckon on the prayers of the Lord's remembrancers to pave the way where I go.—Yours in the fellowship of the Lord's service, sincerely,

F. W. Baedeker.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.

Wednesday, October 17, a happy day—long looked for, long worked for, and much prayed about—was the day on which the friends and supporters of Mrs. Birt's Liverpool Sheltering Homes gathered to see the foundation-stone laid of the new Home in Myrtle-street. The Mayor of Liverpool presided. Mrs. Stephen Williamson (youngest daughter of Dr. Guthrie) laid the stone, amid a sympathising assemblage, with the sun shining upon the scene in all its radiance. The Bishop of the diocese, in prayer, dedicated to God the building about to be erected.

The child rescue work carried on by these Sheltering Homes has been greatly blessed of God in the past. He is blessing it now, and the new Homes will greatly add to the convenience of the work by providing for the rescue of a greater number of children.

The bazaar in 1884, which realised £5000, showed how the work had taken hold of the sympathies of the people. Donations have been since coming in, until the Committee felt they were thoroughly justified in commencing the building (which needed only £2000 more), believing that amount would be forthcoming from God's stewards. Only to-day, two little girls were received at the Home, of the ages of eleven and thirteen, who had been deserted by their mother, and had not been in a bed, nor in even a room of any kind, for four months; sleeping on the sand of the shore of the Mersey, or creeping into empty boxes, or crouching in the shadow of some doorstep. To the question, "Were you not afraid to be out in the dark night, you two little girls, all alone?" the sad reply came quickly, "Yes, ma'am, but we got used to it at last."

ILFRACOMBE.—Mr. W. H. Weir, a youth articled to an architect, writes:—"Our meetings are very well attended, and are, I am sure, going to be a great blessing. We hold them every Wednesday evening in a room on the quay, in the midst of the poorest houses. They commence at eight o'clock, and a friend and myself start about seven with a good supply of tracts, and go from house to house inviting the people to come, and at the same time leave a tract at each house. Now that the open-air services on Sunday are discontinued, two of us distribute tracts through the town after evening service." This is an example worth imitation.

A TRAP FOR YOUNG MEN.

The Glasgow Exhibition drinking statistics given last week (writes a correspondent) afford but a feeble idea of the perfect hell traps that are crowded every night within its grounds. It would seem as if the adversary were making a special effort to ruin young men; and the authorities have, alas! lent themselves fully to everything necessary to accomplish this. The rights to sell drink have realised an enormous sum; and each saloon seems to vie with the others to bait the best trap, and catch the greatest number of victims. The price that is paid for the rows of extremely pretty dark-eyed girls is no doubt a large one, and we should marvel if two out of every three young men passing these scenes, which always have wide open doors, could resist taking "but one glass." To many, those faces, smiling words, and delicate hands are, doubtless, irresistible.

We would say to those who have at heart work amongst young men in Glasgow: Spend one evening there from seven to ten, and see for yourselves. If you have been lukewarm in your effort to rid our land of the black death of to-day, you will be cold no longer. So bad is the drunkenness, as the hour for closing approaches, that what are called "chuckers out" have always to be on hand, to pitch outside young men whose swimming brain takes a noisy turn.

MISSIONARIES FOR CHINA.

Mr. B. Broomhall and a band of missionaries, some recently returned from China, and others soon to go to that country, were present at the monthly meeting for workers on Wednesday, last week, at the Home of Industry, Bethnal Green-road, E. Mr. H. W. Maynard presided, and after the brethren had delivered brief addresses, they and their ways were fervently committed to the keeping of the God of all grace.

In the course of some introductory remarks, Mr. Broomhall said that with nine who were now on their way to China, the workers to leave in November and December next will make up a body of between thirty and forty new missionaries, without counting the fourteen now on their way from America. Eight of the workers from the United States and Canada are ladies, and it is hoped that they are the first of many bands of labourers who will link China with America, and form the nucleus of a separate mission, whose operations shall be directed from the other side of the water.

Addresses were delivered by Messrs. F. W. Baller, G. W. Clarke, and S. R. Clarke, returned missionaries. It transpired that it was in connection with Miss Macpherson's work that Mr. G. W. Clarke was brought to the Lord twenty-two years ago. Messrs. E. Hunt, C. W. Lambert, T. Macoun, and T. Selkirk spoke briefly, and their interesting testimonies commended them to the warm sympathies of the meeting. Miss Oakshott and Miss Mackenzie also spoke, their utterances bearing witness to a true loyalty to the Master, whom they have determined to serve in the way they believe will best please Him.

Old and new missionaries alike besought the unceasing prayers of those who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, that the warmth of their first love may be sustained in the midst of the chilling surroundings of heathenism, and that faith and patience, and all needful grace, may be multiplied unto them, whilst far away from spiritually-minded friends and counsellors.

FAREWELL TO MISSIONARIES.—On one of the days whilst the Congregational Union were in the Conference at Nottingham, a meeting was held to bid farewell to sixteen missionaries of the London Missionary Society, fourteen of whom are returning to their spheres of labour and two going out for the first time.

DEACONESSES IN JERUSALEM.

This new movement is now fairly started. Four members of Mrs. Meredith's Association left for Jerusalem on Saturday, October 20, there to found a household similar to those in which they have lived and laboured many years in their London missions and institutions.

These are well known to the Christian public, and no doubt is felt that the last offshoot will bear fruit as abundantly as the oldest branch on the root, planted, in the Lord's name, by women moved by the Holy Ghost to care for the miserable mothers and helpless little ones of our great cities. Two more associates will go out at Christmas to join the Jerusalem House, and there are "more to follow," when organised work requires them, and when funds are provided. The Jerusalem centre is intended to be for educational and sick-nursing purposes. The founders are not novices, but women of experience in both these kinds of work.

Valedictory services were held on Tuesday, 16th inst., in Christ Church, Brixton, at three p.m., where Canon Hussey and several clergymen received the Association, and the Ven. Dr. Richardson, archdeacon of Surrey, gave an address to the sisters set apart for the new station. The Lord's Supper was observed by the congregation assembled to "commend them to God, and to the word of his grace."

In the evening a most interesting meeting took place in their own Conference Hall. Rev. H. Pelham Stokes, vicar of Isleworth, presided. Rev. Dr. Bullinger, of Walthamstow, Rev. N. S. Taylor, of Torquay, and Rev. I. Sydenham Dixon, of Park Chapel, Chelsea, and several ladies spoke. The head sister, Miss Ede, took leave of her friends with tender regard, and mentioned with gratitude Canon Hussey's ministrations, by which she and others had profited much.

Miss Lloyd, who is the organiser and leader of this undertaking, and remains at home to promote it, announced that the money received from friends for the Jerusalem House, with the contributions by the Association, had up to the starting met all expenses. She pleaded for liberal support for this extension of the Lord's service. The rule of the Women's Missionary Association, which provides that each worker going to definite service should be recognised by the church of which she is a member as set apart for the work, is very wise, and assures us that the labour of women in the Church of God is increasing in importance. We also strongly recommend the plan of sending out women in groups to work in foreign lands on the family system.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—We are desired to state that the paragraph in our last issue under this heading (sent to us by a correspondent) does not accurately represent the facts. The meeting held in Exeter Hall was only a preliminary one, called to discuss the basis of a projected future union. Nothing definite has yet been accomplished in the way of organic union between the Free Church of England and the Reformed Episcopal Church.

POOR ENGLISH IN PARIS.—Rev. J. Howard Gill, preaching recently in the Rue d'Aguesseau, made a statement respecting the "Victoria Home." For some years past, the preacher said, he had longed to see some provision made for their poor old English residents in Paris by way of a "Home," in which, when past work, they might end their days in comparative comfort and quiet. He was so impressed by the loneliness and misery of many, and so convinced that if a temporary Home could be opened its success would lead to the erection of a permanent one, that he had mentioned the subject to a few members of his congregation privately, stating his readiness to take a house himself for three years if he had a guarantee of £500. In eight days, to his surprise and joy, he had received nearly £800. He took a large house at Neuilly, standing in its own grounds, and containing some twenty good rooms. Before a month had passed he hoped that the temporary "Victoria Home" would have received its first inmates.—Record.

A COMMENTARY ON GALATIANS.*

This is an able and a timely book. The Epistle whose teaching it expounds and enforces is one needing attention in these days. The Galatian folly (chap. iii. 1—5) is repeating itself, as the author says, "in churches and communities that are untrue to the spiritual principles that gave them birth....Our fathers, Puritan and Scottish, staked their lives for the crown rights of Jesus Christ, and the freedom of faith....And now that the battle is won, there are those amongst their children who scarcely care to know what the struggle was about. Out of indolence of mind, or vanity of scepticism, they abandon at the bidding of priest or sophist the spiritual heritage bequeathed to them. Did they then suffer so many things in vain?...And can we, reaping the fruit of their faith and courage, afford in these altered times to dispense with the principles whose maintenance cost our forefathers so dear a price?"

The truth with which Paul met this folly in the first century needs emphasising in the nineteenth. This is the work which Professor Findlay has set himself to do, and has ably accomplished. His style is forcible and clear; his exposition is faithful, and his doctrine soundly evangelical, while he displays profoundest reverence for the truths which have evidently mastered him, and for the inspired words in which those truths are revealed. It is refreshing, for instance, to read concerning chap. iii. that it "is a masterpiece of exposition, unsurpassed in its keenness of insight, breadth of view, and skill of application."

The author understands his subject; and the fervour which possessed the Apostle when he wrote the Epistle has also possessed him, so that the book sparkles with allusions to present-day tendencies, and with practical applications of the truths with which he deals. Ritualism, advanced thought, and (whether intentionally or not) even the Down Grade Controversy, are touched skilfully and faithfully, as the exposition demands. The author's view of the world as still evil is well given on pages 31, 32; on page 232 baptism is described as a "descent into and rising from the symbolic waters," and this is declared to be "the normal and most expressive form of primitive baptism!" and this from a professor of Headingley Wesleyan College. The connection between faith and justifying righteousness is nowhere stated more lucidly than on pages 184-5. Even those who (like the reviewer) still incline to the old view of the imputed righteousness of Christ will be thankful that we have, at last, an understandable statement of the alternative view.

The method of the work is good. The Epistle is divided into five parts: the Prologue, i. 1—10; Personal History, i. 11 to ii. 21; Doctrinal Polemic iii. 1 to v. 12; Ethical Application, v. 13 to vi. 10; and Epilogue, vi. 11—18. Under these divisions, are grouped in all thirty chapters, in the course of which every verse in the Epistle receives faithful treatment. We are thankful for the book, and heartily commend it. None can read it without getting a higher appreciation of the present value of the Epistle with which it deals. W.

A CHRISTIAN CONVENTION is be held at Bradford on November 7, 8, and 9, for the deepening and strengthening of the spiritual life, similar to the gathering at Keswick. The following speakers have promised to attend: Revs. Evan Hopkins, William Haslam, G. C. Grubb, Dr. Elder Cumming, F. B. Meyer, J. Sloan, Colonel G. W. Oldham, Mr. H. F. Bowker, and Mr. W. Hind Smith. As Bradford, Leeds, Halifax, and Wakefield are all so close together, this Convention promises to be a great success, and it will probably become an annual institution.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, GIBRALTAR.—Mr. Charles Cook's meetings here ended last evening. Many soldiers and civilians have been gathered together during the week, and have heard the Gospel. One man, who keeps a tobacconist's shop, and always does a large Sunday trade, has, through attending the meetings, decided to discontinue his Sunday business. Mr. Cook has visited Tangier, Ceuta, and Tetuan. He left this morning for Malaga and Madrid. In his visits to the Morocco prisons he distributed Arabic and Spanish Testaments to the prisoners. H.

OBITUARY.

DR. ROBERT YOUNG, EDINBURGH.

After some months of enfeebled health, Mr. Robert Young, LL.D., well known as a Biblical and Oriental scholar, has passed away, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. Students of the Holy Scriptures have long held the name of the deceased in high regard, in gratitude for his "New Version of the Bible," "Analytical Concordance of the Bible," and many other works, all of them of great value and some of them of world-wide celebrity. Dr. Young's books were all of a distinctly useful kind, and they not only represent a grand life work, but afford abundant evidence of his lively hope in Christ.

LORD MOUNT-TEMPLE.

On Tuesday, last week, after having been ill for some time, Lord Mount-Temple expired at his residence, Broadlands, near Romsey, Hants, aged 77 years. The second son of the fifth Earl Cowper, his lordship served for some years in the Army, and, having entered upon political life, sat in the House of Commons from 1834 to 1880, when, in acknowledgment of his distinguished services in important public offices, he was elevated to the peerage. The deceased took much interest in philanthropic and charitable undertakings, and helped to secure the passage of the Criminal Law Amendment Bill through the House of Lords. He was a simple-hearted Christian man, of broad and warm sympathies, and both his aid and his counsel will be much missed on many hands. A daily contemporary has well said of the late peer: "He seemed to be more fitted by nature to take the chair at a meeting in Exeter Hall than to engage in the rough warfare of politics; and since he ceased to be a Minister of the Crown, at the close of Lord Russell's last Administration, he has devoted himself more and more to that 'labour of love' which is identified with the promotion of the welfare of the masses." Our issue of April 1, 1886, contained a portrait and sketch of Lord Mount-Temple.

ITALIAN SOLDIERS.—Signor Capellini, in a recent account of his work in the camp in Romagna, states: At Imola he was able to give away many books, and speak words of encouragement to the soldiers who came to him. After twenty years' experience he has learned, by looking them steadily in the face, to discern if they are sincere inquirers after truth or emissaries of priests or Jesuits, who are the bane of regiments, not only by their false teaching, but by insinuating themselves into the good opinion of their superiors, and telling of the Protestants, who, if the superior officer is fanatical, treats them harshly, and often unjustly. At Pesaro Signor Capellini held every evening large meetings in the public room of the hotel, and was able to convince some of the officers of the sincerity of his work, and induce them to accept Bibles. He returns from his arduous campaign full of thanks to God for the opportunities He has given Him to make known the truth, and full of hope that God will continue to bless his work, and through it not only the army, but the nation.—The Record.

A HIRING FAIR.—In a description of a Warwickshire hiring fair, a writer in The Daily News, after quoting some doggerel verses sung at the fair, says:—"The exhibitions are on a level with the poetry; and the public-houses, with their drink, their coarse ribald songs, and heated, feverish dancing, even more degrading and debasing. The police try to check and control the drunkenness, but with very partial success. The remedy for the evil clearly lies in the hands of two parties, the local authorities and the farmers. In is now possible for the latter to obtain their servants by better and more trustworthy means. There is no need for them to go out into the market-place; by so doing they are outraging the sentiment of the time, which is antagonistic to the dealing in men and women as in cattle; and they are debasing and degrading their own servants. The remedy in the possession of local authorities is equally effectual. The revenue derived from this source must be small, and its benefit inappreciable; the loss to public morals serious and abiding. The evils that these fairs do live after them. The only reform that will purge them from the excrescences of drunkenness, riot, and vice is to reform them out of existence."

INQUIRERS' PAGE.

THE WORKER'S HIRE.

Dear Sir,—May I suggest two reasons why Christian workers are so underpaid?

(1) Wealthy Christians, heads of Christian societies, &c., do not realise the actual amount of work for body and mind there must be, if Christian work is done by an earnest worker, and they want none other than earnest ones.

(2) They seem to think the devoted worker is so adequately repaid by the Master Himself that the responsibility is taken off their shoulders.

I leave your readers to consider whether there is any responsibility resting upon those to whom God has entrusted his money; and thank you for allowing The Christian to be the medium through which we incomeless workers may be heard.—Yours faithfully, Willing Worker.

IMMERSION.

Sir,—Permit me to say that I would be much obliged by your allowing me to inform such of your readers as believe that Rom. vi. 3, 4, proves believers' immersion to be the only baptism, that the "point" of analogy preached by Paul is not between our baptism and the burial and resurrection of Christ, but between our "death to sin" and rising to holiness and the "death and resurrection" of the Redeemer.

The freedom of believers from sin is expressed in ver. 2, by the figurative phrase "dead to sin." And the Apostle carries the figure consistently through, and says, that by our reception of Christ we become united to Him in such a manner as to die as He died, and to rise again as He rose. As He died unto sin (for its destruction) so do we, and as He rose to holiness of life so do we (ver. 6; Gal. ii. 20).

This glorious and fundamental truth is further exemplified by the figurative phrase "planted," "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection," and hence the terms "baptized into Jesus Christ," "crucified with Christ," "planted together in the likeness of his death," are absolutely expressive, not of a nominal or man-made union with Christ, a mere external or formal profession of the Gospel, but of the cordial reception of it, of which submission to the rite of baptism was the appointed expression. Consequently the "penitent thief," although not baptized with water, was buried with Christ by baptism on the cross; in other words, he was crucified with Christ. And, therefore, he was born of water and the Spirit (John iii. 5), or in other words, "By the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which was shed on Him abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour" (Titus iii. 5, 6). Finally, as the baptism preached by Paul (Rom. vi.; Col. ii.; Gal. ii. 27) indissolubly unites the baptized to the Redeemer, and absolutely saves the soul, it cannot be synonymous with water baptism, which leaves numbers of its recipients where it found them, viz., "in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity" (Acts viii. 23).—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

John Ennis.

Knacktopher, co. Kilkenny.

Mr. Ernest W. H. Langdale writes from Barnstaple, proposing several objections to immersion. He says:—What did the Apostles do when they found no water deep enough for baptizing people by putting them right under water? What did the three thousand people converted by the preaching of Peter do with their wet clothes after immersion? Do you think that the Eunuch whom Philip baptized would continue his journey with his wet clothes on? Is there any proof that the water into which Philip and the Eunuch went in was a river or a shallow pool by the wayside? Mr. Langdale also raises objections on the ground of our climate being colder than that of Palestine, and of our dressing customs being different from that of the believers in Apostolic times.

PRAYER AND FASTING.

Dear Sir,—In the interesting correspondence with reference to this subject, it has not, I think, been pointed out that the words, "This kind goeth not forth but by prayer and fasting," are absent from the Revised Version; although, in a marginal note, it is rightly stated that "many authorities, some ancient," insert the verse. This passage, however, is not the only instance when the subject was directly referred to by Christ; indeed, not only He Himself, but his Apostles, in common with all the brightest Old Testament saints, are actually recorded as having themselves fasted.

"A Bible Student," while agreeing with the principle, and rightly describing the nature of a true fast unto God, has, I think, somewhat overlooked the repeated references to the subject all through the Scriptures. Contenting ourselves with the New Testament only, may I give a few instances, quoting the actual words, as perhaps your readers have not all the opportunity of immediate reference.

First we have the account of our Saviour's fasting in the wilderness,* and, immediately after, the first utterance on the subject as regards others. It occurs in that Sermon on the Mount, which is for us and for all time. "When ye fast, be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance. But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thy head, and wash thy face; that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret...who shall reward thee openly."† It is true that the disciples, when complained of by those of John, were excused by Christ; but what did He add? "When the Bridegroom shall be taken away from them, then shall they fast in those days."‡ And that they actually did so is clear from the following passages: "They ("certain prophets and teachers," including Saul) "ministered to the Lord, and fasted"; and a little further on we hear: "When they (Barnabas and Paul) had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting."§ The church at Corinth is also thus advised: "that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer,"‖ proving most conclusively that the practice is both Scriptural and applicable to us also.

Perhaps the keynote of the question is in the verse which follows the last quotation, "I speak this by permission, and not of commandment"; but he who hath never thus followed the example of Christ and his Apostles can hardly, either for himself or others, determine its degree of helpfulness in the Christian life. "Experience teaches," as the old Latin proverb has it, though true it is that God leadeth no two souls alike, and for all it may not equally be a means of grace. Scriptural it most certainly is, when, as in the passages quoted, it is linked to earnest prayer. G. F. E. Scott.

LADIES' READING ROOM, Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, W.—We are requested to state that there is open all day a large and most comfortably furnished room, with papers, writing materials, library, cloak-room, and parcels office. The situation being so central, many ladies would gladly avail themselves of this room, did they know of its existence. In the evening it is utilised for the young women in business as a sitting-room. If more day occupants can be secured, it is hoped the expenses would be lightened, the charge of one penny being made for each visitor.

IN GEORGIA this year, says The Wesleyan Christian Advocate, the cities are barren of conversions. Macon excepted, there has been no revival of religion of any censequence in any city in the State. This has not been for the want of apparent effort. In some places meetings have been held, evangelists have been at work, even crowds have been gathered together to hear the Word. At Trinity, Atlanta, services were held for nearly a month. One of the most gifted evangelists of America preached day and night with rare cleverness, directness, and force, but with the same result as in other cities, no conversions or very few at least. In the small towns and on the circuits, however, some of the most wonderful meetings of this decade have been held. Conversions have been counted by the hundreds.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The late Mr. R. A. Proctor, the popular astronomical writer, was a devoted abstainer.

Mrs. Joseph Lucas, who is well known as one of the most successful lecturers on temperance, is slowly recovering from her recent severe illness.

At the Alliance Council meeting a resolution was passed condemning the transfer of the licensing power to any authority having a direct pecuniary interest in the granting of drink licences.

Rev. H. Price Hughes, in a recent address, said the time was coming when the chapels would have the front sites, and the public-houses be put in the back streets till we got rid of them altogether.

The five gentlemen who rank as the highest average scorers at cricket during the past season are all described as teetotalers. They are: W. W. Read, W. G. Grace, W. H. Patterson, T. C. O'Brien, and J. Eccles.

To commemorate the ninety-eighth anniversary of the birthday of Father Mathew, the Irish "Apostle of Temperance," the Catholic Total Abstinence League of the Cross held a special fête and demonstration on Monday at the Irish Exhibition at Olympia, London. The League numbers in London about 30,000 members, consisting of men, women, and children.

The Committee of the London Sunday School Union have issued a circular recommending ministers and Sunday-school superintendents to direct attention to the temperance question on Sunday, November 25. They have also arranged for a sermon to Sunday-school teachers by Mr. Horton, of Hampstead, in the new Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars-road, on Wednesday evening, November 14.

FOREIGN.

There were 1146 courts-martial last year in Bengal, and 392 were distinctly traceable to drunkenness.

The Calcutta Missionary Conference has voted to organise a temperance league. The Conference is in favour of local option.

The American papers state that a Chair of Temperance in the Catholic University of Washington will be endowed by the Catholic total abstinence societies.

Le Patriote, Belgium, in an article headed "Martyr Women," refers to the dreadful sufferings and murders of women and children owing to the drunken habits of their husbands or fathers.

A petition has been presented to King Oscar of Sweden, signed by 208,827 people, asking for the absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic in that country. The settlement is a royal prerogative, and the King can suppress the traffic whenever he chooses.

The Voice has a most interesting letter from Father Mahoney, of St. Paul, Minn, taking strong ground for prohibition, and expressing the opinion that multitudes of the Irish Catholics, as they come to understand its claims better, may be counted as steadfast adherents of the cause.

Mrs. Leavitt writes from Ceylon that there has been much more temperance work done in that country than in most places in India. Bands of Hope are common, and there are some total abstinence societies of adult men. An effort will be made to effect a union of these throughout the island, so that greater influence may be had upon the Government.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES

THE PACIFIC GARDEN MISSION is in a part of the city of Chicago given over almost entirely to saloons, pawnbrokers' shops, and where the people are of the lowest class. At the first meeting there were but sixty present. Little by little the attendance grew, until now there is an annual aggregate attendance of over 600,000.

THE WOMEN'S PRISON, St. Lazare, Paris, is visited systematically by some Protestant ladies. The President, Mdlle. Dumas, has long devoted sympathy, time, and money to this work. One trait will of itself illustrate her spirit. At eighty-two years of age (she is now ninety-six) she learned Spanish, that she might speak words of comfort to a young Andalusian who did not understand French. A well-deserved homage to her worth was paid at the beginning of October in the Paris Temps.

SANTEE INDIANS.—The Word Carrier states that three new out-stations are to be opened in the field of the Santee Indian Agency. They are to be known as the Moody, the Sankey, and the Northfield stations. Messrs Moody and Sankey have each provided for a building at each of these stations, and for the support of a teacher for a year. Two ladies, who were present at the meeting in Northfield where these gifts were made, have provided for the third station and its teacher.

A man who has recently been converted through the Salvation Army's instrumentality in Queensland has sent to headquarters, London, a sum of money with instructions to hand it to an employer from whom he robbed it sixteen years ago; he adds to it 50 per cent. interest, and also encloses a donation as a thankoffering for spiritual blessing.

CONTENTS.

Take ye away the Stone.
Love the Motive Power for Service.
Faith and Courage.
Faith Rewarded.
Enthusiasm.
Power of Little Things.
She hath Done what She Could.
Who is my Neighbour?
Ye are the Light of the World.

APPENDIX—Elihu Burritt on "THE GOOD SAMARITAN."

"Urgent exhortations to Christians to rouse themselves to active service for Christ. The book contains also Elihu Burritt's striking address on 'The Good Samaritan,' a paper well worth reprinting."
The Friend.

"Appeals forcibly to the idlers, to be up and doing, and proves, we think most conclusively, that there is work for all to do, and that God can use any instrument He pleases to do His work. All who are anxious to get to work for God should read it, because they will find in its pages, much to encourage, and many useful hints."

ADDITIONAL

Sacred Songs & Solos,

WITH STANDARD HYMNS,

COMPILED AND SUNG BY

IRA D. SANKEY.

309 HYMNS and TUNES; IN ONE VOLUME.

"This Volume of ADDITIONAL SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS includes a very winsome assortment of entirely fresh pieces, gleaned from authors and composers on both sides of the sea, with an excellent selection of old standards. There are no fewer than 309 hymns and tunes, being not so very far short of the number in the well-known 'SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS.' The two volumes are quite independent of each other; and nobody who appreciates the first will fail to obtain the second."—Christian Leader.

"There are 309 pieces in this volume, among which some old favourites will be recognised, while the new ones are worthy to take their places beside them."—Hampshire Advertiser.

"These songs and melodies are equal in sweetness to former ones; and are well adapted for family use and for social means of grace."

"Is a nicely got-up volume, of good, Scriptural, and plain teaching as to spiritual life, its impartation, its enemies, and its friends, by Mr. Whittle, an American evangelist, well known in this country. The book was designed originally for those led to Christ by the Author's ministry, and is refreshing, stimulating, and replete with anecdote."—Irish Baptist Magazine.

"It is a thoroughly characteristic book, by a man who is evidently on fire with holy enthusiasm."
The Christian Leader.

"Just the book to put into the hands of young converts. The title aptly expresses the contents, which are both spiritual and instructive."—Railway Signal.

"We heartily thank the Rev. J. Macpherson for his well-written, graphic, and telling life of this 'CHRISTIAN HERO.' It is a book to be read by all, but especially adapted to do good to the working classes."—The Baptist Messenger.

"From first to last the book is full of interest, and valuable lessons from the life of this humble but honoured servant of Christ. His noble though tragic death, while saving a child from drowning, lends a deep additional interest to the record of his brief but useful career upon earth."—Word and Work.

"TELL JESUS:" Recollections of Emily Gosse. By ANNA SHIPTON.

"This book presents us with notices of a life spent in loving, intimate, and uninterrupted communion with a personal Lord. 'Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God'—is an injunction which in that life was literally and strictly obeyed. . . . . We have read the book with deep interest. We would that all our practical Atheists and Christian Pantheists might read it and be instructed; that indolent professors might read it and be quickened; and that suffering saints might read it and be comforted."—The Christian Times.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

INTERESTING CASE OF C. GODDARD, BANDSMAN in the ARMY—POONA (INDIA).

(Name and address—"Private C. Goddard, No. 1380, 2nd Battalion D.C.I., Poona, Bombay.")

I received a full statement of this patient's case, and sent him advice and medicine in August of last year.

His mother had died of Consumption. His own illness commenced with hæmorrhage; spitting of blood and phlegm (mingled) occurred at frequent intervals. Pains in the chest came on, with hectic fever and heart palpitations. For nine months his strength had been gradually declining, and there had been loss of flesh all over the body. The sight was also affected; spirits very low; nights very restless, &c., &c.

Within two months I received a very favourable report of progress. The patient writes:—"Your valuable medicine and advice has made a wonderful improvement on me. All pain has left me. My chest is filling out and my lungs are stronger."

And so letters full of grateful thanks, and reporting gradual improvement, followed until, in December, he writes:—"I must tell you with great joy I am a totally different man to what I was four months ago. Also young Morris, to whom you sent medicine with mine, is doing capitally."

Writing me in April of this year, he says:—"I give God the praise for raising me from an untimely grave, to which I was fast hastening. I am thankful I was directed to you. I have told my friends in England to do all they can to recommend your treatment, and if anybody wants information they can write to me, and I will answer any letter, &c., &c.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Personalia.

Dr. R. W. Dale, it is stated, is to contribute to The Contemporary Review a series of articles on Australia.

Canon Wilberforce has temporarily broken down from overwork, and has gone to Constantinople for a change.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe reached Liverpool on Saturday last, after some weeks' absence in Canada and the United States.

Mr. Howard Livesey, in a letter to The Times, strongly advocates corporal punishment as "a crime cure." He asserts that imprisonment has failed as a preventive of crime.

Lieut. Wissman, the German explorer, looks upon the breaking up of the Arab power and slave trade in Africa as the burning problem of the immediate future, and as preceding all other questions of exploration or civilisation.

Mr. Alderman Whitehead, Lord Mayor-elect, has resolved to abandon, at the forthcoming mayoral procession on Nov. 9, all extraneous attractions of the allegorical and circus element. The amount saved he will distribute among the poor.

Mr. James B. Wookey is effectively advocating in Scotland the claims of Dr. Barnardo's Homes. A great gathering listened to an address by Mr. Wookey on the work of the Homes in the Free Assembly Hall, Inverness, on Sunday week.

Mr. C. E. Faithfull is now resident in Marseilles, Chemin St. Barnabe, 35. For several winters past he has been located at Nice, but the exigencies of the work among seamen in Marseilles have caused him to move back to that city.

Miss Macpherson and Miss Stock arrived in London on Saturday night, after a rough passage from Canada. This is, we believe, the fortieth time Miss Macpherson has crossed the Atlantic on her errands of mercy and goodwill. We are thankful to know that this last expedition has been as useful and beneficent in its results as any of the preceding.

Mr. George Muller.—Last week we gave, on the authority of an Indian paper, some particulars as to Mr. Müller's future movements. We are desired to state that, according to latest accounts, he had not included a visit to China or Japan in his arrangements. Since leaving England in August, 1887, he has only visited Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, and New South Wales.

Dr. Thain Davidson's monthly sermon to young men in Colebrooke-row Church, Islington, on October 15, was founded on the character of Hiram, the "worker in brass," the text being 1 Kings vii. 14. The discourse was replete with information and sound counsel. He was listened to by an overflowing congregation consisting mainly of young men, and the discourse is reported at length in The Islington Gazette.

Rev. George C. Needham is expected to arrive at Manchester on October 23, and, as we have already stated, will hold Gospel services in that city. He begins a three months' mission in Dublin, on November 4. In addition to his work of evangelism, Mr. Needham gives a course of Bible lectures, carefully prepared for the further establishment of Christians in Bible doctrine.

Lord Brabourne (says a daily paper) seems to entertain a profound respect for the "noble art." His lordship presided at the hearing of a case at the Canterbury Quarter Sessions in which two men, named Roberts and Hayes, were charged with having been engaged in a prize-fight. Though the charge was proved, the Bench merely bound the defendants over to keep the peace for six months, and declined even to make an order upon them to pay the costs of the prosecution. "Kent, which claims the honour of having been the birthplace of English Christianity, is now likely to become the favourite retreat of English blackguardism.'

Rev. John McNeill.—Our sketch of this earnest and striking preacher was eagerly read in Edinburgh, and has deepened the interest taken in him by the citizens. On Sunday evening the crowd that assembled at the Circus was greater than ever. The service begins at half past six; but at five the door was besieged, and at a quarter to six the building was crammed with an audience that must have numbered nearly 4000, while hundreds more were turned away. Mr. McNeill preached a long and impressive sermon from the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, in the course of which he animadverted on certain opinions maintained before the late Church Congress.

Mr. Denham Smith.—There is no change in Mr. Denham Smith's state; the improvement lately noticed is still upheld, but his strength does not, as yet, permit him to leave his bed.

General Gordon's statue in Trafalgar-square, was unveiled last week. "The panels represent four virtues, in all of which Gordon shared so largely: Fortitude and Faith, Charity and Justice. Gordon, in undress uniform and bare-headed, stands in an attitude of profound meditation. His chin rests upon his right hand; the left hand supports the right arm, and holds the famous Bible; while the almost equally famous short cane, with which he won his battles in China, is thrust under the arm. The attitude is thus extremely characteristic, and the figure so exhibited is unmistakably the figure of a hero."

Mr. Edward W. Thomas, in a letter to The Times on the East-end tragedies, urges that increased encouragement should be given to moral aggressive agencies designed for domiciliary visitation, especially on the lines of the City Mission, Scripture Readers' Society, and Midnight Meeting Movement. Long experience in rescue work has confirmed him in the opinion that such centres of the fallen and criminal classes should be broken up. The reclaimed, of any age, should be removed into entirely new localities. Reformation in such cases depends almost entirely upon the breaking up of evil associations and surroundings. When extreme poverty forces any unfortunate man or woman to locate themselves in the wretched common lodging-houses abounding in Flower and Dean-street, Thrawl-street, &c., demoralisation inevitably and rapidly follows.

The Lord Chancellor presided on Monday night at the annual meeting of the Oxford Auxiliary of the British and Foreign Bible Society. In his address he referred to the spread of evil literature. Was it wonderful, he said, that, notwithstanding the widespread diffusion of the Word of God, the world, the flesh, and the devil still maintained their old warfare, and that they were still called upon to exert the best of their powers, both of mind and body, to fight the good fight? They knew that the sort of garbage recently described by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., would not find entrance into any decent family; but books attacking the institution of marriage, which were more mischievous because more insidious, were seen on drawing-room tables. What struck him as most remarkable was the extraordinary and inconceivable ignorance of the critics on these subjects. In conclusion, his lordship urged the importance of the diffusion of the Bible and pure literature.

Appeals.

Howard-street Mission (New-road, Wandsworth-road, S.W.).—The memorial stone of the new soup kitchen was laid last Saturday afternoon. We still need £150, that the building of the class-rooms and enlargement of the hall may be proceeded with.—H. A. Loames, hon. sec.

Fuel for the Poor.—We are now planning the winter campaign in East London. Whilst coals are still cheap, we are desirous, by the help of generous friends, of placing again a substantial order to be carefully distributed among the starving but deserving sick and unemployed poor during the cold winter days. Will your readers please help us again?—(Rev.) J. W. Atkinson, 308, Old Ford-road, London, E.

Marylebone Medical Mission.—The Committee have obtained the lease of a large house and hall, which are sorely needed for this growing Mission. The new premises will be entered in January next, and about £500 is required to meet incidental expenses—the purchase of lease, repairs, furniture, &c. Contributions will be thankfully received by Dr. R. Chambers, 43, Carlisle-street, Edgware road, N.W.

Halfpenny Dinners.—At Tolmer's-square Church Institute it is intended to resume, on Oct. 29, the work of giving halfpenny dinners to poor children; 27,000 children were fed during sixteen weeks of last winter. They received a hearty meal of soup or Irish stew, with a large slice of bread and jam. The children are selected by the Board School masters and mistresses in the district, who are at liberty to give tickets to those who cannot pay the halfpenny. Contributions in kind or money will be gladly welcomed by Mrs. Hastings, 20, Oakley-square, N.W.

BRAZIL.—The opportunity for Christian missions in Brazil, says The Presbyterian Observer, is very extraordinary. The people are without confidence in the Romish priests. The attitude of the Brazilian mind, high and low, is largely either of disgust or of indifference. Everywhere the Protestant evangelist can have an assembly at a few hours' notice. Everywhere he can have a nucleus of a church after a little loving and right teaching of the truth. A hundred additional missionaries could be set at work at once.

Letters to the Editor.

MUSIC HALLS.

Dear Sir,—I entirely controvert "Augustin Wellington's" statements in your last issue about London music-halls. He must have written from imagination, or he has been wildly misinformed.

So far from singers of lewd and disgusting songs being "dismissed or ejected by the proprietor or his acting manager," many of them, male and female (and some individual artistes in particular), appear night after night on the same boards, singing the same offensive songs, interspersed with the same indecent remarks; and all this is as true of the grandest hall as of the poorest, and often more so.—Yours truly, Experience.

Dear Sir,—In reply to Mr. Augustin Wellington's letter, which appeared in your last week's issue, I beg to state that the statistics given by me were authentic and published in the daily papers at the commencement of this year.

Mr. Wellington, it appears, is an upholder of music-halls, and would have your readers believe that they are fit and proper places for young men to patronise as a place of amusement. My experience, like his, has been limited to the thirty he speaks of. I re-affirm what I stated in my previous letter, that music-halls have a demoralising influence upon the habits of young men. I have been a good deal amongst young men, and have not failed to notice the terrible effect music-hall going has had upon their lives.

I did not say that gambling, card-sharping, blasphemy, betting, &c., were allowed. My remarks implied that men of an atheistical turn of mind would find an entertainment suited to their own taste. Speaking of "gay women," Mr. Wellington says that no soliciting is done. "There are none so blind as those that won't see." I myself have seen plenty of soliciting in these so-called "first-class music-halls," with no apparent effort on the part of the authorities to stop it.

As for songs, I have (I regret to say) listened to many immoral ones, or those which have no alternative but to imply immorality. I could mention many. To keep away from an atmosphere of impurity, young men must keep away from music-halls.—Yours sincerely, E. O.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. H. M. Barnett writes that he has had blessed times in open-air preaching lately at Tunbridge Wells, Brighton, Lewes, Ramsgate, and elsewhere.

Mr. Steedman, of Edinburgh, while on holidays, conducted thirteen meetings at Culross, N.B. They were felt by many to be cheering and stimulating, and they were attended by signs of blessing to some "without."

Islington, N.—A week's mission lately held at All Saints' School, Muriel-street, Islington, was much blessed by God. Two or three students from St. John's Hall, Highbury, addressed the children. The meetings were well attended, and many children remained for the after-meetings.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is conducting a three-weeks' mission in the Baptist Tabernacle, Altrincham, Cheshire. Much blessing is attending the effort. Infidels and the non-church-going part of the community are being reached. The mission closes on November 4, after which Mr. Bradlaugh goes to Ledbury.

Mr. James Rawlinson, Chowbent, writes to us respecting a work of which he is the mainspring: I have good news of success among the men and women here we seek to benefit—so many and such real changes as anyone may see; such a nice band of new converts. There are now five or six out part of the day among the thousands in darkness; without light, because they will not attend the places they are invited to attend. God has been very good, indeed, with the means. If I had strength and time, I could write all night blessed instances to show how powerful the word is when applied by the Spirit of love and power. My dear daughter, over twenty, is out among the people every day, and is well received.

Rev. W. Haslam's forthcoming engagements are, Nov. 2, St. James's Church, Hatcham, S.E.; Nov. 17, Plumstead, Kent.

CHILDREN'S STORY BOOKS.

Hindered and Helped (Religious Tract Society) is an excellent story for working boys, and one that will help them to start in the upward path.

Marching Orders (Religious Tract Society) tells of a lad who dared to do right at the cost of misapprehension and trouble, but whose fidelity was vindicated by ultimate victory.

Dorothy Tresilis (Religious Tract Society), the heroine of this story that bears her name, had to bear the yoke in her youth, but took it up bravely, and in due time reaped the reward.

Gilly Flower, by the author of "Honour Bright" (Wells Gardner & Co.) recounts the sayings and doings of some young people, without any attempt at sermonising or even "drawing a moral."

Mrs. Morse's Girls, by M. E. Kenney (Religious Tract Society) is an admirable tale illustrative of Sunday-school work in America, and showing how a wise earnest teacher won the whole of her class for Jesus.

Bo-Peep (3s. 6d. Cassell & Co.) is rich in simple tales and sketches for the very young, with plenty of graphic pictures—a feast of good and entertaining things that will last the winter through, and will bear re-reading many times over.

Two Enthusiasts, by Evelyn E. Green (Religious Tract Society) traces the careers of two ladies who set out with different ideals of life. It teaches the needed lesson that true and lasting success can only come through the effacement of self, and devotion to the good of others.

MESSRS. JAMES NISBET & CO.

Among the recent publications of this house are: "A Song o' Sixpence" for the Bairns. By J. Jackson Wray. 1s. A quaint story by a popular author, and one sure to charm those for whom it is written.—The Gate in Park Lane. By the Hon. Gertrude Boscawen 1s. 6d. A picture of rural life, embodying a simple story of courtship and marriage.—Freemen or Slaves. By Ellen A. Bennett. 1s. 6d. Total abstinence from intoxicating drink is enforced in a tale replete with incident and interest.—The Trivial Round. By Sarah M. S. Clarke (Mrs. Pereira). 2s. 6d. Village life, centring in the good vicar and his family, is well and vivaciously described, and many important principles conduct of indicated.—Our Neighbour, Widow Yates. By Grace Stebbing. 2s. 6d. With a good purpose, and to really excellent effect, degraded and unhappy life is here contrasted with that in which the fear of God and the good of man is ever kept in view.—Ready, aye Ready! By Agnes Giberne. 2s. 6d. A high religious tone characterises this book, which is illustrative of the title motto.—Her Life's Work. By Lady Dunboyne. 3s. 6d. This story is to a large extent in eulogy of church work; the activities of the foundress of a church, and the wife of a clergyman, are set out in great detail.—The Middy and the Moors. By R. M. Ballantyne. 3s. 6d. This is a capital tale of adventure, by a deservedly popular author. The scene is laid in Algiers, and to some extent the tale is founded on facts; the illustrations are some of them taken from drawings made on the spot.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Life of George M. Murphy, "the friend of the people," by Annie Taylor, is now published in a cheap form. 2s. 6d. Elliot Stock. Mr. Murphy was a man whose devoted zeal for the good of the toiling masses deserves to be held in remembrance. We trust that at this popular price the book may be widely circulated.

Daily Food for the Inner Man. 1s. 6d. The English Publishing Company, 73, Ludgate-hill. The reflections in this volume are said to have been "gathered from various sources, chiefly anonymous and little known." The compiler has exercised only poor judgment, and the book lacks any special characteristic to commend it to the Christian public.

In the Morning. By Rev. George Everard. 1s. Nisbet. A book to delight the souls of those who fear the Lord and think upon his name. It contains a Scripture prayer and a meditation thereon for each day in the month. We trust the book will find its way into the hands of many, and be blessed to their encouragement in the life of faith.

Heart and Thought Memories of Eastern Travel. By T. Holmes. Bolton: J. W. Gledsdale, Deansgate. This is a diary of wanderings in Egypt, Palestine, Syria, and the Levant. A well-travelled and widely-read man, the author here shows himself a keen observer, as well as a facile writer. A large amount of information is brought together in an interesting manner, and the book is likely to prove helpful to inexperienced travellers in the East.

The Origin, Progress, and Establishment of the Kingdom of God in the World. By Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D. 2s. 6d. R. Banks & Son. We are quite unable to follow much of the exegesis of this book, whereby the identity of Great Britain with Israel is ingeniously set forth; but we freely admit that in thus briefly tracing the history of God's dealings with mankind, the author maintains a reverent spirit and pursues an earnest purpose.

St. Basil the Great on the Holy Spirit. 2s. Religious Tract Society. This is another volume of the very useful Christian Classics Series. It has been translated, and edited with analysis and notes, by Rev. George Lewis, and constitutes a protest which might well be raised at the present day, when the plain teachings of the Scriptures as to the Holy Spirit are not only openly denied by some, but by very many professing Christians are practically rejected.

Bible Class Notes. By Old Christopher. Jarrold & Sons. This is a "second edition, revised and enlarged" of a very useful book. The notes cover the first seven chapters of the Gospel according to Luke; and while they are full enough to well open up the text, they are neither laboured nor prolix. The author has well studied the many subjects arising in the chapters, and he pleasantly communicates information and conveys spiritual thoughts to his readers.

The Happiest Half-hours. By Rev. Fred. Langbridge. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. These "Sunday Talks with the Children" are from the pen of one thoroughly in sympathy with the youthful mind, and well qualified to be its guide into paths of instruction and wisdom. The second half of the book pleasantly unfolds many lessons suggested by the course of the seasons. The book, which is profusely illustrated, will form an invaluable addition to the nursery library.

How to Help. By Mrs. G. S. Reaney. 2s. Nisbet. This is a volume of sketches dealing with life amongst the masses in the East-end of London. The woes and needs of a large portion of the inhabitants of the metropolis are dwelt upon with much tenderness. The cause of the tramcar men, and the establishment of convalescent homes for the poor, are also advocated with great earnestness. While likely to prove helpful to many Christian workers in large cities, the book will likewise interest a wide circle of readers.

A Manual of Vigilance Law. By Wyndham A. Bewes. 2s. 6d. National Vigilance Association, 267, Strand. Though not professing to be exhaustive, this handbook is remarkably comprehensive, and concise withal. Secretaries of Vigilance Societies will find it very useful. The author's endeavour has been to leave no department untouched, and at the same time to state the subject in a practical and simple form, so that a man of ordinary intelligence, but without legal training, may be able, in emergency, to initiate prosecutions against offenders.

Louisa of Prussia and other Sketches. By Rev. John Kelly. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. The lives of the eminent women recorded in this volume are deserving of remembrance for their personal worth and Christian character. Besides the queen named in the title, the book tells much that is interesting of Princess William of Prussia, Princess Charles of Hesse, and the Poetess Queen of Roumania ("Carmen Sylva"), each of whom furnishes a bright example to women of every degree. The illustrations are quite worthy of the book in point of beauty.

Conference Hill Studies. This is the title given to the report, just published, of the addresses delivered at the Believers' Meeting for Bible Study, at Niagara-on-the-Lake, in July last. The subjects include the Inspiration of the Scriptures, the Holy Spirit, the Person and Work of Christ, Christian Life, the Hope of the Church, Last Things, and Antichrist. These and other themes are treated from various standpoints by well-known speakers from Canada and the United States, and the whole forms a goodly body of teaching on topics of practical as well as doctrinal importance. (50 cents. Willard Tract Depository, Toronto.)

Infidelity: Its Cause and Cure. By Rev. D. Nelson, M.D. 2s. Routledge. It is hoped that this well-known book has a career of great usefulness before it in this new and handy form. It is not a compilation of the evidences of Christianity, but a powerful recommendation of the Bible to those who now oppose it in ignorance of its teachings. Infidels are here met on their own ground by one who formerly fraternised with them, and the eloquent logic of personal experience gives force to every argument.

The Voice of the Year. By A. S. Lamb. James Nisbet & Co. Though Mr. Lamb's style is somewhat too didactic and forensic, it has the merit of plainness. He believes he has a case, and sets himself with all businesslike directness to prove it. He brings the light of a powerful Protestant intellect to bear on the present religious condition of England. While there will be those who will regard the view he takes as gloomy and pessimistic, we venture to think that many will own the force and justness of his remarks.

Upward and Onward: A Thought Book for the Threshold of Active Life. By S. W. Partridge. 2s. 6d. Partridge & Co. This is a new edition. The thought of the work is clear and the expression terse. As a book of poetry, "Upward and Onward" has true poetic merit; not the measures, but the sense being the dominating principle. One invaluable feature is the nervous compactness of the style, which makes it excellent reading. The book is wholesome, stimulating, and readable throughout, and deserves a wide circulation.

The Women Friends of Jesus. By Rev. H. C. McCook, D.D. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. In treating as types of character the women who ministered to the comfort of the Lord in the days of his humiliation, this well-known author has produced a book which is not only eminently readable, but abounds in instruction and sound advice. The devout services of the earliest women disciples are delineated in such a way as to point lessons which may well be borne in mind by Christian women to-day. In filling in some of the sketches the author has now and then exposed himself to criticism, but for all that his book is singularly a very useful one.

Through the Shadows: A Test of the Truth. By Erskine Moir. Elliot Stock. This tale is written, like many others in these days, in the interests of Universalism. The author has considerable descriptive power, and wields a facile and cultured pen; but we cannot otherwise speak in commendation of the book. The root fallacy concerns the nature of sin. That there is such a thing as the condemnation of God on account of sin has no place in the writer's mind. It is needless to say that Mr. Moir, having substituted his own fancies for facts on vital points, proceeds to a triumphant conclusion. The book will please lovers of sentiment more than lovers of God.

The Reformation in France. By Richard Heath. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. This is the third volume of the Church History series, and traces the subject from the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, in 1685, to the incorporation of the Reformed Churches into the State in 1802. The story is told with much lucidity and vigour, and portraits are given of some of the outstanding characters of the period. In the concluding chapter, Mr. Heath points out that there is now no legal impediment to France becoming all that the most spiritually minded amongst her people may desire. The State has done its part, and opened its gates to the Protestants: will the Reformed Churches now take the great position to which they have been so manifestly called?

Morning and Evening. 1s. Religious Tract Society. A dainty booklet containing stanzas from Keble's well-known hymns, beautifully illustrated.

Azazil: or, In the King's Garden, by Norah M. Wood (G. Stoneman), is an allegorical narrative designed to set forth the beauty of the Christian life.

The Suppressed Diary of the Late Emperor Frederick has been published from the office of The Pall Mall Gazette as an "extra," at 3d. It professes to be "the only complete and unabridged edition."

The Blessed Life, envelope tracts, by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, are worthy of high commendation. The lessons conveyed are all of supreme value. The tracts are eighteen in number. 9d. per packet. Woolmer.

A little penny book issued from the Northgate House Mission Rooms, Carnarvon, contains an address by Miss Fannie Waters descriptive of her conversion from the spiritual darkness and unrest of Ritualism, and her consecration to happy Christian service. Its circulation must prove helpful to those who have not reached the land of light and peace.

Sunday Afternoon, November 4.

THE RIGHT HAND OF GOD.

Psalms viii. and xxiv.; Heb. ii. 6—8.

THE exaltation of the Lord Jesus is set forth by St. Paul as a consequence of his humiliation and obedience to death (Phil. ii. 6—9). The glorious throne is a result of the ignominious cross. The right hand of God is the place of honour, and is therefore a fitting place for the Lord Jesus. Man gave Him a place in the manger (Luke ii. 7); God gives Him a place on the eternal throne. Psalm viii. shows us the dignity of man. Though most insignificant in stature as compared with the heavenly bodies, he is nevertheless superior to them as an object of Divine regard. Man has been placed over the brute creation (Ps. viii. 6—8), and his Creator has come to him that he might have fellowship with Him (ver. 4). There is still greater honour for him in the exaltation of "the Man Christ Jesus," who as man's substitute and representative is exalted to the throne of God (Ps. viii. 5, Heb. ii. 9). The glory and honour designed for man can only be his portion through union with Jesus Christ (Rev. iii. 21). Ps. xxiv. gives us some precious teaching respecting the exaltation of Jesus as the King of Glory; and Heb. ii. 6—9 shows how Old Testament foreshadowings of Messiah's glory are being realised by the Lord Jesus as He sits in majesty upon the throne of God. The right hand of God may be regarded as—

(1) THE PLACE OF PURITY (Ps. xxiv. 3, 4).—He who ascends to this hill of the Lord must have—(a) Clean hands.—The hands of Jesus bear the marks of sin's punishment (Zech. xiii. 6), but not of its defilement. Sinful man needs to cleanse his hands (Jas. iv. 8). "Not my feet only," said Peter, "but also my hands" (John xiii. 9). Pilate washed his hands (Matt. xxvii. 24), but that washing could not remove the stain of his guilt. The blood Pilate shed, and that alone, can cleanse from sin (1 John i. 7). If we would come before the throne where Jesus is, we must have that cleansing (Rev. vii. 13, 14). (b) A pure heart.—God weighs thoughts and motives as well as actions. "Blessed are the pure in heart" (Matt. v. 8). Jesus was all pure within. Comp. "in Him is no sin" (1 John iii. 5). The appearance of holiness in the outward life is a sham if there is no corresponding purity of heart (Matt. xxiii. 25, 26). Comp. David's reference to "his inward parts" (Ps. li. 6). (c) Freedom from sinful ambition.—Most lives have their ambitions; that of Jesus was to do the will of God (Ps. xl. 8). There was no lifting up of his soul unto vanity. See how lightly He esteemed worldly honours (Luke iv. 5—8; John vi. 15). The devil would have made Him a king, and the world would have made Him a king, but He aspired to a Kingship they could not give (John xviii. 36). The kingdoms He would not receive from Satan and the world are his by a better title (Rev. xi. 15). "The earth is the Lord's" (Ps. xxiv. 1). (d) The love of truth.—"Not sworn deceitfully." Jesus came to be a witness of the truth (John xviii. 37), and He was the embodiment of truth ("I am...the truth," John xiv. 6). His truthfulness has been proved by experience. "All" kinds or classes (John xii. 32; Mark xiv. 16). Falsehood cannot be admitted into the kingdom of God (Rev. xxii. 15).

(2) THE PLACE OF POWER (Ps. xxiv. 8).—"The Lord strong and mighty." Comp. "the right hand of power" (Mark xiv. 62). From the throne of God proceeds (a) Saving power (Acts ii. 33).—(b) Restraining power (Acts ix. 4, 5).—(c) Preaching power (Acts iv. 33).—(d) Sustaining power (Acts vii. 56; 1 Pet. i. 5).—(e) Purifying power (Eph. i. 19, iii. 7—20).

(3) THE PLACE OF AUTHORITY.—Comp. 1 Pet. iii. 22. Note the subjection of angels (Rev. xxii. 16), of authorities (Acts viii. 27), and powers (1 Thess. ii. 8, 9). The Lord Jesus is the supreme authority in his Church (Matt. xxiii. 8, 10).

(4) THE PLACE OF HONOUR.—The humiliation of Jesus finds its sequel in his exaltation. See how the Father delights to put honour upon the Son. He did this at his incarnation (Heb. i. 6)—at his baptism (Matt. iii. 17)—at his ascension (1 Tim. iii. 16), and will do through all eternity (Rev. v. 13). We also should honour Him by giving Him the place of exaltation in our hearts (1 Pet. iii. 15). We should honour Him in our seasons of joy (Rev. xix. 7), and of trial (1 Pet. iv. 14).

(5) THE PLACE OF JOY.—"Pleasures for evermore" (Ps. xvi. 11). Believers will be sharers of his joy (Matt. xxvi. 29).

DEFEAT AT AI.

THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL COMMITTED A TRESPASS (ver. 1).—"The verb here used means 'to act covertly,' and so 'to act treacherously, and commit a breach of faith.'"—Sp. Com. THE ACCURSED THING: rather, "in the devoted thing" (R.V.).—The word used = to shut in; then to shut in from common to entirely sacred uses; so, to consecrate. But, as animals thus consecrated were slain, the word came to mean to doom, to devote to destruction. The entire spoil of Jericho was "devoted," i.e., set apart for God; and so, according to his express command, everything was to be destroyed except the gold, silver, brass, and iron, which was to be put into the tabernacle treasury. Achan's sin was specially aggravated by this fact: it was sacrilege, a robbery from God Himself. There is a remarkable parallel between Achan's sin and that of Ananias and and Sapphira (Acts v.). In each case it was the first great sin found among the people of God after their entrance on a new experience of triumph. In each case, too, it was covetousness, secret covetousness, resulting in robbery of God, carried out by hypocrisy, miraculously discovered, and visited with swift and fearful judgment.

AI: identified by Van de Velde, with Tell-el-Haja, an isolated hill, thirty-five minutes east of Bethel, and fifteen to twenty miles west of Jericho. It was 3000 ft. above Jericho, and commanded both the road to Jerusalem and the main road running north and south through the country. THEY ARE BUT FEW (ver. 3).—The population was 12,000 (viii. 25): the fighting force 3000. Israel's defeat was due not to the might of Ai, but to the mightiness of Achan's sin. This verse suggests great presumption and over-confidence. The force detached to take Ai was manifestly inadequate. Probably they felt sure of another miracle, and so did not trouble to make ordinary provision for victory. Further, there is no word about their consulting God. It looks very much as though they chose their own way and plans, taking his help for granted. This presumption must be considered as a direct result of secret sin among them. The Lord being offended, his Spirit's work in their hearts was hindered. THEY FLED BEFORE THE MEN OF AI.—Joshua's first and only defeat. "Sin made Israel weak." They had both Ai and God against them.

AND JOSHUA SAID, ALAS, O LORD GOD, &c.—Though there is much sinful despondency and unbelief in this prayer, there is much else there that is good and godly. In form it resembles the rebellious complaints of Israel (Num. xx. 3—5), but the spirit and motive is different:—(1) "Joshua was actuated (1) by pity for the people (ver 7); (2) by the generous shame of a soldier whose forces are defeated (ver. 8); and (3) by jealousy for the name of Jehovah (ver. 9). (2) He did not altogether lose faith, though his faith trembled. (3) He humbly sought to know and do the will of God; whereas, the rebellious Israelites defied it."—Johnston. DISSEMBLED ALSO.—See Acts v. 1, 2. All sins are connected, but none more so than stealing and lying. He who steals must be ready either to lie or to confess. Achan pretended to obey at the time he was disobeying, and so lied to God, to Israel, and, no doubt, to certain neighbours in particular. Observe the stress laid by God on this dissembling.

LESSONS.

(1) Unexpected defeat often follows a great victory, especially in things moral and spiritual, where our strength is humble trust in God only, and self-confidence of greatest danger. Apply the case to boy who bravely and prayerfully overcomes some great temptation, but falls soon after before a very little one.

(2) There is always a good reason for such defeat.—Therefore (1) do not lose heart, but (2) humble yourself before God as Joshua did.

(3) The cause of defeat is in ourselves.—Public shame has its root in secret sin. Therefore, we should not doubt God, or his kindness towards us; neither should we fear the enemy: we should look to ourselves.

(4) A fearful warning against secret sin.—There is great practical unbelief in the shamefulness of secret sin. Most men are not ashamed of sin till it is found out, and others cry shame upon them. All are tempted to think too little of sin where there is no open scandal, and to judge perhaps too harshly when scandal arises. It is of great importance that teachers should enforce with all clearness and emphasis the lesson of God's holiness; how real sin is to Him, whether secret or open, how the judgment of men is nothing to Him, and how He has ordained that the consequences of secret sin shall be as real and terrible in the end as those of open sin, "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall find mercy."

(5) Secret sin brings public shame.—It did so here; also in case of Ananias and Sapphira. Refer also to Gehazi and others. We should take these as only examples of that general disclosure of secret sin which is to take place in the great judgment, when the secrets of all hearts will be disclosed. "Be sure your sin will find you out." Sin cannot hide. If the sinner himself does not dig it up from the grave of memory, and confesss it with true shame as his own, God will cause it to rise and confront him in a day too late for repentance.

(6) The utter folly of sin.—Balance the profit and loss of any sinful act, and you will find it to show a terrible loss.

(7) One man sins: other men suffer.—Many ask how it could be just to punish all Israel for the sin of one man, when they neither winked at the sin, nor even knew of it. The justice rests on the oneness of the nation. God dealt with Israel, not as a crowd of individual men and women, but as one whole—a simple unity. So does He deal with the Church of Christ, of which Israel was but the type, teaching that if one member suffers, all the other members suffer with it. Anyway this law of unity is a great fact in all our life—a fact we acknowledge very freely when it runs in our favour, as when one member of a nation or family achieves renown, the whole nation or family feels that it too is honoured. What a solemn law this is, whereby the school, the family, church, or nation is helped or hindered, honoured or shamed, blessed or cursed by the life of any one of its members. No man liveth to himself.—The most terrible punishment of sin in this life is to see our sin bringing sorrow, ruin, and shame on innocent ones who love us and whom we love. God's law is, and none can avoid it, that the sinner's punishment falls on all connected with him. A wilful lad sins. Who suffers? The dear mother, whose heart is broken, and the godly father who dies in shame, and many others. The punishment of sin would be awful if the sinner alone suffered. How much worse when the greatest sufferers are often those why love us best.

GARSCUBE HALL, GLASGOW, is too small for the work carried on in that district by Mr. D. J. Findlay and his band of hearty fellow-workers. For fourteen years efforts have been there made to commend the Gospel to the people, and not without much blessing resulting. A larger hall is much desired, and, should the need for funds be supplied, more commodious premises will be secured. The ten-weeks' mission in the tent at St. George's Cross during the summer, and the tent conference held last month, are now looked back upon with feelings of gratitude to God for spiritual mercies vouchsafed in connection with them. Mr. Findlay's address is 42, Grant-street, Glasgow.

CHURCH OF SCOTLAND YOUNG MEN'S GUILD.—The three-days' Conference at Kirkcaldy last week was a season of blessing to many. Addresses were delivered by a number of ministers and friends, and while there were, on the one hand, fervent pleadings for consecration to God, on the other hand it is gratifying to know that not a few of the delegates were deeply moved, and made resolves which it is hoped will prove potent to increasing their influence in their future work. An interesting feature of the meeting was the acceptance of Rev. J. A. Graham as the first Guild missionary to Kalimpong, India. There was abundant testimony borne at the meetings to show that the Guild is fulfilling an important function in its various centres.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Archdeacon C. F. Douet, of Spanish Town, has been appointed assistant Bishop of the Diocese of Jamaica. Mr. Douet, says The Record, is a faithful upholder of evangelical truth, and a man of simple, unaffected piety.

As one outcome of the Church Congress, it is intended to establish Welsh Church services in Manchester, under the charge of a resident Welsh chaplain. There are three Welsh churches in Liverpool, one in Chester, and one in London, and a similar movement has been started in Birkenhead.

It is proposed by the Liverpool Diocesan Branch of the Church of England Temperance Society to hold a simultaneous Gospel temperance mission in the city and neighbourhood of Liverpool from November 10 to 17. Most of the parishes have signified their intention to take part in the mission.

The tenth annual conference of the Evangelical Protestant Union has been held at Manchester. The Hon. P. Cartaret Hill read a paper on "1688 and 1888, compared and contrasted." Rev. Canon Taylor, of Liverpool, said that both in 1688 and 1888 a Romeward movement was plainly discernible, the only difference being that the present movement was far more formidable. It was more intense, deeper, wider, and stronger.

The first of the series of bi-weekly prayer-meetings arranged by the Church Association to be held in London during October, November, and December, for the purpose of offering earnest prayer to God on behalf of the Church of England, was held at Burlington Hall, Savile-row, on Tuesday, last week. Rev. D. B. Hankin presided, and fervent prayer was offered by several clergy and laymen present. The meetings are to be held each Tuesday at Burlington Hall from 3 to 4, and on Friday at Cannon-street Hotel from 1 to 2.

The Church Missionary Society are extending their operations to the far-north land of Alaska. They have sent forward two missionaries (Revs. J. W. Ellington and T. H. Canham) to commence work respectively on the Upper and Lower portions of the mighty Yukon River. Writing to us from Old Fort, Yukon, while en route to Muklakayit, where he is to be stationed, Mr. Canham mentions that THE CHRISTIAN, sent him by a friend in England, is six, and often nine months before it reaches him; he reads it with much enjoyment, nevertheless.

The London correspondent of a provincial paper states that one of the officials of the Church Missionary Society is preparing a reply to Canon Taylor's article on the missionary failure, in which it will be shown that the conversions from heathendom are more numerous and more hopeful than the Canon allows. The Church Missionary Society, according to the same authority, is watching with much interest the result of the experiment being made by the Salvation Army in India, which consists in the complete adaptation of the manners and customs of the Hindoos.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A united mission, in which the five Southport and Birkdale Congregational Churches have joined, was inaugurated on Wednesday, last week, in Chapel-street Chapel, Southport, when Rev. F. B. Meyer gave an earnest address on the need for unity among Christians. The mission services are being continued by Mr. G. Green.

During the summer vacation Mr. T. W. Hodge, a student of Mansfield College, Oxford, has been acting as pastor of the chapel at Summerstown, Oxford. As a result of his earnest labours, the church, which was at a very low ebb, has become full of life and vigour, and a number of new members have been added. The building has become so crowded that it is proposed to build a new meeting-house.

The second anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. T. Eynon Davies at Finsbury-park Chapel was celebrated last week. It was stated that the church membership has increased during the past year, the number of new members received on testimony being 64, and 71 members added from other churches, making a total of 135. They lost by death one member, and transferred to other churches 30, making a total increase of 104. The present number of members on the church register is 444. The various agencies connected with the church, including the home mission, the temperance association, and the work done in the Sunday-school are in a very prosperous condition.

The foundation stone of a "Williams' Memorial Chapel" was laid at Cripplestyle, Dorset, lately, by Mr. Henry Williams, of Greenock (son of the late Rev. Samuel Williams). The ground was granted by the Marquis of Salisbury for the nominal sum of £10, and the chapel to be erected will seat some 250 persons. This chapel, says a contemporary, is one of the most remarkable, perhaps, to be found in this country. It was built by the people themselves, after their ordinary day's work had been done. The women did their part by carrying the furze and mud used in the building. The late pastor, Rev. S. Williams, for forty years laboured amongst this people with marked success; his name is revered and loved by hundreds to-day, and no name is more honoured in Dorset amongst the Congregational body than his. His self-denying devotion and self-sacrificing labours won for him a name that will ever be esteemed.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

In dealing with "The Confession of Faith," two American yearly meetings have used the word "adopt." three have "accepted," and five have "approved" of i

George Wood, of Luton, has been engaged in Gospel service at the Bedford Institute, Spitalfields, London; also at Malton and Great Ayton, Yorkshire, and at West Hartlepool, Durham. Divine help was experienced all through.

The mission and educational band of Friends in Alaska has been offered the education of 100 girls of one tribe alone, and the Metlakahtla Christian people (lately led out of British Columbia to Alaska by Wm. Duncan) also want the Friends to educate 100 of their girls. The one need at present is school buildings; then the work would be almost self-supporting. The doors everywhere are wide open for mission work, and the people are begging for the Gospel.

The need of special instruction and preparation in Biblical truth, long felt in America, is about to be supplied by "The Biblical Department at Earlham College," of which Dr. Dougan Clarke, author of "The Offices of the Holy Spirit," will be the head. As not a few young Friends have expressed a longing to devote themselves wholly to active missionary service, at home or abroad, such a training to those called of God will be invaluable and will retain their loyal attachment and service in the church of their fathers.

METHODIST.

A number of female evangelists, having completed their probation in the Halifax Training Home, under Mr. Clegg, have gone forth into active work, and are meeting with much success.

The Elswick-road Wesleyan Circuit, Newcastle-on-Tyne, is rejoicing over a considerable ingathering, the fruit of a mission held by Gipsy Smith. Evangelism is in favour with this vigorous church.

A very successful mission has been concluded by Mr. W. Sampson, in Oxford-road Wesleyan Chapel, Reading. The power of God to save souls was manifest throughout, and a number have yielded themselves to Christ.

The Wesleyans at Newcastle-on-Tyne are about to erect a hall for evangelistic work, and seated for 1000 people. Attractive meetings will be held nightly in the new premises, and work inaugurated similar to that carried on in London, Manchester, and Birmingham, in connection with what is known as the "forward movement."

The Wesleyan Methodists of the First London District held their annual missionary meetings in City-road Chapel, on Tuesday, last week. At a convention held in the afternoon a number of papers were read well calculated to stir missionary zeal. At a public meeting in the evening excellent addresses were given.

A gentleman who has formerly subscribed largely to the Joyful News Mission has given Rev. T. Champness another proof of the interest he takes in the Mission by promising, on behalf of himself and his son, another donation of £500. Mr. Champness has lately had to draw heavily on his resources to meet the cost of the outfit and passage of his foreign evangelists, and this generosity is all the more welcome at this time. Another friend has also contributed £100 to the Joyful News Mission.

BAPTIST.

The fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. T. J. Malyon, at Upper Kennington-lane Chapel, Vauxhall, London, has just been celebrated. The report of the Church states that during the past five years about three hundred persons have applied for fellowship. All the agencies of the church are in a flourishing condition.

Rev. T. Brimley has just celebrated the second anniversary of his pastorate at Braunston, Northants. During the two years a struggling village church has been saved from extinction, the membership has more than doubled, and many departments of Christian work are now in active operation, including Bible-classes, weekly lectures, meetings for the young, and "social evenings."

In The Missionary Herald for October, Rev. A. McKenna gives an account of the work of Rev. Prem Chand. This native of Bengal was baptized near Dinagepore in 1862, and has since been carrying on mission work independently. His converts appear to have increased more rapidly than those of any other agency in the district, and he is the recognised spiritual leader of an extensive religious community.

Rev. J. O. Fellowes, formerly and for so many years pastor of Trinity Baptist Chapel, John-street, Edgware-road, London, after three weeks' illness has entered into rest. The deceased settled at Trinity Chapel in 1865, and was pastor of that church, as well as president of the London Baptist Board of Minister, until last year. He had lately been occupying the pulpit of Onslow Chapel, Brompton. He was well known as a faithful servant of Christ.

Memorial stones of a new chapel and schools in Edith-road, Nunhead, were laid on the 10th inst., by Mr. J. T. Olney and Rev. J. T. Cole (pastor). The cause was commenced eighteen years ago by Mr. Cole, when the locality was but sparsely populated; now, within a radius of one-third of a mile there are about 15,000 inhabitants, without any other Nonconformist place of worship, the nearest chapel being half a mile distant. The new building will accommodate 500 persons.

SALVATION ARMY.

At Aylesbury, the ex-captain of the "Skeletons" has been converted and recently testified to "the power that had released him from the devil's clutches."

Enthusiastic meetings have recently been held by General Booth at Hastings, Southend, Bolton and Oldham; and by Miss Booth at Yarmouth, Ipswich, City-road (Grecian), Bradford, and Great Horton.

At the Kings' Cross barracks on Wednesday, five Jewish comrades met to tell how they had "found the Messiah." One had been an ordained Rabbi, another eighteen years an Atheist, and the others formerly led sinful lives in Russia, Germany, and Austria respectively.

Two servants of the Viceregal household at Dublin recently attended the Army meetings; so manifest is the change in their lives that the Marquis of Londonderry has specially encouraged the Army by choice offerings from his well-stocked conservatories and gardens for their local harvest thanksgiving.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A Presbyterian congregation has just been formed by the missionaries in Salonica, the city which in St. Paul's day was called Thessalonica. From this as a centre they go through Macedonia.

Rev. J. B. Meharry's congregation at Crouch-hill are extending their mission operations. In one district where they carry on work, a cottage meeting has been opened, as also has a reading-room for men, and a Bible-woman has been engaged.

At Aston Tyrrold, open-air services have been held during all the summer months, on Sabbath afternoons, in different parts of the neighbourhood, with encouraging results. Cottage meetings for the winter months were commenced last Sabbath afternoon.

Rev. John Black, who has been for the past ten years general secretary of the Presbyterian Church of England, died at his residence, Highbury Grange, on Saturday morning, at the age of 56 years. He was for nineteen years minister of North Bridge-street Presbyterian Church, Sunderland, from which he was appointed to the general secretaryship of the Church at headquarters in London.

The United Presbyterian Church at Union-street, Inverness, recently celebrated its centenary. In his address at a social gathering, Rev. G. Robson, the pastor said: It should be their endeavour to carry down into the future church life of Scotland the line of succession from men, who, more than a hundred years ago, stood up to contend for the fulness and purity of the Gospel, for the rights and liberties of the congregation, and for the spiritual independence and self-governing order of the Church of Christ.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Presbyterian Orphan Society has taken 179 additional children under its care.

Rev. M. Nachim addressed during the past week a series of meetings in Belfast and the North of Ireland on behalf of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews. The meetings were fairly attended; much interest was stirred up in the operations of this Society.

An interesting little work has been published by Rev. Dr. Crook, of Newry, as a memorial of the late Rev. J. D. Powell, Vice-President of the Methodist Conference. Deceased was a native of the city of Gloucester but spent his ministerial life in Ireland, and was an able earnest, godly man.

Meetings have been held and sermons preached in about two hundred centres throughout Ireland, in aid of Methodist home missions. In several cases the collections which were taken up were in advance of those of the previous year, and besides a large amount of evangelistic zeal has been evoked.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

In Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh, Rev. Dr. Alex. Whyte has commenced a winter series of Sunday afternoon discourses on the Psalms and Psalmists of Israel.

An awakening has taken place at Lochgilphead as the result of revival meetings held in the Martyrs' Free Church by Mr. Carson, whose labours have been zealously seconded by Rev. A. Bannatyne, the pastor.

Evangelistic meetings for working people are being held in Free Church Mission Hall, Plantation-street, Glasgow, addressed by various speakers. These meetings have been well attended, and many have been spoken to in the after meetings.

A conference of Christian workers was held on Saturday, 20th inst., in Hairst-street Mission Hall, Renfrew. Mr. W. D. Dunn, Mr. Climie, and Mr. Logan, evangelists, took part in the meeting, and a time of soul searching and real blessing was experienced. A great work is being carried on at this mission, of which Mr. James MacDonald is at the head. Special evangelistic meetings are going on at present, and souls are being won nightly into the kingdom. Mr. Logan is the evangelist.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. John Rowlands, rector of Grimston, Norfolk, from 1853 to 1883, and since rector of Newton-Toney, Wiltshire.—Rev. Dr. J. D. Prochnow, of Berlin, in his 75th year, well known in evangelical circles in the Fatherland.—Rev. J. R. Williams, of Hirwain, Aberdare, one of the leading Congregational ministers in Wales. He died at Treharris, whether he had gone to conduct some special services.—Rev. H. J. Hodson, who a short time ago was compelled by ill-health to resign the pastorate of Union-place Baptist Chapel, Longford.—Alderman George Johnson, J.P., of Derby, a prominent member of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, and for many years a local preacher.—Rev. A. F. Lutterell, rector of East Quantoxhead, Somerset, for the past seventy-one years. At Aughrim Rectory, Ballinasloe, Rev J. F. T. Crampton, rector of Aughrim, and provost of Kilmaclough in the 71st year of his age.

Or, The Pleasure and Profit of Bible Study. Being an Introduction to the Study of the Holy Scriptures.

By DR. G. F. PENTECOST, M.A.
With Introduction by Rev. Joseph Cook,
and Rev. J. H. Vincent, D.D.

Presentation Edition: Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"No one can read this almost unique volume without being stimulated to a more diligent study of The Book. It is not, strictly speaking, evidential; yet the key to valuable Scripture evidence is to be found within. It is not exegetical; but the careful reader will be taught thereby a sound method of exposition. It is not homiletical; although the seed corn for dozens of addresses are contained in its brief compass. Buy it, we can say to all; read it with your Bible open and a common-place book to hand, ready to catch up and store away the many precious things so lavishly scattered throughout its pages."—Night and Day.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

BATH Y.M.C.A.—The new premises in Broad-street were formally opened last week by Mr. George Williams. The financial sheet showed over £900 to be wanting to make up the sum of £4000 which, in round figures, will have to be spent before the building and its furniture are in perfect order.

A GOSPEL SHIP.—The Arcadia, P. and O. ss., had a goodly company of men and women on board, on Saturday, 20th inst., bound for the East. On the dock side, as the vessel was starting, there rose a sweet chorus of children's voices, singing "The Sweet by and by," to cheer a beloved teacher, departing for Jerusalem with her associates, from the Princess Mary Village Homes. The great bulk of the passengers crowded the deck, and responded with powerful effect, "From Greenland's icy mountains," showing the spirit that filled their hearts, and moved them to leave their native land. It was a scene to be remembered.

⁂ Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

⁂ We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

⁂ Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

TOLLINGTON HALL GOSPEL MISSION.—At the anniversary of this Mission, recently held, the work of the year was reviewed, and the promoters found much reason for gratitude to God for the blessings which have crowned their efforts. Inquiries respecting the Mission will be answered by Mr. J. R. Bullock, 2, Gloucester-road, Holloway, N.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

£500 URGENTLY NEEDED

To carry on the Work among Discharged Prisoners.

A Friend of the Mission has just written to promise £100, provided £400 more can be raised immediately.

The money is urgently needed to meet very pressing demands; and we cannot think that the readers of "The Christian" will allow this good work to be hindered in any way from the want of means.

Donations should be sent to the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to the Superintendent, Mr. GEORGE HATTON, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

Home for Motherless Little Girls,

HURST ROAD, EASTBOURNE.
Late of St. Giles, and Plaistow, Essex.

ESTABLISHED 1871.

Ten vacancies now filled. FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED to carry on work.

Destitute little ones received Free.

Those not quite friendless upon part payment, or according to circumstances.

Apply Miss LEE, at the Home.

HOMES of HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE, GRAY'S-INN ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case if it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

The Committee are in very urgent need of £250.

Bankers—London and Westminster Bank (Bloomsbury Branch), 218, High Holborn.

Fifth Annual Conference of Ladies

ENGAGED IN

PREVENTIVE AND RESCUE WORK,

WILL BE HELD (D.V.) IN THE

COUNCIL CHAMBER, EXETER HALL,

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7.

MRS. F. A. BEVAN has kindly consented to Preside.

Several Papers will be read, of which notice will be given IN "THE CHRISTIAN" FOR NOV. 2.

Afternoon Sitting at 2.30. Tea will be provided at 5. Evening Sitting at 6 o'clock. To close about 8.30.

The recent atrocities at the East End have brought painfully to light the fearfully degraded condition into which vice leads; and if by any means young women can be prevented from sinking so low in the social scale, such an end is indeed worthy of the prayerful Christian consideration and labour especially of their own sex.

EDWARD W. THOMAS,
Convenor.

REV. BENJAMIN SENIOR,

New Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

THE subject of this sketch is a typical Primitive Methodist minister, who has shown himself a very practical and successful pastor, as well as a specially useful itinerant preacher. His ministrations in his present important sphere of labour have been greatly blessed, and it is hoped that a long period of faithful service is yet before him.

Benjamin Senior was born at Farnley, Leeds, in 1847, but spent most of his childhood at Burn Cross, Sheffield, whither his parents removed whilst he was quite young. At the age of seventeen young Senior gave his heart to God, and in a short time took his place among the local preachers of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, which has a grand record as an evangelistic agency in Yorkshire and surrounding counties. After some years of labour at such times as he could be free from the pressing calls of business, young Mr. Senior entered Sunderland Theological Institute, where he distinguished himself for piety and plodding industry.

In 1873 he was sent by the Conference to Ramsgate, where his ministry was the means of consolidating as well as increasing the membership of the church. His next appointment was Kingston-on-Thames, where he was still more signally used of God in calling men to repentance and banding believers together in the bonds of Christian love. In 1876 he was stationed at Dartford, Kent, a town whose reputation in Methodist annals was one that might well have given rise to apprehensions in the mind of a minister of limited experience. John Wesley, in his journal, said, "There might be a stream of Methodism in Dartford, but it would barely wet one's feet." The Primitive Methodist Society in the town was young and weak when Mr. Senior went, but when he left, after nearly four years of devoted toil, there was a large and regular congregation, a numerous and loving membership, and an influential and active Sunday-school. In the accomplishment of this important work Mr. Senior had to dissipate much prejudice, and make friends of many who were formerly opposed to the aggressive means and methods of the denomination. Loving labour and kindly concern for the good of others were productive of the blessed results upon which Mr. Senior looked with so much pleasure when taking leave of friends, converts, and fellow-workers, in response to a call to Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars-road.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons, London.)

It is nearly ten years since Mr. Senior made the "Old Surrey" the centre of his work. He could not but feel the responsibility of the post, especially when he remembered the remarkable traditions of the place. It had been the scene of the labours of Rowland Hill for fifty years, James Sharman for seventeen years, and Newman Hall for twenty-two years. Conscious, however, that in God there is strength for the weak and consolation for the perplexed, he at once entered upon work of a distinctly evangelistic kind, hoping to be able to make some impression upon the vast population of the district. It is cheering to be able to say that hundreds of souls have found peace in believing through Mr. Senior's ministry, and the church now numbers between 250 and 300 members.

The lease of the old chapel having expired, it became necessary to enter upon building operations, and recently, under most auspicious circumstances, the "New Surrey" Chapel was opened. It is not an ornate structure, but a very substantial one, and the centre of many agencies for the spiritual and moral enlightenment and improvement of the people. A Manchester newspaper lately referred to it as the "Cathedral of Primitive Methodism." Temperance and open-air work are prominent features, and they have been greatly blessed. Since Mr. Senior put his hand to the temperance plough in South London some of the worst drunkards of the region have been won, not only to sobriety, but to Christ. Not long ago a man employed by a firm carrying on business in the neighbourhood told him that at one time the people working on the premises used to consume a barrel of beer every day; since that man's conversion, however, there has been a great change for the better, and the employers have, in a substantial manner, shown their appreciation of the improvement as well as their sympathy with Mr. Senior in his work.

As was reported at the time, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon preached the opening sermon of the new chapel. He looks with much interest upon Mr. Senior's endeavours; as a proof of his sympathy he gave £10 on the opening day, and promised £10 for each £1000 yet to be raised. Mr. Senior's work has also been highly spoken of by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. His church co-operating with him, the pastor hopes to realise large expectations in his present sphere. The chapel has not been opened free from debt, though it was much desired. Over £4000 still remains to be raised, and it is hoped that this will soon be subscribed by friends of religion and morality in South London and elsewhere.

The Novel in the Home.

We have received several letters relating to our recent article upon the writings of Edna Lyall, some of unqualified approval, others of equally pronounced dissent.

The former we need not quote; to the latter it is difficult to reply fully without discussing such doctrines as the Universal Fatherhood; non-eternity of punishment; salvation by works, not by atonement; ultimate salvation of all men; immortality of animals, &c., which, however congenial to human notions, unfortunately lack Scriptural endorsement. But the question, Are these doctrines true or false? is one which our readers must investigate for themselves; then they can decide whether or not Edna Lyall's books, which teach them, are desirable instructors of young people. It is because we maintain the negative position that we consider them "most dangerous."

Mr. H. J. Baker and Mr. R. Greenwood, who both write in a courteous and kindly manner, deny that Donovan's conversion produced "but little effect" in his subsequent life, maintaining that his noble act in nursing his bitterest enemy during his fatal illness of small-pox was a practical outcome of his changed ideas. But they fail to note that it was while he was nursing him that Donovan's conversion took place; he did not undertake the ordeal as the result of his conversion. In any case, the circumstances were all so near together that this one act cannot be called his "subsequent career." Then of Erica's conversion Mr. Baker says:—

> It meant the giving of intense pain to those she loved best, but for His sake she took up the cross, and, following in His steps, bore in meekness and silence the taunts and jeers hurled at her; whereas in the unconverted days, under similar circumstances, she would have given back sharp, sarcastic retorts. This to her, inwardly, was immeasurable peace, but, outwardly, storm and tempest.

This refers to her informing her father, the atheist leader, of her newly formed belief in Christianity. But the "storm and tempest" were of very brief duration, lasting only as long as her father's temper, and, when that had subsided, she "lived happily with him ever after," as children's story-books say. But (and here I gladly pay tribute to the beautiful picture which Edna Lyall draws of mutual love between father and child) I do not admit that "in the unconverted days" Erica would ever have answered her father with anything like "sharp, sarcastic retorts." The conversion of these characters exhibited no grief that they had doubted, mocked, and ridiculed the Lord who had so loved them as to die for them; no confession of sin; no cry for forgiveness.

"Don," another critic, is > glad to think that the sober cloth binding has been the means of these books getting into Christian homes, though [he] cannot see why "yellow backs" should be inconsistent with Christianity.

He seems to have been as curiously unhappy in his experience of Christians as Edna Lyall in hers, for he staunchly holds that > Christians ARE hypocritical, narrow-minded, and bigoted; and pious characters ARE "ill to live with"; and "truly pious young men" are an abomination!

We have been tempted, by the tone of his letter, to wonder whether Don himself might not be "ill to live with," but that is a point beyond our ken.

We are at one with Mr. Baker, when he says:—

> Would not the world be far better and happier to-day if the so-called followers of Christ would but live Christ, instead of talking Christ? Is it not a practical Christianity that is wanted, in order to draw men, who would be atheists, to the Great Teacher?

This is the most valuable of the good lessons which Edna Lyall teaches (and she does teach it), and it is so self-evident a proposition as to need no discussion, only PRACTICE. We also think Mr. Baker's suggestion a good one, to > pray before reading any book that we may retain the good and forget the evil (if any) that it contains.

But, alas, evil is not always so easily forgotten, and we know of more than one instance in which the chief practical outcome of reading these books has been, not a more accurate portrayal of "the Christ-life" in that of the reader, but a carping spirit of fault-finding and criticism of other Christians, thus "beholding the mote" of failing in the eyes of others without "considering the beam" of self-righteousness (which is not self-renunciation!) in their own eyes. They have read the books "for better or worse," and the "worse" has prevailed. We are thankful for all Edna Lyall's good lessons, but we regret that they should be made the bearers of so many doubtful ones.

In conclusion, we may add that none of our correspondents deny that Edna Lyall represents evangelical Christians as a set of bigoted hypocrites. "So they are," says Don; "she only takes them as she finds them." But she is hard to please. On the one hand she condemns idle empty professors—of whom, alas, there are too many—and on the other, ridicules the hundreds of sincere, earnest, Bible-reading, soul-loving workers, who are devoting their lives (which are truly full of "self-renunciation") to prove that Christianity is not merely an empty name. Finally, she eulogises men who are further away from the precepts which Christ and his Apostles taught than multitudes of even those whom she denounces are from what Christ and his Apostles did. But Mr. Baker is "very glad these books have been written," and Mr. Greenwood thinks "could only our young people be induced to read books like Edna Lyall's, which would teach them to think, instead of the trashy novels which are so prevalent nowadays, the benefit to our homes would truly be incalculable." We are not so sure about it. Trash is trash, and bears its character on its face, but the danger of evil is greater when it is partially concealed by good. There may be much good in a partially poisoned loaf, but most parents would rather not set it before their children.

MISS SHARMAN'S ORPHAN HOMES.

The protégées of Miss Sharman, in the Home in West-square, London, S.E., and the country branches at Gravesend, Tunbridge Wells, and Newton Abbot, have enjoyed good health and many blessings during the past twelve months. They number about 280, and, under the care of devoted Christian matrons and teachers, they are instructed and influenced for good before entering upon the battle of life.

During the twenty-one years of the Home's existence, 813 children have been received. Some have been inmates for seventeen years, having been admitted as tiny infants, and remaining until fitted to go out into service. The first endeavour is to train the children for Christ. They are given a plain English education, and, as a rule, trained for domestic service. In the Home and its branches they do all the work under the superintendence of the matrons: in this way they are made useful. They are also instructed in superior needlework and other household occupations.

Admission to the Home is made as easy as possible, preference being given to the most needy cases. During the summer months much brightness is afforded to the lives of the inmates, through the donations which kind friends send to defray expenses.

The old principles of work are still held in honour; no voting, no debt, no begging. During the year, ending in May last, all the needs of the Home were supplied, and Miss Sharman's twenty-second report is accordingly pitched in a high note of praise to the God of all grace and mercy. She says: "I send out this little record of a year's unbroken chain of blessings, and ask all who read it to join in a tribute of praise to God, who performeth all things for us, and in prayer that the children and the workers and the subscribers may all in this coming year live for his glory, and be again more than ever helpers of each other." Communications should be addressed to Miss Sharman, at 20, West-square, London, S.E.

CONTINENTAL SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.—Mr. W. H. Millar, 56, Old Bailey, E.C., hon. corresponding secretary of the Continental Sunday-school Mission, writes:—The very interesting letter that recently appeared in your paper as to the Sunday-schools in Belgium leads me to inform you that our superintendent, Mr. T. Edwards, has been visiting Belgium with the view of making inquiries how the Sunday-school work may be best extended there. We have for many years been in correspondence with friends in Brussels, but our very small funds have not admitted of our employing a missionary solely for Belgium, where we know so much could be done for the little ones. Can any of your readers help us in raising the necessary funds to employ a missionary for that country?

THE DIGNITY OF CHRIST.

HEBREWS i.

IN these few lines we can but lightly touch on the majestic titles which loving and adoring hands here heap around the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. The theme might well engage a seraph's tongue! Yet our hearts may glow with ardour of the same nature, if not of the same amount. And perhaps we may be conscious of elements of rapture which the sons of light may never know, because of his near kinship to us. "My heart overfloweth with a goodly matter: I speak the things which I have made touching the King."

(1) SON.—"He hath spoken unto us in his Son." God has many sons, but only one Son. When, on the morning of his resurrection, our Lord met the frightened women, He said, "I ascend unto my Father and your Father, to my God and your God." But, as He used the words, they meant infinitely more of Himself than they could ever mean of man, however saintly or childlike. No creature-wing shall ever avail to carry us across the abyss which separates all created from all uncreated life. But we may reverently accept the fact, so repeatedly emphasised, that Jesus is "the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father" (John i. 18). He is Son in a sense altogether unique.

This term, as used by our Lord, and as understood by the Jews, not only signified divine relationship, but divine equality. Hence, on one occasion, the Jews sought to kill Him, because He said that God was his Father, making Himself equal with God (John v. 18). And He, so far from correcting the opinion, as He must have done instantly, had it been erroneous, went on to confirm it, and to substantiate its truthfulness. The impression which Jesus of Nazareth left on all who knew Him was of his extreme humility; but here was a point in which He dared not abate one jot or tittle of his claims, lest He should be false to his knowledge of Himself, and to the repeated voice of God. And so He died, because He affirmed, amid the assumed horror of his judges, that He was the Christ, the Son of God. "He counted it not a prize to be on an equality with God." It was his right.

(2) His dignity is still further elaborated in the words which follow.—He is THE BEAM OF THE DIVINE GLORY, for so might the word translated effulgence be rendered. We have never seen the sun, but only its far-travelled ray, which left its surface some few minutes before. But the ray is of the same constitution as the orb from which it comes; if you unravel its texture, you will learn something of the very nature of the sun; they live in perpetual and glorious unity. And as we consider the intimacy of that union, we are reminded of those familiar words, which tell us that though no man hath seen God at any time, yet He has been revealed in the Word made Flesh. We hear our Master saying again the old, deep, mysterious words: "I and my Father are One. We will come and make our abode." And we can sympathise with the evening hymn of the early Church, sung around the shores of the Bosphorus:—

Who is th' Immortal Father, Heavenly, Blest.

(3) He is also THE IMPRESS OF THE DIVINE NATURE.—The allusion here is to the impression made by a seal on molten wax; and as the image made on the wax is the exact resemblance, though on another substance, of the die, so is Christ the exact resemblance of the Father in our human flesh. And thus He was able to say, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." The Life of Jesus is the Life of God rendered into the terms of our human lives; so that we may understand the very being and nature of God by seeing it reproduced before us, so far as it is possible, in the character and life of Jesus.

These two images complete each other. You might argue from the first, that as the ray is only part of the sun, so Christ is only part of God; but this mistake is corrected by the second, for an impression must be co-extensive with the seal. You might argue from the second, that as the impression might be made on a very inferior material, so Christ's nature was a very unworthy vehicle of the Divine glory; but this mistake is corrected by the first, for a beam is of the same texture as the sun. Co-extensive with God, of the same nature as God; thus is Jesus Christ.

(4) HE IS, THEREFORE, SUPERIOR TO ANGELS (ver. 4).—Lofty as was the esteem in which Hebrew believers had been wont to hold those bright and blessed spirits, they were not for a moment to be compared with Him whose majestic claims are the theme of these glowing words.

He surpasses them in the glory of Divine Nature.—Turn to Ps. ii.—one of the grandest miniature dramas in all literature. Probably composed on some marked episode in the reign of David, there is a glow, a sublimity in the diction which no earthly monarch could exhaust. We are not, therefore, surprised to find the early Church applying it to Christ (Acts iv. 25). In reading it, we first hear the roar of the mob and the calm decision of the throne, and then our attention is centred on Him, who comes forward, bearing the Divine autograph to the decree which declares Him Son. Nothing like this was ever said to angel, however exalted in character or devoted in service.

It is only befitting, then, that the unsinning sons of light should worship Him; and, as we hear the command issued: "Let all the angels of God worship Him," we are still further impressed by the immense distance between their nature and his.

Do we worship Him enough? During his earthly life He was constantly met by expressive acts of homage, which, unlike Peter in the house of Cornelius, He did not repress. The almost instinctive act of the little group, from which He was parted on the Mount of Olives in his ascension, was to worship Him (Luke xxiv. 52). And no sooner had He passed to his home than there burst from the Church a tide of adoration which has only become wider and deeper with the ages. The Epistles, and especially the Book of Revelation, teem with expressions of worship to Christ. And the death-cries of martyrs must have familiarised the heathen mind with the homage paid to Christ by Christians. Of the worship offered Him in catacombs, or in their secret meetings, amongst dens and caves, paganism was necessarily ignorant. But the behaviour and exclamations of the servants of Jesus, arraigned before heathen tribunals, and exposed to the most agonising deaths, were matters of public notoriety.

Some years ago, beneath the ruins of the Palatine palace was discovered a rough sketch, traced in all probability by the hand of a pagan slave in the second century. A human figure, with the head of an ass, is represented as fixed to the cross, while another figure in a tunic stands on one side, making a gesture which was the customary pagan expression of adoration. Underneath this caricature ran the inscription, rudely written, Alexamenos adores his God. But what a tribute to the worship paid in those early days to our Saviour, amidst gibes, and taunts, and persecution.

The hymns which have come down to us ring with the same spirit. Pliny writes to tell the Emperor that the Christians of Asia Minor were accustomed to meet to sing praise to Christ as God. As each morning broke, the believer of those primitive days repeated in private the Gloria in Excelsis, as his hymn of supplication and praise, "Thou only art Holy; Thou only art the Lord; Thou only, O Christ, with the Holy Ghost, art most high in the glory of God the Father." The early Church did not simply admire Christ, it adored Him.

Is not this a great lack in our private devotions?—We are so apt to concentrate our thoughts on ourselves; and to thank for what we have received. We do not sufficiently often forget our own petty wants and anxieties, and launch down our tiny rivulet, until we are borne out into the great ocean of praise, which is ever breaking in music around the Person of Jesus.

Praise is one of the greatest acts of which we are capable; and it is likest to the service of heaven. There they ask for nought, for they have all and abound, but throughout the cycles of glory the denizens of those bright worlds fill them with praise. And why should not earthly tasks be wrought to the same music? We are the priests of creation; it becomes us to gather up and express the sentiments which are mutely dumb, but which await our offering at the altar of God.

Let a part of our private and public devotion be ever dedicated to the praise of Jesus, when we shall break forth into some hymn, or psalm, or spiritual song, singing and praising Christ with angels and archangels and all the hosts of the redeemed. On that brow, once thorn-crowned, let us entwine our laurels. Upon that ear, once familiarised with threats and scorn, let us pour the fulness of our adoring devotion. So shall we gain and give new thoughts of the supreme dignity of the Lord Jesus. "Thou art worthy to receive...honour,"

In our next we will consider the further points of his supremacy to angels.

"WHEN THOU MAKEST A FEAST."—DEAR SIR,—We have arranged to give a meat tea on November 9 in the Great Assembly Hall; so that while the great Lord Mayor's dinner is in progress at the Guildhall, a good meal will be given to the poor at the East-end, with the accompaniment of a little music and singing. Our large hall is so arranged that over three thousand persons can be seated at one time for a meal. I feel sure that many would like to help us in carrying out this suggestion, which will make a happy evening for these thousands of the needy poor for one night in the year. We shall be glad if friends who give will also come and help in the distribution of their bounty. All we need now is the money to put this "happy thought" into execution.—Yours faithfully, FREDERICK N. CHARRINGTON.

A TRUE TALE OF THE COVENANTERS.

(Communicated by R. SCOTT MONCRIEFF, one of their Descendants.)

III.

IT is very interesting to study the spiritual conflicts through which ELIZABETH BRODIE was brought, and the manner in which she came out from them more than conqueror, as the training by which she was to be prepared to endure hardness through years of persecution for Christ's sake. We find her writing thus in October, 1678: "The Lord was very kind to my soul, and for the most part I was helped to pray in a more than ordinary manner for a hearing of the Gospel, and was also persuaded I would hear a sermon shortly, and was every day looking for an occasion."

Such occasions were only when it could be arranged for some outed minister to preach in secret, either in a dwelling-house or in some secluded place in open air. Panting for the Gospel, as the hart panteth after the water-brooks, Elizabeth expected what she prayed for, and was not disappointed. She writes:

"At length I fell under a cloud. I was sore straitened; but when I least expected it my mercy was brought to my hand. The first Sabbath I heard Mr. T. H—— I was much straitened in duty, yet was helped to trust he would make my mercy to appear like itself, to wit, a double mercy, even the return of prayer. The text he spoke on was Ps. l. 22: 'Consider this, ye that forget God.' He pressed much the duty of consideration, which is much the same with meditation. Notwithstanding I was in the dark, yet I saw much light therein, and after sermon, oh, sweetly came that word in prayer (Prov. xxxi. 16), 'He considereth a field and buyeth it.' I got a sweet sight of Christ as the rich field, yet, being unconsidered by the generality, is never bought by them, and how much it should endear Him to their hearts in love, to whom He has given grace to consider his worth in some measure. Also I saw matter of heavy regret that his own content themselves with so little of this, which is the sin which looks me sore in the face this day. Sabbath being ended, I came to Elgin, where I had occasion of the minister's company, with others of the godly, yet all this time I had got no clear outgate."

Her frequent alternations between joy in believing her sins forgiven, and groanings under fresh discoveries of her "inability to perform that which is good," with the sense of guilt and condemnation produced thereby, show that she had yet to learn how vain it is for the believer to seek, by inlook into his own heart, for outgate from "the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Her faith had accepted Christ as the propitiation for her sins, but failed to apprehend herself as, in spite of her unworthiness, always "accepted in the beloved" by her Heavenly Father, for such is "the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free." She continues: "The next Sabbath was indeed a sweet day to my soul. Saturday night in prayer the Lord persuaded me that in love to my soul He had cast all my sins behind his back, and in the morning I got that word (Exod. xxxiii. 14), 'My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest,' which I found made out to me. My soul bless Him for it. Monday morning, I was praying that He would come and make way for the Gospel in Moray, and He persuaded me that He would come through all these briars and thorns, and that no mountain should stand in his way.

"March 26, 1679.—That place of Holy Scripture was sweet to my soul: 'Honour the Lord with thy substance and with the firstfruits of thine increase, so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.' I saw the Lord gave neither gifts nor graces to lie by folk (i.e., to lie unused), but to be improven for the Master's use, and the way to receive more is to be laying out for the Lord. This I got to satisfy me as to a particular care I was troubled with.

"A little before this I had met with something as to my outward condition that was uneasy, Providence seeming to contradict promises; but 'bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name,' who condescended to me and gave me new allowances in time of trial, and when I was jealous if I was in his way as to my present condition, or not, He did fully satisfy me by several views. He did let me see his kindness: (1) In putting that by (i.e., past) me which others were some time under; (2) in keeping me from seeking or taking my own way; (3) in his care of me in common providence; (4) in letting me see that if I had been my own keeper I had been overcome by the smallest temptation, and this He let me know by experience, finding the weight of a temptation. I then saw much of the Lord in taking me off my own hands, He sweetly composed my uncomposed heart by these words, and backing them by his own Spirit (2 Cor. vi. 19, 20), 'Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price.' (5) When I met with anything from my relations in this matter, then He always countenanced me in a more than ordinary manner. (6) By persuading and solidly satisfying me that it was in much love and kindness to my soul that He dealt thus with me. And lastly, in giving me submission as to any lot He saw for his glory and my good.

"I had also the desolation of the place to trouble me. There was none of the godly there, which made me sometimes think what might be the Lord's design in bringing me to it. But when I did reflect on his promises, then I saw that He would not leave me alone, but would make darkness light before me, and crooked things straight. This He has indeed made out to thee in part, O my soul; be thou humble and bless Him, and He shall faithfully perfect what concerns thee.

"One day coming from prayer with great indisposition, deadness, and formality, when about duty, that word (Psa. cxviii. 17) 'Bind ye to the altar's horns with cords the sacrifice' still followed me. O, ignorant and foolish, I thought, if there is a barren place in all the Bible this was one. But He did bear with my folly and was full of pity, discovering Christ as the altar, on whom alone the prayers of his people were accepted, and the promises as the holds, or horns, of the altar, to which I by the cords of faith behoved to fly. On this altar, on the faith of the promise, was I to lay and leave them, and there only would they get acceptance.

"April 18, 1679.—Being desired to visit a young gentleman, a near relation who was just a dying, I went to see him. He was one for whom I had put up some prayers to God, though ofttimes much straitened. He was undone with carnal company, which he did sore regret, and was much troubled for his misspending of time, and complained of unwillingness to come to Christ. While with him I was in providence called to another place, to see another friend who was also at the point of death. And so coming in to take my leave of this young gentleman, he urged me to stay, which I did. He was so weak that he could hardly speak, but when I asked him how matters stood between God and his soul, he said, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth.' But because of his weakness I spoke little to him. About three hours before he died he called for me, and challenging me for my silence, he told me that Christ only was now precious to him, and that He had won in upon his heart and done, what he before had told me he could not attain, to wit, brought his heart cheerfully to close with Himself. He spoke to me now more than a quarter of an hour with more than ordinary strength, and told me how the Lord had sent home his word by his Spirit on his heart. I retired a little to prayer, and when I came in again he never spoke but once. When I went to prayer again I saw much mercy in that the Lord had condescended to me in giving me any satisfaction, and in making him call for me when he was so near his last.

"There were several complaints upon professors, and some, yea, all of them, my near relations. O, but my heart was broken, I thought I could not have borne one grain's weight more."

We return to JAMES NIMMO, whom we left, in June, 1677, "walking, and leaping, and praising God," it might have been said, so great was his joy in the Lord. He describes this experience as "a second law work, and conversion," and adds, "From this time until the year 1679 I was sometimes under great refreshings in duty, much abstracting myself from occasions of carnal and worldly conversation, and much delighting in solitariness and meditation, and sometimes won to much nearness to the Lord in prayer, and always desirous to keep a conscience void of offence towards God and man. Sometimes retracted to dark clouds and under sore troubles in my soul, but never continued so long as before related. Ofttimes in a fighting condition; sometimes sin prevailing; sometimes He made his grace in me to prevail, and always discovered to me, sooner or later, that every step of my condition was for my advantage, and nothing I met with could be wanting (i.e., could have been spared). Albeit all I attained unto, I had often enough to do, and even sometimes was like to give over."

TENT WORK IN BRISTOL.

A SIXTEEN WEEKS' Gospel mission in connection with the "Bristol Public-house Theatrical and Tent Mission" has been concluded. Between seventy and eighty men and women have professed to receive spiritual blessing at the services. Mr. Stephen T. Crocker has conducted the mission, assisted by a staff of workers drawn from various denominations, and the tent has been nightly thronged with people from the factories, &c., in the immediate neighbourhood. In one of these a large room has been placed at the disposal of the work-people for midday religious meetings. These were addressed by Mr. Crocker and others, and are largely attended. As a result of the services a women's Bible-class has been started at the Girl's Home, Barton-hill; and a Thursday evening meeting, also for women, conducted by Mr. George Weeks, of Ashley Down Orphan Houses, and others.

During the daytime the evangelist visits the public-houses, giving away tracts and portions of Scripture, and speaks to the frequenters as occasion offers. He has by this means gained an entrance to many hundreds of public-houses in Bristol and neighbourhood, at most of which he is now well received, although at first the matter was one of vast difficulty. Tracts are also freely given away to the frequenters of the theatres and places of amusement as opportunity offers. Those who are thus visited and spoken to are invited to the evening meetings, and many have been rescued from the downward road. The mission is supported entirely by voluntary help. Dr. Elliott, 88, Pembroke-road, Clifton, is the hon. treasurer.

NORTH CAMP, ALDERSHOT.—Mr. John Poate, secretary of this work, Sherbourne-road, Farnborough-road, Hants, appeals for Bibles for free distribution, tracts, Gospel cards, small books, &c. "There is a large field," he says, "for sowing the seed in this locality. Two Irish regiments have just come into this end of the camp."

XXXI.—"I CANNOT FEEL IT."

It ought to be written in conspicuous letters and words everywhere: First faith, second thanksgiving, and third feeling. I say everywhere; for in every place I visit, I find real earnest and anxious souls who are hindered from obtaining joy and liberty, because they are waiting for feeling.

How can we feel a thing until we have it? and how can we have it without taking it? and how can we take it if it is not offered? If salvation is offered to us as a gift, how can we have it without accepting? and how can we help feeling when we have accepted?

I have in my mind a particular lady who for a long time was in great distress of soul, because she could not feel saved.

I told her that I once heard a gentleman say, "Look here, there are three men going along one after another. The first is Mr. Fact; he walks along with a bold, undeniable step, no one can stand against him, he is a stubborn fellow. Next to him follows Mr. Faith, looking at Mr. Fact with admiration; and next behind him is Mr. Feeling, he always follows Mr. Faith. But suppose Mr. Faith turns round, and looks at Mr. Feeling, where is Mr. Fact? Faith cannot see him at all. That is what you are doing," I said, "looking at Feeling instead of Fact." No, that illustration failed to convince this lady.

"Well, then," I continued, "let me tell you another story. It is of a young lady who was very wretched, and looking miserably ill because she could not feel that she was saved. A gentleman who was asked to speak to her said, 'Pray, Miss, have you come a long way to-day?'

"'Yes,' she replied, 'more than thirty miles.'

"'Did you have your breakfast before you started?'

"'Yes, I breakfasted at seven o'clock.'

"'Did you feel you had had your breakfast before you took it, or after?'

"The lady looked at him as if to know what to do, and whether she ought to answer such a question.

"'Oh, certainly,' he said, 'reply to that inquiry, it is a very good one for you; come, answer it freely.'

"She said, 'Why, of course I felt I had had my breakfast after I took it.'

"'Yes, exactly so; that is the answer I wanted, and so you must take salvation first, and then you will feel you have it.'

"She began to cry, and said, 'I cannot take it.'

"'Why not?'

"'Because I do not feel.'

"'Certainly you cannot feel before you take it. Here is salvation provided for you, because you are a sinner. I mean you—yourself. You would not be so anxious if the Holy Spirit were not striving with you. It is for you—take it.'

"'How can I take it?' she inquired, in a bewildered way.

"'Why, by thanking God for it. That is the usual manner of accepting a gift. Thank Him.'

"'What, before I feel it?'

"'Yes, assuredly; for you do not thank God for your feelings, but for his gift. Thank Him for that.'

"'Oh, I never understood that,' she said. 'Lord, I do thank Thee for thy great love in giving thy Son to die for me.'

"Once in that attitude, she went on thanking God until she obtained joy and peace in believing—not believing in joy and peace; but she had joy and peace from believing in the Lord. She is now walking in the light."

None of these arguments or illustrations appeared to touch my friend. She seemed as determined as ever to wait for feelings. After a while, I said, "I cannot spend more time with you now, but suppose I call upon you to-morrow?"

"Oh, do, sir, if you please," she replied, "and I will answer the door for you myself. What time will you come?"

"If I am with you by two o'clock, will that do?"

"Yes, that will be a very convenient time, and I will be on the look-out for you."

"Suppose," I added, "that when I come and knock at your door, and you open it, I still remain outside and say, 'I cannot feel I am inside yet, let me have the knocker again.' You say, 'Come in;' but I continue to repeat, 'I cannot yet feel I am inside, I must knock again,' and accordingly I began again to knock at the open door before your face. What would you think of me then? I expect you would conclude that I was demented, or something else. Would you not? Do you not see that God has put an open door before you, and that He has been pressing you to come in; but you persist in saying you cannot come in, until you feel you are inside. How can you expect to feel you are inside, while you determine to remain outside?"

"Oh, what shall I do?" she exclaimed; "I am nearly driven to despair!"

"I cannot wonder at that," I said; "I do not know how you have held out so long. Make up your mind at once to give up this waiting for feeling, and thank God for his great love in giving his Son for you, and thank the Lord Jesus for laying down his life to save yours. If you do this, I promise you will find it true that feeling comes after thanksgiving; and, in any case, I would advise you to go on thanking God, even in the dark. You may, perhaps, have to do that now, after all your hardness and perverseness."

We knelt down in prayer, saying: "Lord I believe, help Thou mine unbelief. Lord increase my faith, and help me to praise Thee. O my soul, praise God, and all that is within me praise his holy name. Praise the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits!" and so on.

It is surprising what an effect articulation of such words has upon the heart. This lady, hitherto so hard and cold, began to be in earnest, as if she really did feel something. In any case, she did not thank God long for his goodness before warmth and animation came to her soul. She passed through the open door, thanking God. From the knocking side of the door where she had been so long, she came to the thanking side, and soon felt herself to be safe.

It is very surprising how persistent Satan is with this device of waiting to feel. Whether it is his work or that of the old Adam-nature with us, I cannot say; but there is no doubt that it is a very serious hindrance and trouble to many anxious souls. The very fact of their being anxious is of itself enough to encourage them to praise God.

ANOTHER "JOYFUL NEWS" EVANGELIST embarked for the foreign work on Saturday week. Mr. Pinnock sailed on that day from Liverpool for Lagos, Mr. and Mrs. Champness, as their custom is, accompanying him to the ship. Three or four Wesleyan missionaries sailed in the same vessel for various parts of Africa.

THE MAGIC-LANTERN MISSION is an agency which has been greatly blessed for some years past, especially in and around Portsmouth. Gospel and Temperance reform are illustrated and enforced by the Mission, which has also been instrumental in the raising of funds for Christian work of the more ordinary kind. The operations of the Mission have greatly widened of late, and now they are beyond the financial grasp of the promoters. Help is accordingly needed for the purchase of new slides for the lantern. Further particulars may be had of Mr. Wm. Stewart, director, Tweedside, Knox-road, Havant, Portsmouth.

CLIMBING.

Climbing to God on the mountain height,
Up through the rocks and snow,
Thickens the mist, and darkens the night;
Wilder the storm-winds blow.
Hasten, O soul! from your mortal plight,
Down to the lowlands, low.

Reason has dropt like a baffled steed,
Never those cliffs to scale;
Self has failed like a broken reed—
Hark! through the shrieking gale,
Come, with the Word of God to lead,
Down to the lowly vale:—

Vale, where the woes of a fallen race
Deep as an ocean moan;
Valley of sin, which no works erase—
Prayer, or tear, or moan;
Vale, where the sinner must take his place,
Now, or before the Throne.

Here is the cross with atoning blood
Red on the farthest strand;
Sinner, oh, trust to the cleansing flood,
Rest on the Master's hand;
Live with your face to the face of God
Down in the lowly land.

A MANCHESTER CAMPAIGN.

Manchester has been in the midst of a Gospel campaign this week. The Wesleyans have held high session at the Central Hall, with crowded meetings every day. The Ragged School Union, in fifteen ragged schools in the poorest districts, has held meetings nightly; many hundreds have signed the pledge, and tokens of spiritual blessing are evident on every hand. There is much truth in what the Licensed Victuallers stated at their meeting held recently, that "a wave of teetotal madness is evidently passing over the district."

At the Conference Hall, in connection with the Boys' Refuge, Strangeways, Rev. George C. Needham, of America, is holding meetings twice daily, as well as conducting noon-day prayer-meetings in connection with the Y.M.C.A. Small attendances marked the first meetings, but the numbers have gradually increased, and interest in the meetings evidently grows.

Mr. Needham's powerful Bible-readings for Christian workers have been greatly appreciated. He is mighty in the Scriptures, wielding the sword of the Spirit with great power. At every meeting the Bible, pencil, and note-book are kept constantly at work, and workers will, for many days to come, be redistributing the bread of life which has been broken to them by this servant of God.

We hope your readers will remember Manchester in prayer, and follow Mr. Needham to Dublin, where he will be labouring for some time after he leaves Manchester. K.

THE TWO MISSION SHIPS are kept going their rounds in England and in France for the preaching of the Gospel. Deeply interesting meetings are constantly being held on board. The Herald of Mercy has recently returned from Folkestone, and is being made ready for the winter's work. The Mystery is now at Trouville, supplying a great spiritual need there, with an evangelist and our mission crew hard at work among English, French, and other nationalities. Bibles and Testaments have been sold, and given where needed, in large numbers. Thousands of little bags, well-filled with a Testament and Gospel books, have again been freely distributed among our troops and seamen who have lately sailed for India and China. Will your readers help by making and sending to me 10,000 bags (8 in. by 7 in.) for our winter's work among our fishermen and seamen? Bibles, Gospel papers, books, comforters, &c., will also be a boon. Henry Cook.

Hammersmith Conference.

So great was the blessing that attended and followed the Conference of last year, that the friends resolved to repeat the experiment. The very first meeting, held on Monday evening of last week, justified the step. It was not a large one; the fog was thick and insinuating. There needed some enthusiasm to brave its discomforts for the sake of attending a religious conference, and enthusiasts are not so plentiful as leaves in Vallombrosa. But those who went were well repaid. A spirit of serious intensity pervaded the little gathering, and it afforded an earnest of the good things to come on subsequent occasions.

Dr. Underhill, as president for the evening, had the first word; and he used it well to press home the importance of making the most of the Lord's Supper as a channel of spiritual stimulus, by devout meditation on the themes that cluster around the Cross, and on the mighty love of the Saviour that led Him thither. He urged that a more prominent place should be assigned to the Supper as a part of Church worship.

THE NEED OF THE CHURCHES.

An admirable paper was read by Rev. W. Roberts on "The need of increased Spiritual Life in the Churches." Who will not acknowledge, he asked, that the spiritual life of our churches is at a far lower ebb than it ought to be? How few of us seem to possess the "life more abundant" of which the Saviour spoke. If it were ours, we should be more faithful representatives of Jesus Christ, and we should impress the world with his claims upon their love and service. As an enfeebled physical condition lays the man open to the attacks of disease, so a low type of spirituality makes us less impervious to the deadening influences of the world around. More life would bring more light and more power; we should be preserved from mistakes and energised for service. How essential is an access of this life for aggressive work in the world. How meagre are the results without it. If it were not for the sickliness of our Christian life, there would be a far higher tone and influence pervading all our domestic, economic, political, and national relations. To have an increase of this life *ex*tensively in the world, we must have it *in*tensively in the Church.

After the reading of this suggestive paper, several friends contributed to the discussion with well-chosen and well-weighed words. Rev. G. D. Bartlet, of Highgate, thought that in the present day, while there was plenty of writing and speaking, there was a great lack of life. The world, as has been well said, will not read God's Book, but they are sharp to note defects in the Christian's walk. As a rule, we influence others far more by example than by precept. Our non-success comes from our half-heartedness, and our conformity to the world. We need more spiritual life, that we may have power as parents and as churches. Mr. Bartlet said he had lately been visiting in Scotland, and he had been depressed by the thought that while there is there a superabundance of preaching, there is not corresponding power in the life of the churches. They seem to be turning sermons into a Saviour—going to church to hear, but not going home to obey and to live it out. It is quite possible to allow even sacraments to come between us and the living, personal Saviour. If conferences such as this are good in arousing to a deeper life, why should they not be held in all the churches?

Mr. C. D. Freeman cautioned those present not to mistake spiritual excitement or emotion for genuine life. What failures most of us are, compared with those early Christians of whom we read in the New Testament! Think of the possibilities that are wrapped up in every Christian, when he is fully possessed with the life of God.

Rev. Cumming-Brown, of Gunnersbury, spoke with words of fire and power, addressing himself chiefly to himself and to his fellow ministers. He recalled a remark by Rev. E. White (who was present) to the effect that lately he had taken the opportunity of listening to many preachers, and the one thing that struck him most in connection with the pulpit of the present day is the lack of a holy passion. Who can doubt it? said Mr. Brown; we ministers need you of the pew to wake us up. Probably it is true that sermons nowadays are a small factor in the spiritual life of the people; but it was not always so. There was a sermon preached about two hundred years ago by one John Livingstone, under which five hundred souls were brought to Christ. He is said to have been one of the most unsentimental men that ever lived, but with two or three like-minded Christians he had spent the whole of the previous night in prayer. Two ministers in Edinburgh called on a brother minister who seemed indisposed to company. He explained to them that for two hours he had been wrestling with God for power, and he had not yet got his heart's desire. How these things shame us ministers. Truly there were giants on the earth in those days. Let us be honest with ourselves; we are really suffering from spiritual laziness. We dip into our Greek Testaments and write sermons, but the thing that we most need is the thing we do least of all—wrestling with God for spiritual power. The plague of sermon hearing without any practical result is not confined to Scotland. Let our younger people resolve that their lives shall be thoroughly earnest, placed without reserve at the disposal of the Master, asking Him to make them what they ought to be.

Some concluding words from Rev. Edward White as to the need of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, rounded off an extremely profitable occasion.

TUESDAY.

At a ministerial meeting in the morning, presided over by Rev. Charles Graham, addresses were delivered by a number of brethren, insisting that national, social, and church sins should be definitely confessed.

HOW TO OBTAIN INCREASED LIFE.

In the afternoon, with Rev. A. Norris in the chair, Rev. F. B. Meyer opened a conference on this subject. Christ is the Life, he said, and apart from Him we cannot enjoy the desired blessing. The only way in which we can receive Jesus is through the Holy Spirit, by whom Christ dwells in the heart. There are two conditions of the full indwelling—surrender to the Spirit, and reception of the Spirit by faith. If we cling to things which we know to be wrong, it is utterly futile to suppose that we can receive the fulness of the Spirit. Every step in the fresh reception of the Holy Ghost is preceded by a fresh surrender of known evil. Mr. Meyer proceeded to speak with much cogency and force on communion—prayer and study of the Word of God, the believer feeding on Christ and radiating the fruit of the Spirit.

After some remarks by a visitor, who spoke in favour of church meetings as a means of grace, Rev. E. White delivered a stirring address. The grand distinction between the true Gospel and false religions is that, while the latter set forth man's work towards God, the former represents God's work towards man. The three grand works of God towards man are—first, the gift of his Son, who made atonement on the cross for the sins of the whole world; second, the gift of the Holy Spirit to dwell in each believer, an indwelling as real and as eternal as the incarnation of the Word in the person of Jesus Christ, uniting believers to Christ and also to the Eternal Father and each other; third, the resurrection to glory at the coming of Christ for all believers. It is on the realising of these fundamental simple truths that our whole Christian progress and strength depend, a fact that we are constantly liable to forget. Mr. White proceeded to show the unscriptural character of the figment that the Holy Spirit may be communicated by means of sacraments, or through the agency of a priesthood, and the delusion that a christened heathenism can take the place of the regenerating life of the Holy Spirit. We must go back to the early teaching that every believer's body is the temple of the Holy Spirit. It is our life, our joy, our only hope, that omnipotence is living within us, if we are believers, and that out of that fountain of living water we can draw all we need for the slaking of our spiritual thirst. We have no need to pray for the Spirit, for we have Him already. But we must not vex or grieve Him; we must yield to his teachings within us; we must be filled with the Spirit, taking the indwelling as an earnest of God's willingness to give the fulness if we ask Him for it. Mr. White went on to show with much power that the new life involves not simply a change of opinions, but a change of nature. With this realised, there will be more spiritual life in the Church.

Rev. J. Cumming-Brown followed with some earnest words, directing special attention to the teaching of John xiv. 15—17. When Christ moved among men, the world did not perceive the Holy Spirit by which He wrought. The disciples, however, did perceive Him, and Christ said, "He dwelleth with you." But the Lord added: "He shall be in you," shall come upon you, and be in you, in a higher measure than you have yet known Him.

Dr. Weymouth reminded the meeting of the glorious promise couched in the words: "If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him." We can have by asking. He urged the importance of the influence of prayer-meetings upon the spiritual life. He knew of a minister saying, "We cannot keep up a prayer-meeting." What is the requirement? "Two or three!" It is inconceivable that such a number cannot be found to unite in supplicating blessing from God. There was a time when "they that feared the Lord spake often one to another." We ought not to be silent towards each other. We meet just as men and women of the world meet, without revealing which side we are on. Why do we not help one another by often "speaking to each other," and find out whether there is not in that a true means of grace?

Some earnest words were also spoken by Revs. T. W. Adey, J. B. Matthews, and Charles Graham.

The subject was resumed in the evening. The chair was occupied by Mr. T. Walker, who spoke some thoughtful words of introduction. Rev. J. F. B. Tinling delivered a searching address. The first thing to consider, if we desire to increase in spiritual life, is, How about our will? "If any man is willing to do God's will, he shall know of the doctrine." God respects man's liberty, but is ever ready that man should help rather than hinder his loving work. We must have a right direction of mind, not only looking at Christ, but having Christ in us. Again, we must have communion with God; there must be nothing between us and Him, and there must be unity of action and purpose. We must be careful to live in God's plan of our lives, letting our circumstances be of his appointment, and not our own. Further, we can only expect increase of spiritual life by using what life and power we have.

Rev. R. Macbeth urged more study of the Scriptures. Rev. W. Edwards pointed out that in order to an acceptable drawing near to God, believers must sanctify themselves. Mr. Benjamin Scott recalled the circumstances of the revival in the north of Ireland in 1859, and maintained that if Christians agree to make request now, God will shower blessings upon the Church. The Conference having ended, a prayer-meeting was held, several brethren taking part.

WEDNESDAY.

Rev. W. Roberts presided over the ministerial meeting this morning, when the subjects of conversation were: "The Minister as a Message-bearer;" and "Ministerial Power for Conversion."

At the afternoon general meeting, Rev. R. Macbeth in the chair, an address was delivered by Rev. W. SLACK on "The Manifestation of Increased Spiritual Life in the Church." Not every outburst of activity in evangelistic effort is a manifestation of increased spiritual life. How far the Head of the Church may, in his wisdom, overrule well-meant though questionable agencies and appliances for the attainment of his good and gracious ends is not for us to say; but, obviously, He cannot be regarded as the author of that which He overrules. There are no real manifestations of increased spiritual life but those of which the Holy Spirit Himself is the author. One manifestation is an increased spirit of heart unity amongst the members of the Church, the profession of Christ being thereby adorned by gentleness, meekness, brotherly kindness, and charity. The substitution of the spirit of Christ for the spirit of the world is another manifestation; for, sad to say, there is in the Church much that is of the world, worldly. A quickened interest in the ordinances of religion, and widened sympathies in the work of God are other manifestations. If in believing prayer we ask for the increase of spiritual life, we shall receive it, and it will manifest itself in the Church in many and blessed forms.

Rev. J. Branwhite French made a few remarks on the objects of the Conference, and expressed a hope that year by year it would become more blessed in the deepening of spiritual life. After a few words by Rev. J. M. Hewson, an address was delivered by Rev. Charles Graham, who emphasised the fact that spiritual life is the life of the Lord Jesus Christ communicated to us by the Holy Spirit. Rev. James Kennedy pointed out that we only know life by its manifestations. The world does not understand Christianity, as it is lacking in the needful spiritual discernment. On the other hand, it does understand justice, generosity, and unselfishness, and by these we ought to impress those who are without. Mr. D. M. Cameron gave instances of the working of the Spirit in communities, consequent upon earnest prayer, and resulting in important revivals of religion. This ended the Conference.

In the evening there was a united observance of the Lord's Supper. Rev. Dr. Stoughton, who presided, spoke upon the great significance of the ordinance, which he described as a sort of crystalised representation of that which is the central truth of Christianity. Christ comes before us in his nature, in his works, in his mediation. We cannot help thinking of his humanity; we cannot, at the same time, help thinking of his divinity. The centre of worship in the primitive Church, the ordinance is still the bond of union among Christ's disciples throughout the world. At the Lord's Table we get nearer Christ than at any other time, and also nearer to each other, as members of one great family. Rev. W. Page having spoken some earnest words, an address was delivered by Rev. T. W. Adey on "We love Him, because He first loved us" (1 John iv. 19). The service was a fitting conclusion to the Conference, and a season of much blessing to many.

EASTERN AFRICA.—An instructive and suggestive address on "Medical Mission Experiences in Africa" was delivered at 17, Queen Elizabeth's Walk, Stoke Newington (the residence of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Barnett), on October 24, by Dr. Vernon Ardagh, who recently returned invalided from Mombassa. A great deal of interest in the lively narration of notions and customs, &c., in the Dark Continent, was evinced by the audience.

Missionary Movement in America.

BY MR. REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

MR. HUDSON TAYLOR sailed away for China across the Pacific a few days before my wife and I sailed from New York. He took with him fourteen American and Canadian earnest, rejoicing associates for the China Inland Mission. He had approved of six others out of the volunteers; but they were not freed to sail with this first band. Many others had earnest conversations, and how many others wish to follow it would be difficult to estimate. But just before sailing I received information of forty-six wishing to follow. I am sure this firstfruit has surprised many. Mr. Taylor had not even brought with him the usual printed forms to put into the hands of would-be volunteers.

The paying down money to sustain a whole group of missionaries began very notably at the end of the Bible Study Convention at Niagara. At this Convention ample scope was allowed to speak of whole-hearted surrender to Christ, and to plead for the heathen. Mr. Hudson Taylor spoke twice, and on the two concluding nights the very much-honoured young undergraduate, Mr. Wilder, spoke after Mr. Taylor had left for another town. At the close of the Convention a letter had to follow Mr. Taylor, saying money had been provided for the support of six missionaries. He felt that this was a responsibility, and that prayer should at once be made as to its use. The Lord soon showed that He was just as willing to provide the labourers as to provide the money.

It was touching to hear these candidates, after they had been accepted, giving their testimonies in one church after another. In one case, after his own daughter had given her testimony, her father solemnly and tenderly faced the congregation, and said, "I have nothing too precious to give to Jesus."

In another case, a notable mechanic was accepted, and his friend, another mechanic, gave £50 towards his expenses.

At Toronto on the Sunday evening the crowd could not get into the farewell meeting. At its close one gentleman told me his sister present, a comely young lady at his side, desired to go at her own expense. Another gentleman told me his wife desired to support a missionary. On the night of the departure, the accepted volunteers and their friends partook of the Lord's Supper at Knox Presbyterian Church, Dr. Parsons', at 9 o'clock, and at 11 o'clock away went their train. But before it departed there was an imposing scene. Very many earnest Christians, mostly young men, gathered at the station, taking leave, singing hymns, praying for the departing ones, and for the "more that God would give to follow." We could not tell how many in that crowd were longing quickly to follow.

In these later days tradition has raised its head, and has claimed that only clergymen, or men fully equipped by a long course in the Universities, are in a fit state to go to the heathen. Thus it becomes hard for others to realise their own responsibility, and to understand that the command is upon all classes. But Mr. Hudson Taylor, whilst rejoicing over the cultured Cambridge band of seven, rejoices also over this dear American and Canadian band of fourteen, and this has been kindly received by both ministers and people.

Mr. Taylor was most deeply appreciated, and we were both greatly helped by ministers and people, and by the Y.M.C.A.; and last, but not least, by Professors and men of the colleges and seminaries. Our hosts and hostesses were specially kind, and taught us much. If we never see America again, we have formed loving links which I trust will never be severed. It is difficult to see how Mr. Taylor can help returning to America. If the United States and Canada were to begin to take up foreign missions as the work of the Church, instead of a mere by-work, might it not be the thing to get our British denominations to advance in the same way?

The Niagara Convention has for years been an eminently Bible Conference. The doors of the heathen world are now thrown open to their widest extent—the harvests rotting for want of reaping. The members of our Protestant Churches are decaying for want of manly work, till some actually justify themselves for neglecting the Lord's marching orders by saying there are unconverted at home. Thank God, these Americans and Canadians in their young prime have heeded the Bible, and risen, saying, "Here are we; send us."

It was hard to come away from America and Canada, where we received so much kindness, and where our work seemed only at its commencement. Mr. Taylor felt this, too, very strongly.

LETTER FROM MR. HUDSON TAYLOR.

DEAR SIR,—Before sailing to-day, I am glad to be able to send you a few lines. Most unexpectedly to me, God has opened the way for a band of recruits to proceed to China, and fourteen young missionaries from the States and Canada are now with me on board this vessel. Quite a considerable number desire to join us; but eight others who are accepted are unable to leave immediately, and our time has not allowed sufficient correspondence with the remainder definitely to accept or decline their offers.

This work really originated at the Believers' Meetings held at Niagara-on-the-Lake. I had the opportunity of speaking twice, on the subject of Missions there, and then left for Chicago, as previously arranged with Mr. Moody. But Messrs. Reginald Radcliffe, George B. Studd, and R. P. Wilder subsequently spoke on the same topic; and the feeling so deepened that when it was ascertained that £50 would support a lady missionary in inland China, and that £60 would sustain an evangelistic brother, support for eight new missionaries was put into the hands of one of the secretaries of the Conference, Mr. H. W. Frost. In consequence, at Mr. Moody's August Convention I appealed for workers, and obtained three, who represent churches in Pittsfield, Mass.; Detroit, Mich.; and St. Paul, Minn.; and subsequently eleven others from Canada, representing Belleville, Toronto, Galt, Hamilton, and Stratford, volunteered and were accepted.

The expense of the journey to China, estimated at £50 each, has been provided by contributions given at Northfield, Clifton Springs Sanitarium, and other places, and from the whole proceeds of the sales, at our meetings, of missionary literature. The missionaries now going out have their support promised or provided for the next year, and will correspond direct with the individuals or churches whose representatives they are. From what I have seen of the missionary spirit in the States and in Canada, I feel sure there are many others, who cannot go out themselves to the field, who will be glad to have a representative there.

Will you pray for much blessing on this first band of fourteen workers from these parts now joining us for our inland work, and ask that ten times as many may soon follow their example?

Yours very truly in Christ,
J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

A Seven Years' Evangel Tour Round the World.

BY REV. J. MOUNTAIN.

I.—SOUTH AFRICA.

AFTER about eight years' evangelistic work in this country, Mrs. Mountain and myself felt called to visit the colonies. We reached Cape Town in April, 1882, and were at once accorded a hearty welcome by most of the ministers of the Gospel. Our first mission was commenced the day after our arrival, and consisted of meetings exclusively for believers. We then conducted a mission for Rev. Dr. Hole in the Trinity Episcopal Church, and also a united mission in the South African Mission Chapel. Our next services were at Wellington, in connection with the church and seminaries of Rev. Andrew Murray. It was a great privilege to dwell for a fortnight in one of these seminaries, and to have about two hundred young men and women from all parts of the colony under our teaching. At Stellenbosch—the Oxford and Girton of South Africa—we held a ten-days' mission. Here were gathered about three hundred young men and women, not only from Cape Colony and Natal, but also from the Free State and the Transvaal. We held three meetings daily, as at Wellington, and conversed with many inquirers. The educational advantages of Wellington and Stellenbosch are of the highest order; while the religious teaching and the spiritual influence of the professors render these places of learning an incalculable blessing.

After conducting a mission at Worcester, we left the Western Province and sailed for the Eastern Province, commencing work at Port Elizabeth, where we laboured for six weeks amongst the various churches. It was here that we became deeply impressed with the necessity of adding to our usual Gospel work that of Gospel Temperance. Drink is an evil everywhere; but in all hot climates it is a terrible curse. Let no one think of sending out to South Africa those who have fallen under the power of drink in this country. In Cape Colony brandy is cheap, and the ruin wrought by it amongst young men no tongue can tell; while, as to the natives, it maddens them, causes them to commit many heinous crimes, and sweeps them speedily into the grave. We shrank from the toil and the many difficulties which we knew that a temperance campaign would involve; but, at the commands of conscience and the entreaties of Christian friends, we decided to enter upon it. Beginning, therefore, with Port Elizabeth, at nearly all our missions in Africa we introduced the Blue Ribbon Army, and were privileged to induce many thousands to "don the blue."

Here it was also that we conducted our first mission among the natives. We found them both here and everywhere eager to hear the Gospel. Many of them, I believe, accepted Christ at our meetings, and thousands of them signed the Gospel temperance pledge. They were most grateful for our sympathy and labours, and their affections and devotion endeared them to our hearts. After Port Elizabeth, we visited Graaf Reinet, Cradock, Somerset East, Port Alfred, Grahamstown, Alicedale, Bedford, Adelaide, Fort Beaufort, Seymour, Lovedale, Tarkastadt, Queenstown, Dordrecht, Jamestown, Molteno, Burghersdorp, Aliwal North, King William's Town, and East London. In every place we met with a warm reception, and had encouraging results from our labours. In nearly every town we were most hospitably entertained, and, as a rule, horses and buggies were placed at our disposal to convey us to the next place. At Lovedale—a most excellent institution for the education of the natives under the care of the Rev. Dr. Stewart—my voice broke down, and I was compelled to be silent for nearly seven months.

When we arrived in Natal we were cordially welcomed. We had a successful mission at Durban, and we conducted a few meetings at Pietermaritzburg. We had by this time spent two years and a half in South Africa. My health again showing symptoms of failure, we decided to sail for Tasmania, where we hoped to find a more bracing climate.

We left Africa with sad hearts. Never shall we forget its devoted missionaries and pastors, its many earnest Christian laymen, its multitudes of natives to whom we were privileged to preach. Willingly would we renew our labours there if God honoured us by a call to again visit its shores. Nowhere have the triumphs of the Cross been greater; and nowhere is faithful work for Christ, whether amongst our white or coloured brethren, more warmly appreciated.

AN AMERICAN'S HOLIDAY.

MR. C. L. BOYER, of Harrisburg, Pa., who has been a successful worker among the children in America, came to London, last July. He resolved to spend a holiday in looking into the mission work done specially among poor children, purposing, if the way opened up, to spend a year working with our missionaries and learning their methods. We will let him give, in his own words, his experiences of three months' effort and observation:—

"The first thing I did was to look in your Directory and find the societies already in operation. I was pleased to find so many excellent societies organised, covering every branch of Christian work. I next thought I would visit the secretaries, and learn from them more definitely the operations of each society. Finding a number of them away on holiday, I did a little sight-seeing. My eyes were soon opened to see there was something to be done for the great mass of ragged and neglected children whom I met in the narrow courts and by-ways. I was anxious to know what proportion of these children attended Sunday-school. I went right into one of the little narrow streets off Cambridge-road, E., asking such questions as: 'Who lives here?' 'What's your occupation?' 'How many children have you?' 'Do your children attend Sunday-school?' I was surprised to find that out of thirty-four families, fifty children were not going to Sunday-school. I resolved to get acquainted with the children and take them to school.

"I had been out to see Victoria Park, and the thought came to me that it would be a good thing to take these children and have a good game with them in the Park. So I went again to the same street, thinking I would only invite about thirty of the children to go with me. I began to take down the names of those who wished to go, and when I got through I found I had sixty names, instead of thirty. I thought I could not manage so many rough children unless I marked them in some way; so I had a number of red sashes made, and trimmed with white tape. When I came to take them out I had eighty in my company. This you may believe was enough for one man to manage, but I succeeded in getting them our all right. In the Park I taught them to sing a few temperance choruses, and to play a few of our American games; I also gave them a small treat of cakes. On the way home they sang as they marched along; on arriving at the entrance of their little street they cheered heartily, and, before dispersing, sang the temperance choruses I had taught them. I may say that the mothers helped me, and seemed to be very grateful for the kindness shown their children.

"This was the beginning only, for I went into one poor court after another, and during the summer have taken out over eight hundred poor children, giving them a little treat of cakes and a happy time in the Park. I made a large American kite for the boys, and they have taken great delight in flying it. I made five small banners, each inscribed with a motto, and these they carried as they marched to and from the Park. Before taking the names of the children, I made them understand that they must be total abstainers, if they would go along with us. I kept the name and residence of each boy and girl. Since taking them out I have visited about six hundred of them in their homes and talked with the parents. In every home I was made welcome. When I asked if they were willing for their children to be abstainers they cheerfully gave their consent, though many of them admitted that they themselves regularly drank their beer.

"As I went among them I distributed temperance songs and recitations, and the boys and girls promised to commit them to memory. I held three large meetings—one in the Free Gospel Mission Hall, Mile End-road; one in Gordon Hall, Globe-road, and one in the Great Assembly Hall. We had about eleven hundred at these three meetings, and about two hundred of the young abstainers took part in speech and song. I have taken about sixty children into the different Sunday-schools in the neighbourhood of Mile End-road and Whitechapel. I found a number of boys and girls whose parents are willing to let them go to Sunday-school, but they say they have not clothes good enough. So I thought I would start little schools in the city mission-halls, not being used for Sunday-schools, on the following plan: That all must come in their every-day clothes. Last Sunday I opened the first one in London and had seventy present. Next Sunday I expect to start another, and have arranged to start the third on the following Sunday. So the work seems opening up."

It must be evident to all that multitudes of these poor children wander about the streets on the Lord's Day who are not under religious instruction. Mr. Boyer has already shown his capacity in this direction. It is thought desirable, by some friends of the poor children, to assist him, so that he may be able to give his whole time to the work, wherever such service seems specially required. As a guarantee to the public, he will have associated with him, as an advisory committee, Mr. John Kirk, of the Ragged School Union, Mr. George Holland, of George Yard, and Mr. Charles Montague, of the Ragged School, Spitalfields.

AN OPEN DOOR IN INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—The last Indian mail has brought me a request, from an old Indian friend, for evangelists to labour amongst the Gonds in Central India. "There are said to be a million and a half of people without any missionary living amongst them. The only mission I know is the Gond Mission of the C.M.S. at Mandla, near Jubblepore, about 130 miles from the Gond hills. The work among the Gonds to the aboriginal races is often far more encouraging than among Hindoos and Mohammedans."

If any friends are looking for a sphere of work in which they will not interfere with existing missions in India, here is a district of a million and a half of people without a knowledge of the Gospel, and without missionaries, excepting one who lives on the outskirts of the district close to Jubblepore.

The need of this and other districts in India is an itinerant evangelist, who will dwell amongst the people, and itinerate throughout the district. Something might be done by churches sending out their own foreign evangelists, and thus increase the missionary forces by a valuable auxiliary of evangelists who might be willing to go on a stipend that would be within the reach of many large churches without diminishing their contribution to denominational missionary societies.—Yours truly,

Bradford, Oct. 15. J. GELSON GREGSON.

FOLKESTONE.—The work sustained among poor children and sailors in this town by the late Mr. Wm. Cook will be continued by Mr. May, 3, Saffron-place, Dover-street, Folkestone. He will be glad of help in the shape of books, tracts, &c.

"Messrs. W. B. HORNER & SON deserve the thanks of all who are interested in the dissemination of pure literature for what they have done in their series of "Penny Stories for the People." These are all admirable stories, excellent in their morals, and unimpeachable in tone, full of life, and light, and incident. There is no coquetry with sin, no half-hearted confessions of Christ, or absolute denial of Him; no fanciful creation of marionettes to dance their part in life, but real men and women moving in actual surroundings, and acting common parts in life with uncommon heroism."

Church of England Temperance Chronicle.

MR. DENHAM SMITH.

It may interest those of our readers who have watched our notices concerning Mr. Denham Smith, which have appeared from time to time, to know the following facts touching his long illness.

During the early months of 1887 his health had given rise to serious misgivings; but, notwithstanding these, he continued preaching with all his wonted energy and love; and it was not until July of that year, when again preaching in the old scene of his Dublin labours, that he gave his last address, where, fifty years previously he had commenced his ministerial career.

Suddenly laid low by a serious outburst of his illness, he was with difficulty brought to London, where, gradually, his condition improved; so much so that he was able to move to Shanklin.

It was here, in the month of September, 1887, that he was again prostrated by another and more alarming attack, which kept him for some weeks on the verge of death. Again, however, his marvellous powers of rallying were exhibited, and in October he was removed to his London home.

Through the long winter months he still remained confined to his bed, and his illness was marked by repeated attacks of inflammation, accompanied with much prostration. But, notwithstanding these, his mental attitude of perfect calm and trustful peace of soul seemed to act with specific force in counteracting the onsets of a malady as insidious as persistent.

As the spring advanced his strength revived, and the summer found him so far convalescent as to be able not only to leave his bed, but, in time, to enjoy his drives and the few steps he called his walk. Thus it was that this happy respite from the weakness and sufferings of the previous months gave him many well-used opportunities of precious intercourse with the friends who visited him, and these were not a few.

But while many thought that his improved condition indicated a return to work and to the platform, those who watched him closely knew and felt that his strength was not established, and that the disease which had so underminded his vigour was but temporarily quiescent; and so it proved. On September 18 internal inflammation and hæmorrhage suddenly cut short this happy time, and once again his absent children were summoned to his bedside, and were for days hourly watching for his expected home-call.

Again, however, he rallied, but yet his strength did not return, and he remained in much weakness until Friday, when a recurrence of the attack took place, bringing in its train alarming prostration, and causing the gravest anxiety.

Difficult though it be to understand God's mysterious way with his devoted servant, it should not be difficult to learn from him how a Christian can face the measure of suffering and disease an all-wise and loving God sees fit to send, his faith having been continuous, his peace unclouded, and his trust unshaken throughout.

—— said, "I am thinking of that word, 'And suddenly they saw no man, save Jesus only.'" He answered, "Beautiful word; and it will be soon now—seeing no man except Jesus. I've been a long time here, still He says, 'I will come and take you to Myself.' He will come and manifest Himself. It will be so nice to see Him, not as the poor prophet said, 'I shall see Him but not now, I shall behold Him but not nigh.' I will behold Him a-nigh, I will see Him a-near. Face to face. This is sinking like a ship that can't go on further; she settles herself down in the waters, to plough the seas no more. So the bodily frame will soon have done all its work, the Lord will say of the poor frame, 'Sleep on, beloved, take your rest.' That is why the grave is called the sleeping-place of the child of God, because there is no sleep really beyond it—we don't want any sleep there. 'There is a calm for those who sleep low in the ground.' I never felt that the Lord would raise me up, and that He would put me to preaching again, as people said. I had no faith that way."

LONG LANE MISSION, BOROUGH.

A bright little oasis in the surrounding desert is to be found at Long-lane, St. George's Church, Borough, where Mr. Baker, of the London City Mission, has for the last eleven years been doing a work that has been much owned of God. His attention has, of course, been chiefly turned to the house-to-house, or rather room-to-room, visitation, which is so absolutely necessary in any effort of this kind. He has also conducted and arranged for many Gospel meetings of various descriptions which have been held at the Mission premises.

A meeting for mothers is held every Monday, when about one hundred and fifty to two hundred poor women meet regularly. Under the able presidency of Miss Higgins, this meeting has grown and prospered, until she is obliged to refuse admittance to would-be members on account of not having room enough to receive them. Miss Higgins has gathered round her a goodly staff of lady helpers, who take a warm interest in the work, and do what they can to make it successful. Many of the women are very weak and suffering, and sorely in need of rest and fresh country air. The ladies have resolved to secure a Cottage Home at a little distance from London; something like £500 will be needed. Having already collected about £400, they are indulging the hope that the remaining hundred may be speedily brought in, and the Home itself opened and started for the summer of 1889. Miss Higgins may be addressed, care of Mr. Baker, Long-lane Mission-hall, St. George's Church, Borough.

WOMEN AND MISSIONS.—A correspondent wishes to direct attention to the "Women's Prayer Union for the Women of China." He asks those who are already members to endeavour to get others to join. He also points out that the greater the number who will unite in daily definite prayer for China, the greater will be the blessing on the labours of God's servants there. Miss Elizabeth Boyd, Dean House, Willesden-green, N.W., will be glad to supply particulars of the Union.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—A very interesting meeting was held at Newport-on-Tay, on Friday, October 19. A number of the members of this Union met to consider the application of Miss Jessie P. Rhind, Glasgow, to go as a missionary to China from the Union. Prayer was made for direction, when, all seeming to be of the Lord, she was solemnly set apart as a missionary to China. She goes at her own charges, and hopes to sail by the s.s. Carthage, on November 29. Members and friends are asked to remember her in prayer. Any further applications to be missionaries will be prayerfully considered by J. C. Smith, Newport-on-Tay.

RESCUE WORK IN NORTH LONDON.—Those of our readers who know of the excellent work which that devoted lady, Mrs. Bailhache, has carried on amongst unfortunate young women will greatly regret that ill-health has compelled her to abandon it, at least for the present. Her fellow-workers are carrying on the Home (now in its second year), but the necessity of engaging a paid matron somewhat burdens its finances. During the first twelve months a total of sixty women were cared for, of whom fourteen have been placed in respectable situations, two are married, five restored to friends, seven passed to other Homes, one died, fifteen are still in the Home, and sixteen have turned out unsatisfactory. Gifts of any articles in the way of domestic utensils, clothing, or food, however little, are of service in economising expenditure. Visits of friends interested will be welcomed by Miss Bowyer, at the Home, Alpha House, 43, Hanley-road, Crouch-hill, N.

CONFERENCE AT MELBOURNE.

The fifteenth annual Christian Conference at Melbourne, Victoria, was held on September 11, and three following days. The subject was, "The Church of God," treated from various standpoints. The Dean of Melbourne presided on the first day, when "The Privileges of the Church" were made the subject of study.

On the second day, the Church was considered in respect of her "Separation from the World." Pastor George Soltau dwelt upon "Separation to God by the New Nature," which implies a previous separation from God by the old nature. There is no evolution out of the old nature into the new; death alone will do it; death with Christ, because that involves resurrection with Him: "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." A man must be dead in sin, or else dead to sin. Dr. Simpson Flett spoke of "Union with Christ," basing his remarks on Col. iii. 1—5. Rev. J. F. Ewing gave a brief sketch of worldliness and unworldliness, and Rev. A. W. Webb followed with some words on the glorious results of separation to God. When we find the price of fidelity to Christ to be the world's scorn, then God comes and makes it up to us, folds us in his Fatherly arms, and lets the full tide of his peace pour into our souls. However diverse the "vessels for the Master's use" may be, each has its special function in the spiritual kingdom, and the rewards in glory will be as diversified as the circumstances in time have been.

"The Pathway of Service" was the aspect considered on the third day. Rev. G. G. Howden enlarged upon resources and commission; and Mr. George Clarke spoke on home and social life. He addressed himself with much earnestness to mothers and sisters, exhorting the former to draw their children to Christ by their own sweet Christian consistency, and pointing out to the latter what the influence of their living Christ-like lives might be on their brothers. If we do not exhibit in our home life the reality of our Christian faith, we fail in the pathway of service. Many professing Christians reduce their religion to a police level—what they may do, and what they may not do; but this is a low standard. Our faith is not to be depressed to the line of mere duty. Our hearts ought to be so full of Christ that in social life we should live above the ordinary levels of the world. In a word, the pathway of service is to live no longer to ourselves, but to let Christ live in us; then shall we be a holy influence wherever we go, and the Church will rise to its true and lofty standard.

Canon Langley spoke on service in business and public life, basing his remarks on Col. iv. 5, 6. Why, he asked, are Christians watched with such interest? Why is the world so anxious to find inconsistency in them? Because very many worldlings wish in their hearts to rise to the standard that Christians proclaim. Men of the world largely discount creeds and prayer-meetings. They look for high honour, strict rectitude, loveliness of character. This is why business life is of such consequence. In it Christians are called to let their light shine, so as to prove that their creed is translated into their common life, that their prayers and practice go hand in hand. Business should be a means of grace. We should let our moderation be known to all men. It is good for Christian men to enter into public life, and there to glorify God. The fact that we are citizens of a heavenly city does not prevent our being citizens of the world. It is possible in any position —ay, in the very highest—to walk with God in separation from the world, to take hold of God's hand, to walk more closely, more simply, with Him, even on the very edge of a precipice.

On the fourth day the "Fellowship of the Church" was considered. On each day there were afternoon and evening sessions, and on the last there was also a closing celebration of the Lord's Supper.

Wesleyans in West London.

Friday last was a great field day with the friends and workers of the West Central Mission. Morning, afternoon, and evening they met to celebrate the first anniversary of the Mission conducted so successfully by Rev. H. Price Hughes, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, and others. And truly there was plenty to celebrate, as anyone must feel who reads the report for the year, to which we made reference in our last issue. God has set the seal of abundant success on the work, and more than rewarded the faith of some, at any rate, of its friends. It will therefore be understood that the proceedings of Friday had altogether a jubilant ring about them.

THE ANNUAL SERMON.

The keynote was well and firmly struck by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse in his sermon in Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, at noon. The text was the utterance of Paul: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." We furnish a condensed and necessarily fragmentary outline of the discourse, and wish all our readers had been there to hear it:—

Here is the one purpose of our religion—that a power should come to us through Jesus Christ for every duty, and for all the work of life. That may be a commonplace remark, and yet it seems as if we required another Reformation to make the Church believe it. If Christianity does not mean Christ-likeness, it means nothing at all. "With the heart man believes unto righteousness"—to right thinking and right doing; not simply to getting saved from hell, and feeling happy. Look at the average Christian. Do we not find him as selfish as anybody else? Is it any wonder that the world turns away from such a religion with scorn? The professor can be as ungenerous and grasping all the day long as the worldling; yet he will go home at night and pray that his sins may be forgiven, and sleep what he is pleased to call "the sleep of the just." Truly he needs forgiveness.

If we look at Paul's words we see that religion is a personal business—"I can do." Many good people look on religion as a grand ideal placed away up among the stars, and not possible on the plane of daily life. But this utterance of Paul's was no dream. He lived in a world that we know little of; he was a prisoner at the time he wrote, and had a jailor for company. He had had his ambitions, but Christ knocked them all out of him. There he stood, almost alone; with scornful Rome laughing at him, with the refined Greek regarding with horror the coarseness of the cross, and the Jew hating him as an apostate. How sublime was his boast in such circumstances. But you say Paul was a hero—one who only comes once in a generation, and that for most of us such a triumphant life is practically impossible. That is a cruel lie. Is it only heroes and geniuses who can live the life of Christ—the One who came to a stable that He might be on a level with the lowest? Nay; it is possible for the weakest and the poorest of us.

There are two sides to our failure. Some lay stress on the second part of the text, "Christ which strengtheneth me," and altogether belittle themselves. Christian disciple, do not, I beseech you, join the "poor, weak creature" sect, that so many people talk about. It is a disgrace to you to be among them, if you are a Christian. On the other hand, there are those who always measure their ability for their work by themselves, and not by the Lord Jesus Christ. Oh for the touch of the Master's hand! for the consciousness of his presence! Then difficulties will vanish, and even mighty London will sink into insignificance. We need to learn the lesson that Christianity is the death of selfishness, and is yet the very creator of individuality. Throw a heap of all sorts of seed into the earth; each seed loses itself, but it also finds itself, and grows up after its kind. How often we are lost in the crowd; but when I think that Christ loved me, and gave Himself for me, I begin to feel that I am of some account in his eyes. We can all do at least three things. We can give ourselves to God; we can lay hold of Him as our strength; and we can "do all things" through Him. How then do we fail? Because we leave Christ out of our daily life, and relegate Him to some distant and future heaven. In our little frets and worries we do not seem to think of Him as being at our disposal. Let us have a great, round, solid religion that saves us from worry and makes us master of our circumstances. This is what it did for Paul. He did not shirk or conceal his circumstances; in one place he sets them forth with great particularity, "Tribulation, distress, persecution, famine, the sword, principalities and powers, &c." "Come on," he says; "I am more than conqueror over you all." Why should we be fearing and apologising when we have such a real, practical, helpful Christ? How does He strengthen us? By his presence—"I am with you alway." I am so sorry for those who have a live devil and a dead Christ. I must have a Christ as real as the sins and sorrows of to-day; and our Christ is such a one. How the presence of a friend can bring help and comfort in time of sorrow and distress. How much more the continued presence of our Almighty loving Lord. Let us show by the way we carry our heads that we are somebody, and that we are "more than conquerors through Him that loved us."

REHEARSING THE STORY OF THE YEAR.

Wardour Hall, Soho, was fairly packed for the afternoon meeting, when brief reports were submitted by the various workers among the poor of the neighbourhood in which the Hall is situated. Rev. Dr. Rigg presided. He said he had prepared no speech, but he had read the report. Moreover, he felt that the meeting was itself an inspiration. What is now being done is the fruit of the principles that have been held and advocated long ago. To deal with London is the consummate problem of the time. There has been nothing like it in the world. The condition of London in the midst of the earth is a standing reproach to us. It has been made a reproach against Christianity itself. The reproach is not altogether deserved. London is the residuary legatee of all the helplessness, vice, and crime of the world; therefore, Christians everywhere ought to share in the work. As to present success, we must not indulge in too much self-gratulation. We are now reaping the harvest which others have sown. We are learning to adapt all kinds of social organisation in the solution of the problem. It could never be solved otherwise. A mention by Dr. Rigg of the "promising young sisters" evoked a very hearty cheer. Their work, he said, needs great care, wisdom, and watchfulness, and may God give it. Why is the Wesleyan Church not doing this sort of work everywhere? Here the president diverged a little into a glorification of the Methodist system, and then went on to urge the importance of getting hold of the artisan population. If christianised, they will become the best missionaries to their neighbours. A passing tribute was paid to the good work being done by Mr. Smith in London's centre, and by Mr. Thompson in the East-end. In the West Central Mission there is more variety, and greater difficulty. It has been very successful, not only in itself, but in quickening the zeal of others. The consolidation of the work demands that the converts should be drafted into companies, and this will be one of the best elements of the stability and continuance of the work.

The first of the workers to report was Sister Lily. She told of some visitors who came to Katherine House, and, with a pious sigh, remarked on "the beautiful work" they were doing. She thought it was no more beautiful than the work that any girl had to do in a humble home. The Sisters have all sorts of prosaic things to do—helping to wash, to scrub, to cook, to nurse the children, &c. The work does not consist in preaching sermons and making long prayers, but just in giving to the poor the help they need. During the year over three hundred inquirers have been spoken with by the Sisters. That is a very delicate work; some striking instances were given. The playground in the basement of Wardour Hall for the children of the slums is an interesting feature. A new development is a work among the workhouse inmates. Sister Lily closed with a touching expression of thanks on behalf of the Sisters to Mr. and Mrs. Hughes for their unvarying kindness. Sister Lily's straightforward, earnest talk, with a half-hidden vein of humour running through it, was a perfect treat to the jaded hearer of platform utterances.

Sister Katherine followed with a more detailed account of work in a specified district; it was full of living interest as showing the varied channels into which the energies of the sisters are thrown. Sister Mary told some of her experiences among sceptical working men, whose objections are generally directed to the lives of professed Christians rather than the principles of Christianity. There are miracles, she said, being daily enacted in Soho, as wonderful as any that happened long, long ago.

Sister Kate, a bright and blooming sister, who disdained the aid of manuscript, said her work was very varied, but it mainly lay among girls who are either at work in the district, or in domestic service. Some touching cases of help rendered to sorrowing, suffering sisters were recited; the telling of them brought tears to many an eye. Alas! what heavy burdens have to be borne by those who are round about us, and we reck it not. These good Sisters at Katherine House may not find their work very "beautiful," in the æsthetic sense of the word, but certainly it must be exceeding fair in the eyes of the sympathising Saviour.

Mr. Booth, a young Lancashire fellow who has devoted himself to the Mission at his own charges, gave a glowing account of the work of the young men in Lincoln House. There are ten of them at present, all teetotalers and non-smokers; "the upper ten," Mr. Booth facetiously dubbed them. They help in the varied operations carried on in connection with Wardour Hall. Why, said Mr. Booth, should not all the empty chapels in London be filled in the same way? It may be very important to teach young fellows logarithms, and the parallelism of forces, and languages dead and alive. That is not what is taught at Lincoln House. We are taught there how to go in, heart and soul, for saving men and women for the Lord Jesus Christ. With a most surprising wealth of military metaphor, Mr. Booth declared that the "upper ten" would never rest till they had planted the banner of the Cross on the highest rampart of the devil in Soho.

A very encouraging tale was told by Mr. Green of Band of Hope work. After six months' effort they had enrolled over 900 members. A children's service has been begun at Wardour Hall on Sunday morning, and a Bible-class is to be begun, with a branch of the Children's Scripture Union. He appealed for Bibles, Testaments, pictures illustrating Scripture, and "anything else that would help us in our work."

Last of all came Mr. Josiah Nix, the energetic head of the Wardour Hall work. As he looked round, he said, he could not but exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" He saw many before him now who, twelve months since, were without God, and without hope in the world, unpardoned and fallen. After a description and warm advocacy of the magic-lantern Gospel services on Sunday evenings, Mr. Nix went on to say that it had been a year of hard work, but it had been a blessed year, with souls saved all the time. In a speech full of the glow and abandonment of full consecration, he told how the workers had laid themselves out to reach the masses of Soho with loving service, and how the Lord had marvellously owned their labours. A mission work with a man like Mr. Nix at the head of it could not fail to do great things, so long at least as the law of cause and effect holds good. As to the future (said Mr. Nix), they wanted to take a hall within ten minutes' walk that will hold 800 people, where a splendid effort might be carried on among the artisan population. The crowded meeting broke up while an attempt was being made to secure the necessary £500.

THE EVENING MEETING.

In the evening a public meeting was held in St. James's Hall. Mr. George Williams presided over an audience which filled the spacious building, and opened the proceedings with a speech in warm appreciation of the Mission and its work. Profoundly grateful to God for all that has been achieved, we may, he said, now ask: Whereunto is this thing to grow? By the strength and grace of God, we may certainly look forward to yet greater good being done by the many agencies of the Mission.

Rev. M. G. Pearse rejoiced at the results of the testimony that had been borne by the Mission. From the heights, as well as the depths, many have been brought to God, and are now ready to bear witness to what the Lord Jesus has done for them. Verily the year has been crowned with the goodness of God. Adding that his soul was filled with thankfulness, he asked the meeting to join with him in singing, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." This was heartily done. Proceeding, he said that among the things he has already learned is the fact that the Mission is a real necessity. London wants more than preaching the Gospel; it wants Christian Socialism, a phrase which will not be misunderstood by people who wish to understand it. The Mission is not to souls alone, but to souls that have mouths needing to have something put into them; to souls having bodies that must have clothes and roofs to cover them. We are, he said, bound to care for bodies as well as souls. It is this great Christlike compassion for men and women that is to save London. When I began work here, my heart was sad at the thought of London and its temptations; to-night it is filled with another thought, and that is the gloriousness of the Gospel which is so perfectly adapted to meeting our needs. I believe there is no place that so magnifies the Gospel as this great London of ours. It is the very loneliness of the place that makes the brotherliness of Jesus Christ unspeakably precious. We have a Saviour just fitted for this great five-million city; and our longing is that the Lord will lift up London and make it the Koh-i-Noor of the crown of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Mr. Pearse went on to say that there is no fighting the devil in London without total abstinence. If we could only make London sober, the devil would be "winged." The lust of London would be impossible, if it were not for the drink. If we could get all the Christian people of London out-and-out on this point, our fight would be a great deal easier. In conclusion, Mr. Pearse spoke on whole-heartedness and consecration. Disclaiming any desire to preach what he was not willing to practise, he led the audience in singing some stanzas of Miss Havergal's beautiful consecration hymn.

Rev. J. E. Clapham followed, speaking at length on the Mission and agencies of a similar kind in various parts of the country. He mentioned that these agencies have had a salutary influence upon the ordinary ministry, and some who had directed their endeavours to securing rhetorical effect have mended their ways, and taken to preaching the simple Gospel. Having spoken in favour of sanctified common sense in methods of work, Mr. Clapham denounced the recognition of class distinctions in places set apart to the worship of God. He urged his hearers to be earnest in their work, and to have faith in God for triumphs yet to come.

Rev. H. P. Hughes, at the outset of a brief speech, emphasised the fact that the Mission is on a broad basis, members of various Christian Churches being actively and officially connected with it. Speaking on financial matters, he said that in order to begin the year satisfactorily, at least £2500 ought to be raised at once. He read a list of sums promised by friends in all parts of the country, and in other countries as well, amounting to over £2000. By the evening's collection, and gifts and promises made during the meeting, the amount was increased to £2500. Mr. Hughes told of an opportunity to take a new hall in a very needy district, and intimated that responsibilities were about to be incurred in connection with a crèche, and a night refuge for girls.

An overflow meeting was held in Princes' Hall. Both meetings were cheering to the Mission workers, and enjoyable to those who attended.

Letters to the Editor.

MUSIC HALLS.

Dear Sir,—Your correspondent "E. O." did good service in calling attention to music-halls, and it is in vain for "Augustin Wellington" to seek to palliate the nature of the entertainments or the character of the frequenters of such places. Here we are met with an evil especially fatal to the morals of our artisan population of both sexes. I make bold to say that it is by the associations of the music-hall that our young people are led into profanity, lewdness, and sensuality. The comic song, emphasised by facial expression and vile inuendos; the acrobatic performances, whose main end is how to place the performers as near death's point as possible; the immodesty of the female artistes, all tend to stamp the whole proceedings as a pernicious, depraved, and degenerating place of entertainment.

I do not wish, however, to write so much in corroboration of "E. O." as to consider his question, "Can nothing be done to counteract this growing evil?" To this I reply by relating the encouraging results of an experiment made by working men themselves in this direction. Noticing that, on a Saturday evening, a low music-hall in the locality of my residence was besieged by youths of both sexes—all of the artisan class; many with the pernicious literature of the novelette class in their hands—I reflected: Was it not natural that after a week's toil these young people should seek for relaxation on this evening, when leisure and money are at their command? Here they have it provided of a low, depraving type; and where else can they satisfy this natural craving in a more wholesome manner? Nowhere. I further reflected: If such opportunities were provided, would they be availed of? Do these young people rush to the music-hall by necessity, or choice? I would put it to the test.

But the character of the counteracting entertainment was the perplexity. To invite them to a religious meeting or semi-religious, a service of song even, would be to meet with failure. I saw I must go on analogous lines to the tastes of those I had to cater for, avoiding its evils. Consulting with two or three working men, co-workers with me in the temperance cause, we resolved upon taking a hall holding some three hundred persons, on the Saturday evening. Now came the important question of the programme. There are songs, no doubt, purely secular, whose words are not only unobjectionable, but inculcating good teachings. Of these we determined to make our selection; but here came the consideration, Shall we exclude the comic? for this was the attraction of the music-hall. Yes; the comic of the type of music-hall must go; but humour should take its place. So with these considerations a well-selected programme was drawn up and printed, which, by its purchase at 2d. and 1d., gave admission. From that evening, four years since, the hall has been crowded every Saturday evening from September to May.

As to the moral results. Mixing with the young people in the audience, I come to know them. I embrace the opportunity to obtain their confidence. As I surmised, many of them had been in the habit of frequenting the low music-hall. Now they, after listening to a pleasant two hours' entertainment, go home; not, as heretofore, at the early hours of the Sabbath morning, but at a reasonable hour. Parents have thanked us for opening these "Saturday Happy Evenings," for that is the title we give them. Finding the young people brought novelettes with them to read, we now supply them with pure literature, which has counteracted the pernicious reading. At an interval, a ten minutes' address is given on Temperance, Purity, &c., and an invitation to attend a place of worship on the Sunday. Many are now attending, where before they never thought of attending. The temperance pledge has been taken at every meeting. One public-house within 100 yards has been closed. We invite some leading gentleman or minister to preside occasionally.

The work has been carried on by working men alone. For the first three years the expenses were kept within the margin of expenditure; but as the work grows the expenditure increases, and it became a question as to whether the work would not have to be given up. But we trust that, while we continue the war against the evil of the music-hall, the sinews of war will be forthcoming. A strict account of finance is kept. R. C.

P.S.—We wish to open a pure literature stall as means allow.

Dear Sir,—As one who has resided for more than two years in the East-end of London, and who has had a fair share of experience amongst young girls who have "gone wrong," I cannot recall one exception where a voluntary confession has not declared that the first step towards ruin began at the music-hall. We all know the power which music has to touch the passions and the senses; but this is quite secondary to the main agent of evil connected with these places, and that is "drink," their inseparable co-partner. The indispensable "treat" at the end of these entertainments (alas! so often drugged) becomes a masterpiece of destruction for the unwary. Who then will have the courage to constitute himself a champion of such resorts?—Faithfully yours,

Rose Benn.

[Several other letters on this subject have reached us, but we have not space to notice them this week.]

FRATERNISING AT CAMBERWELL.

At the Camberwell New-road Congregational Church, of which Rev. W. Tubb is pastor, there have been anniversary services during the past week; and it was announced that on Sunday last Rev. Hugh Chapman, vicar of St. Luke's, Camberwell, known as a very active Christian worker in the district, would preach in the Congregational Church on the existing differences of church and chapel. There was a very large congregation at the eleven o'clock morning service in the Congregational Church in the Camberwell New-road; when the period arrived when the sermon should be preached, the pastor said that he had received a letter from Rev. Hugh Chapman, which he should read to the congregation. Mr. Tubb then read the letter, in which the writer stated that some kind friend had informed the Bishop of Rochester that he was about to preach in the Congregational Church, and his lordship had informed him that if he did so he would break the law.

Mr. Chapman went on to say that it seemed strange in the face of the drunkenness, misery, and social evils that were in their midst, the churches could not be banded together against the common enemy. So long as he was in the Church of England he must obey his chief, but he longed for the time when bigotry should have an end. He knew the kind-heartedness of the Bishop, who in this was only doing his duty. There was no man in England more anxious for the saving of souls than the Bishop, and the blame of this should not rest on him. God grant the time may come when the love of and the union with Christ may be the only religion in this country. Although not present at the Congregational Church on Sunday he should be there in spirit.

Mr. Tubb then said that Mr. Chapman had sent him the MS. of his address, which he should now read for the congregation, so that they should all know what Mr. Chapman would have said had he been present, and he hoped that they would labour heart and soul for that unity of all Christians which was so desirable. The sermon by Rev. H. Chapman, read by Rev. W. Tubb, expressed the amazement of the author at how the existing differences between church and chapel were magnified, while remedies for poverty, injustice, selfishness, drunkenness, and vice were neglected.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Newman Hall, of Christ Church, Westminster-bridge-road.

In consequence of the press of matter, we are compelled to hold over our report of the Dublin Christian Conference.

The weekly meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life hitherto held at Stafford Rooms, Edgware-road, have now been transferred to the more central location, Portman Rooms, 32, Dorset-street, Portman-square, W. The series for the coming winter will be inaugurated by an all-day meeting to-day (Friday), when addresses will be delivered by Revs. H. W. Webb Peploe, E. H. Hopkins, Hubert Brooke, C. A. Fox, and E. W. Moore. The meetings are at 11.30, 3.30, and 7.30.

Disappointed at the result of his interview with the Emperor of Germany, the Pope, it is said, will throw his influence into the scale of European politics "on the side of France, in opposition to Italy and Germany"; in other words, he will endeavour to bring about a disruption of the peace of Europe. Ever meddling in politics, the self-styled "Vicar of Christ on Earth" never ceases to bewail his position, and in the hope of recovering some portion of the Italian territory, he is ready to incite the nations to a terrible war. What a satire is this upon his professions of sanctity and infallibility!

A correspondent of The Daily Telegraph had an audience with the Pope one day last week. The conversation, as reported, did not amount to much. As was to be expected, however, the journalist has given the world a glimpse of the stately saloons and luxurious apartments of the Vatican. That one who professes to be the representative of the lowly One, who "had not where to lay his head," should reside in a palace, and be ministered unto by hosts of obsequious officials, exhibits a contrast which well shows the difference that subsists between the Christ of God and his self-styled "vicar" on earth. The Pope seems to have quite dazzled the correspondent by his entourage and assumption of personal dignity; but the privileged visitor had no such grounds for gratulation, as had the distinguished Roman of old, when, looking upon the outraged Son of God, he admiringly exclaimed, "Behold the Man!"

How little, as we freely use that most useful article, the nail, in all its varieties, do we think of the labour attending its manufacture. We are informed that at the present time nail makers are working at starvation wages; father, mother, and children combined are only able to eke out a bare living. Mr. Thomas D. Clare, of South-road, Handsworth, Birmingham, has invented and patented a machine which, however valuable to capitalists in saving labour and expense, will, should its use be generally adopted, prove the ruin of nail workers by throwing multitudes out of work. Mr. Clare does not wish to do this without providing a remedy. He therefore suggests that "An association of Christian and philanthropic gentlemen be formed to work these machines, and, after retaining a certain percentage, to devote the main profits to send out individuals and families of the nail workers who are in distress to such localities abroad as may be desirable, under certain regulations, by which those who prosper should repay monies to be used to send out others." Perhaps some of our readers may like to know of this plan and to communicate with Mr. Clare concerning it.

In our last issue we noted the utterances of the Lord Chancellor on the spread of impure literature, at the annual meeting of the Oxford Auxiliary of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Now that the head of the legal profession has spoken in condemnation of this great and growing evil, it is to be hoped that the Government of which he is an influential member will encourage him to introduce into Parliament a Bill for the more effectual suppression of books which tend to familiarise their readers "with every conceivable form of human wickedness."

What is to be done with child-criminals? is a question which often perplexes the minds of magistrates and their critics. The chaplain of H.M. prison at Stafford says:—

> I say unhesitatingly that if a society for the manufacture of criminals were set on foot, that society could in no better way further its ends than by pressing for the imprisonment of every little boy and girl who could, on any decent pretext, be brought before a bench of magistrates. Prison officials well know the hardening influence of gaol life on the young, and statistics show how unlikely it is that the first term of imprisonment will be the last in the case of children of tender years. They learn the secret which should jealously be kept from them—that a short imprisonment is, after all, no very terrible punishment.

Not only prison officials, but all who have taken part in the excellent work of aiding discharged prisoners, know the irreparable injury inflicted upon children by branding them with the prison mark before they have had even a start in life. The poor little things who stumble over life's threshold, if sent to gaol, for the most part find how terribly true it is that a sentence of imprisonment is an irrevocable banishment from society. The question remains "What are we to do?" For a partial answer we commend the chaplain's suggestions:—

> (1) In the case of boys and girls alike use freely the power of committal to industrial schools.
> (2) Also, in the case of boys, do not be afraid of corporal punishment, administered with that severity which is true mercy and true wisdom.
> (3) Let magistrates study and act upon that most beneficent measure, the "First Offender's Act," which became law in August, 1887. Very many, I find, are unaware of its provisions, and of the powers which it entrusts to the Bench.

A Romanist contemporary, in congratulating the Roman Catholics "who dwell on the mountains and the valleys which surround the majestic Snowdon," on their energy in propagating the doctrines of their faith, says it can point out six Catholic schools where 309 Nonconformists receive instruction, both secular and religious, the number of Catholic children reaching only 446. If these are facts, the result cannot be anything but deplorable. It may be that the secular education afforded in these Romanist schools is of a somewhat higher class than that of the Protestant institutions, but hitherto Welshmen have not been behindhand in making sacrifices for the truth. It is to be regretted if any of them are to-day found setting God's Word and its teachings aside, and sending their children to places where, if they do derive some little temporal advantage, they must ultimately pay dearly for it in the loss of their spiritual-light and freedom.

It is not Ritualism alone, but a false idea of religious liberty among Nonconformists, that is helping on the Romish Apostasy in Britain, and perhaps also in America. The same people who would restrict the sale of drink would give every facility to the spread of Popery. They forget that the spiritual intoxication of the errors of Rome is far worse than the physical intoxication of strong drink. At Bournemouth we understand that a Primitive Methodist has let a house for a Romish school, on the plea of religious liberty. Yet Romanism is confessedly and professedly a tyranny, always the same. Lord Tennyson has but too well described the modern idea of liberty—"Freedom free to slay herself, and dying while they shout her name."

We much regret to learn that the really good work done by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh's "Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise" is likely to be of necessity abandoned for lack of support. Hundreds of grants have been made to missionaries at home and abroad, and much has been done to convince working men especially of the errors of atheism. The cost of paper, printing, carriage, postage, &c., is so considerable that the "Enterprise" is heavily in debt, a fact which would be readily seized upon by infidel opponents if allowed to continue. We fear it is not without reason that Mr. Bradlaugh writes:—

> It is useless for Christians to be continually crying out about the prevalence of infidelity, and at the same time be doing so little to counteract it. Three Christian Evidence papers have already gone to the wall.

We warmly commend this effort to stem the tide of infidelity, to the practical interest of our readers. Mr. Bradlaugh's periodical, The Anti-Infidel, and his Answers to Infidel Objections, are most valuable. The depôt is at 70, King's Cross-road, W.C.

The Hospital for October 27, in dealing with the case of the two lads, Gower and Dobell, who confessed to the murder at Tunbridge Wells, has some timely remarks upon demoralising, as apart from immoral, literature. We are glad that attention should thus be called to the injurious influence of much of the matter which is being issued week by week. The writer says:—

> The question of depraving literature demands thorough inquiry. Of course, it bristles with difficulties, but so does the subject of drug and food adulteration. If it be dangerous to poison the body, it is much more dangerous, from a statesman's point of view, to poison the mind. It would be quite possible to find out generally the depth and extent to which immoral literature is affecting the character of the people, and with the energy of public opinion which we have in favour of virtue in this country, it ought not to be impossible to deal effectually with the subject.

"The Love of Sensation" is made the topic of an article in last week's Spectator. The craving for it is said to affect the whole drift of the world's affairs, and is doing this more and more seriously from day to day. The two boys, for they are little more, who are now awaiting their trial for murder in Maidstone gaol, are proved by their own confession to have acted for months on the desire to create a sensation. Their reading was such illustrated trash as "Dick Turpin," "Varney the Vampire; or, The Feast of Blood," and "Sweeney Todd." One of them told a correspondent of the Tunbridge Wells Advertiser that he was prepared for his fate now he had made his name known. Such a fact throws a lurid light on the present state of society, and the same thing in other forms is affecting almost all classes. What is wanted is that teachers, without checking healthy enthusiasm, shall guide the reading of the young, and seek to fill their minds with worthy aims.

It is satisfactory to note that the Government has sanctioned the establishment of an Institute and a coffee-house with rooms in which meals may be taken, for every British regiment or battery in India. The authorities have at length found that very few temperance men "get into trouble," and that a large percentage of the courts-martial are due to drunkenness. We should like to see less license given to the canteen nearer home, and an official endeavour to substitute the coffee-house for it. It would be better for the soldier himself, and certainly to the advantage of the taxpayer.

The two extremes of our modern civilisation have recently been strikingly illustrated, on the one hand, by the huge amounts tendered by people anxious to obtain shares in brewery and other companies, and on the other by several painful cases of death from starvation. In one case, a mother, who gave evidence as to the death of a child, had been suffering from ill-health; after leaving the Lambeth Infirmary, instead of taking the necessary rest, she had to go out "tub washing" in order to support her children. The hours of work were from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m., and the wages 1s. 10d. per day, with a fine of 1d. if she was a few minutes late. Threehalfpence per hour does not appear to be excessive payment, and, perhaps, it is not wondered at that one of the children (who weighed only 7¾ lb., instead of the normal weight of 24 lb.) died; yet the unhappy woman is highly paid in comparison with thousands of other poor creatures who toil from morning to night in the midst of wealth.

The Baroness Burdett-Coutts, in a letter to The Times, has directed public attention to a shocking case of cruelty to a child by its mother. She has been committed to prison, but will on her release lawfully claim that child again to its future misery and degradation. From this sad text Lady Burdett-Coutts preaches a very sensible sermon upon national responsibility for the welfare of children. We have an entire sympathy with her object and observations, but surely the case described by her is not so hopeless as she suggests. Why not appeal to the law for assistance? The Court of Chancery has always exercised a wide discretion in dealing with the custody of infants, when they are brought under its care and notice in the proper way. Cruelty to a child has been held sufficient to justify the interference of the Court with the parent's custody. A summons might be taken out in the Chancery Division for the appointment of a guardian instead of the mother, if there is anyone who is willing to undertake the guardianship of the child. Lady Burdett-Coutts says the case is a "typical case" of cruelty to children. Why not, as a test case, try what, under the existing law, can be done to save the child from its unnatural mother? Waiting for fresh legislation may be a delay fatal to the child's interests.

Dr. Barnardo has followed up the suggestions of his recent letter, which appeared in our issue of October 12, by a new scheme for the rescue of young children from the evils of the common lodging-house. He proposes to explain the plan at a meeting convened for Tuesday, November 13, at 3.30 p.m., at 18, Stepney Causeway, E., to which he earnestly invites the attendance of all lovers of little children. On this occasion the Daily Prayer Union on behalf of Christian Work among Waifs and Strays will be inaugurated, and members enrolled.

It is most unseemly that the illness and death of Frederick III. of Germany should have become the occasion for a quarrel between rival doctors. The sooner these unhappy bickerings are forgotten the better: they are singularly out of place over the grave of one who, in the words of Sir M. Mackenzie, was "the manliest of men, and had the gentleness and purity of soul of the purest of women." The fame of his courage and chivalrous forbearance on the battle-field is world-wide; but from his sick-room he taught the world a grander lesson than on the blood-stained fields of Koniggrätz or Worth—the lesson of heroic patience and Christian resignation under acute suffering, and of unselfish thought for others, even when standing in the very shadow of death.

One of the most potent causes of the crime, misery, and degradation which confront the philanthropist and the reformer is overcrowding. One great obstacle in the way of reform is the fact that many members of local governing bodies are themselves interested in the crowded tenements of the East-end. These wretched rooms are let for as much as 5s. 6d. each a week, and the cellar for 3s. 6d. As the law now stands, when a house is pulled down, compensation is calculated on the numbers living in it, not according to its capacity. Mr. Bruce, M.P., in a letter to The Times, pleads for public support of his proposed Bill for the further amendment of the law relating to workmen's dwellings.

Whilst too much reliance upon mere legislative action is to be deprecated, it is high time that the subject of the better housing of the poor should receive attention; it is to be hoped that the coming session may witness united and earnest effort to grapple with this and kindred social questions, and to lift them out of the dust of party politics.

Last week's English Churchman calls attention to a nomination on the part of Lord Salisbury to one of the most important livings in the gift of the Crown. Canon Pigou, late vicar of Halifax, is a liberal evangelical. He having accepted the deanery of Chichester, Canon Ingram Brooke, a member of the English Church Union, has been appointed to succeed him. It would have been scarcely possible for a more ultra-Ritualist to have received the preferment. He defends altar candles, mixed chalice, processions, &c., and boasts that as patron he will appoint none but such High Churchmen. Unhappily he will, as vicar of Halifax, have thirty-two livings in his gift, and thus have a wide field for introducing his chosen sort of clergymen. Believing, as we have good ground for doing, that the artisans of Yorkshire loathe these Popish revivals, we cannot but think that our contemporary, and multitudes of devout Churchmen, have ground for their alarm. With Socialism active, this is not a time for scandalising the people by a virtual repudiation of Protestantism, as to all intents it is; and this also in the name of the Crown.

A very different story is told in The Record of last week, of a grantee of the Church Pastoral Aid Society. Finding himself, as a clergyman, in the midst of the poor, and of a population absolutely indifferent to religion, he and his two curates have set themselves to strictly evangelical mission work. At the close of the usual Sunday evening service, the surrounding people are invited into the church. The only liturgical service used is the General Confession, Lord's Prayer, and Apostles' Creed. These are printed on slips. "Sacred Songs and Solos" are sung. One Bible lesson is read, free prayer offered, and a personal interest in Christ urged. Sunday after Sunday, for two years, large congregations have been gathered in, with decided spiritual results. Are our statesmen faithful to England in ignoring men who are, by God's blessing, saving the people, and in showering all their encouragement upon the Romanisers in the Church?

One of the plague spots of Africa to day is the island of Pemba, which lies thirty miles to the north of Zanzibar. Rev. Horace Waller, writing to The Times, says that vast numbers of slaves are worked to death by a few Arabs who hold the island as tenants of the Sultan of Zanzibar, and are engaged in the cultivation of cloves. Not bigger than the Isle of Wight, Pemba "sucks up life like a sponge." A very large proportion of the time employed in suppressing slavery on the East Coast of Africa is expended in watching little Pemba, in which many Englishmen have lost their lives. It is high time the island changed hands. Rev. H. H. Clarke, of the Universities Mission to Central Africa, also writes, describing the evil that is being done by the German Company now operating in East Africa. He says the Company "is closing the door Livingstone and others died to open"; and adds: "Our influence in Zanzibar is strong; ought we not as Christians and Englishmen to demand that it may be used in vigorous protest—that England will not suffer barbarous cruelties to be practised on ignorant savages in the name of civilisation and Christianity?"

The African slave trade seems to have entered on a new phase since the French assumed a protectorate over the Comoro Islands. The Arab dealers have found out that by paying a small fee they can obtain French papers and colours, and can then snap their fingers at the English man-of-war. A brisk trade is already being carried on in this way; and, unless some agreement is made with the French Government, giving English ships power to board, detain, and take into Zanzibar, any dhows flying the French flag that may be caught running slaves, efforts effectually to check the iniquitous traffic may as well be given up entirely.

RADFORD, WARWICKSHIRE.—An interesting work is carried on here by a lady residing in this village. An iron hall is erected in her orchard holding upwards of 200 people. Men's Bible-classes, women's meetings, and children's service are held weekly. Mr. John M. McAuliffe has just conducted a week of service with considerable blessing, the meetings being largely made up of men.

MOROCCO PRISONS.

After a series of meetings at the Soldiers' Institute, Gibraltar, in company with Mr. Churcher I sailed for Tangier, and had my first experience of Moorish prisons. Certainly they eclipse all I have ever witnessed. Egypt was bad, Greece was worse, but Morocco is too bad to describe.

Lady Green, the wife of our Ambassador, had said to me, "The prisons of Morocco are hopeless and heartbreaking." And truly I have found them so. Sometimes Europeans had thrown oranges through the gratings of the gaols, which appeared to be devoured whole; and when bread had been given to some, it was fought for by scores of hungry men.

Hundreds of these poor prisoners are known to be unjustly detained. Cases are known to me where all the relations of a prisoner are thrown into prison simply because they are related to him.

Having purchased all the bread which the town of Tangier possessed, and a huge basket of grapes, we made our way to one of the prisons on the Kasspah, and soon stood in the middle of scores of poor hungry-looking captives, many of them heavily chained, who live and sleep in this filthy place, which has no drainage, and where such a thing as washing themselves, or changing their clothes, is unknown.

Here we distributed the bread and grapes, and gave to every man who could read the Gospels in Arabic, and held a short service, reading the Word of God, and preaching the Gospel.

The authorities for some time would not permit me to enter the other prison, as they said "it was dangerous to go amongst the worst prisoners," but on my persisting, and through the Consul sending up a guard of soldiers, we then were permitted to go inside, and found it to be more filthy than the first.

Thankful, indeed, were these poor chained captives for the food which we gave them, and attentively did they listen as a Syrian brother read to them the story of a Saviour's love, and exhorted them to cast their burdens on "Seidna Aissa," our Lord Jesus.

One man in particular claimed our attention, and sought our intervention. He had given evidence of being a child of God. He was a tall, dark Soudanese, and on some slight pretext had been thrown into prison, and so much money demanded before he could be released. He had been in the habit of attending the Gospel services in Tangier, and our brethren had good hopes that he had been brought to the knowledge of the truth. After some considerable delay and difficulty I obtained his release, paid the ransom demanded, set him free, and to my great surprise saw him in the evening at the drawing-room meeting at Hope House, surrounded by the noble band of workers of the North Africa Mission. What a contrast! One hour in a filthy dungeon, and with such surroundings; the next in the company of refined ladies and the comforts of civilisation.

A good open-air meeting was held in the "Sok" (market), and after we had spoken and had a hymn from "Songs and Solos," bread was distributed to the blind and poor.

The above places are not adequate specimens of the dungeons of Morocco. The moment you get towards the interior they are very much worse; language fails to describe them. The Sultan seldom orders prisoners to be killed; he prefers to let them die of starvation and disease. On the highest authority, I am able to say that the prison population of the city of Morocco equals the free population.

Sir Kirby Green had told us it was not safe to journey into the interior, to Fez or Mequinez now, as the wells were so low and the water so bad; so that I was obliged to go by way of Ceuta to Tetuan, and, in company with Major Hipwell and Captain Ward of Gibraltar, I was enabled to visit that very Moorish city.

I think the inmates of the prisons here looked worse than I had seen the previous week. Having counted them I bought in the bread market a large loaf for each man, which would be enough for at least two days. I was able to give a large number of Arabic Gospels away in the streets; and, where we found the people could read, we gave them the Scriptures.

I was interested in another prisoner, and endeavoured to obtain his release. I went to the Governor, then to the Baasha, but it was no use. I am afraid the presents we offered to His Excellency were not deemed sufficient; but one would want a long purse to set free a tithe of the poor prisoners unjustly detained. Even to reach some of these places, swollen rivers have to be forded, mountains to be crossed, and Moorish soldiers taken by way of safety, for in the Riff country a man is often murdered for his jelab (coat), worth four shillings. The prisons of Morocco are one and all fearful dungeons; the drainage is nil, with very little light and air, and the stench unbearable. Before a man can be discharged, he must pay the policemen who arrested him, as well as those who release him. He must tip the gaoler; and in the case of one man, when all this had been done, Miss Herdman asked, "Why does he not come out?" The reply was, "Oh, you must first give some more money for the use of the chain which he wore."

Much more might be said, but time and space forbid. May God in his mercy hasten the time when these things shall cease to be.

Tetuan, Morocco. Chas. Cook.

A MISSION AT HAMPSTEAD.

A week's mission has been held at Lyndhurst-road Church, Hampstead (Rev. R. F. Horton, minister), by Rev. Dr. Macfadyen, of Manchester. On the Sunday (October 21), Mr. Horton preached two most impressive sermons on sin, the need of repentance, and of Christ as the atonement. An afternoon service for women and working-men was held by Mrs. W. E. Legg. Bible-readings were given each day from twelve to one o'clock; the first was taken by Mr. Horton, and was based on various passages in Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Hosea. He showed what sin is in God's sight, and how different is God's estimate of it from ours. Dr. Macfadyen took the Bible-readings the next four days, and pointed out in a most helpful way the difficulties young Christians are likely to meet with in experience, doctrine, the inconsistencies of other Christians, &c.

The evening addresses were accompanied with much power. Many remained to the after-meetings. At that on Tuesday evening a brief, plain, and pointed address was given by Rev. F. B. Meyer. A wonderful spirit of prayer was manifested in connection with this mission. The previous week prayer-meetings were held. The number of young men who took part, the brief, earnest, and spiritual prayers, were most noticeable. The workers believe that many souls have passed from death unto life as a result of the mission. A band of workers met nightly to pray for the missioner while he was delivering his address.

The Bible-reading on Saturday morning, by Mr. Horton, on "Joy," was specially helpful and powerful. The secret of joy he pointed out from Phil. iii. 3, as "Worshipping God in the spirit, rejoicing in Christ Jesus, and having no confidence in the flesh."

AMONG THE GIPSIES.—During a recent tour Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, found in six towns nearly 300 families, numbering from 1200 to 1500 men, women, and children, for the most part living outside educational and sanitary influences. Many of the parents are longing for provision to be made for the education of their children.

THE BOURNEMOUTH MISSION.

Rev. W. R. Mowll has seen much encouragement in the mission services which he is conducting at the Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth. The noon Bible-readings have been well attended, while the exposition of the Gospel each evening has been clear and forcible, and souls have been led into joy and peace.

Much outside work has been done with a view to making the meetings known, especially that for men held on Sunday night. The following is a copy of the somewhat striking handbills distributed for that meeting:—

Wanted, 1200 Men! to meet Mr. Mowll and Captain Dawson, Shaftesbury Hall, Sunday evening, 7 o'clock. "Where art thou?" "What is thy life?" "I beseech you also, that ye receive not the grace of God in vain.

Very earnest and real cases of persons seeking the Lord have been met with in the inquiry-meetings. As an illustration of the interest awakened in one heart, it may be mentioned that the proprietor of an omnibus plying between the town and a neighbouring district lends his conveyance, &c., for the free use of persons desirous of attending the evening services.

Prayer is asked that the remaining days of the Mission, which will be continued over next Sunday, may prove a blessing to many careless, anxious, and recently saved ones.

OBITUARY.

MR. R. C. HALL, ROCKCLIFFE.

A few days ago, Mr. Robert Constable Hall, J.P., Rockcliffe, county Cork, succumbed to bronchitis, from which he had suffered severely for some time. He will be greatly missed in Cork, of which city he was one of the principal merchants. Connected with many local companies, as well as occupying the position of Chairman of the Harbour Commissioners, he was a man of great influence, and this was uniformly exercised for the welfare of the community, and to the glory of God. The local newspapers state that "his purse-strings were always loosed in every good cause." With humility, amiability, and generosity, he adorned the Gospel of Christ. On the occasion of the funeral, Rev. Dr. Gregg, bishop of Cork, remarked upon the piety and ability of the deceased gentleman, and said: "He was never afraid nor ashamed to avow himself on the side of God; never afraid nor ashamed to let it be known that he was actuated by and desired to be actuated by religious principle."

SIR J. W. ALEXANDER, BART.

On Thursday, last week, after a long illness, Sir John Wallis Alexander, Bart., expired, at the age of eighty-eight, at his residence in Eaton-square, S.W. The second son of Sir Robert, the second baronet, by Eliza, daughter of Mr. John Wallis, he was called to the Bar of the Middle Temple in 1844, and in 1873 succeeded to the baronetcy. He was quite conscious until within a very short time of his death.

His spirit was that of a child of God who well knew his loving Father. He had proved the promises, and was strong in faith. Devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ was the ruling motive of his life, which was a perpetual realisation of the presence of God's Spirit. One of his mottoes was, "Send on before," and in his generous "sending on" he helped many to carry on works of love and mercy, not in London alone, but everywhere. He was continually giving in support of efforts to serve and save humanity, and many will miss his aid. In 1877 the deceased married Mary Kathleen, second daughter of Rev. John Dreaper, of Northampton, who survives him, mourning his loss in life's pilgrimage, but reflecting with pleasure upon his loving nature and useful career. The initials J.W. & K.A., so familiar to our readers in our subscription list, will be found no more. We trust other givers as liberal may supply the place of "J. W. A."

WAKEFIELD, YORKS.—A conference on the Christian life and the claims of the heathen world, will be held in this town, in connection with the Y.M.C.A., on Nov. 13, 14, and 15. A number of well-known speakers are announced to take part.

Personalia.

Lord Radstock is at Vienna, and has been much blessed in Christian effort among those in the higher social circles.

Mr. John W. Stuttle, late secretary of the Brighton Y.M.C.A., has accepted the post of travelling secretary to the "Warehousemen Clerks and Drapers' Schools," Caterham.

Rev. F. D. Sanford, of Boston, U.S., expects to arrive at Liverpool about November 12. He will hold a mission for Christians at the Stratford Y.M.C.A., from November 18 to 25.

Mr. Sankey.—By the time these lines are read by the public, we expect Mr. I. D. Sankey will have landed in England. He sailed from New York on Wednesday last week. He hopes to conduct Gospel meetings at Bristol, Nov. 3 to 7. Letters for him may be addressed to the care of this office.

Canon Wilberforce was recalled from the Continent by the illness of Lord Mount Temple; but he was too late to see his lordship alive. The Canon has been suffering from fever, and he has returned to the Continent, to join Lord Radstock at Vienna and Wiesbaden.

Rev. Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, is strongly in favour of ordaining men to the work of the ministry in certain places, who have not had the opportunity to acquire a classical education. He says: "More ministers we must have. Our seminaries do not supply the urgent demand, and they cannot do so."

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon is still suffering from an attack of rheumatic gout, and was unable to officiate on Sunday at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. At the morning service a letter was read, in which the earnest prayers of the congregation attending the Tabernacle were besought on his behalf.

Mr. Spencer Walton, after concluding his mission services in South Africa, was to sail from the Cape on Oct. 17 by s.s. Athenian, which is timed to reach England about Nov. 5. He has been greatly encouraged by the blessing vouchsafed in connection with his labours in the Gospel. On his return, Mr. Walton will be glad to hear from friends in England with regard to missions and conferences. His address is 11, Tierney-road, Streatham Hill, S.W.

Mr. Anthony Comstock, of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, is an energetic foe of evil. Recently, while having a much-needed holiday in the Catskill Mountains, he received information that several thousand copies of an illustrated book of a very objectionable character were about to be printed and issued. He started for New York immediately, and before noon next day he had seized the sheets of thirty thousand books, with the plates from which they were printed, including 540,000 pictures. By his prompt action not a single copy of this large edition went into circulation. A week later, Mr. Comstock arrested six gamblers, and seized about 500 dollars' worth of gambling paraphernalia.

The Bishop of Durham.—The World says: "The serious illness of the Bishop of Durham is a source of great sorrow and anxiety to all those connected with him, either privately or officially. He has for some weeks past been in a delicate and failing state from weakness of the heart, and his condition is now most critical. He has been moved to Ventnor, where, it is hoped, some improvement may take place, but it can never be of a permanent nature. His loss to the Church and to his diocese would be incalculable, for he is a great scholar and devout Christian. His work and influence in the North have been enormous, especially among the young men who were preparing for the Church."

Capt. the Hon. R. Moreton, a son of the late Earl of Ducie, and formerly of the Conference Hall, Mildmay, has become a Presbyterian minister in Canada. He has recently removed from Halifax to Hamilton, Ontario. From London he went to the United States, and, after a time, undertook pastoral work in Norfolk, Virginia. Thence he proceeded to Canada, where he was received at the last General Assembly from the Southern Presbyterian Church. He has since filled some of the leading pulpits in Nova Scotia with great acceptance. During the absence of Dr. Burns, of Halifax, at the Pan-Presbyterian Council, Mr. Moreton rendered most efficient service in his pulpit, his Bible-readings at the prayer-meetings in particular being highly appreciated.

Mr. Daniel Hand, of Clinton, Connecticut formerly a merchant in the South, has given nearly 2,000,000 dollars to educate the negroes in the Southern States.

Mr. Gawin Kirkham hopes shortly to realise a long-standing desire by paying a visit to Palestine and Egypt. He has received leave from the committee of the Open-Air Mission to go about the middle of February next, and hopes to be accompanied by several members of the Mission.

Captain Cotterell, head of the Salvation Army Corps at Tunbridge Wells, who is entitled to the £100 reward offered in connection with the Baltic Saw Mills murder, declines personally to accept "blood-money," and General Booth writes to the same effect. It is proposed to devote the money to some charitable purpose.

Mr. H. M. Stanley.—The daily papers of Tuesday give currency to a fresh rumour as to the fate of this intrepid explorer. It is reported that Mr. Stanley and his party have all been massacred, with the exception of two. We can but hope that this may prove to be false, and that ere long we may have authentic news of Mr. Stanley's safety.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Herbert Francis is evangelising with tokens of blessing in Arkansas, under the auspices of the local Y.M.C.A.

Mr. H. Beddow has been evangelising the neighbourhood of Amersham, in a tent, throughout the summer months. The services have been well attended, and good results have followed. In addition to this, Mr. Beddow has opened a mission-hall in the place.

Mr. Mellvine, of the Scottish Evangelistic Association, has concluded a mission of seven weeks at Fishcross, Devon Colliery, in Clackmannanshire. His Gospel addresses were listened to with great interest and profit by large gatherings, and numbers have professed decision for Christ.

Mr. Robert Stark, organising agent for evangelistic work in the London Presbyteries, has been conducting special services at Alderney, one of the Channel Islands. An open-air meeting was somewhat of a novelty, and referred to in a local paper as an imitation of "the popular methods of the Salvation Army."

Boharm, N.B.—Mr. J. A. Smith conducted a successful series of evangelistic meetings in Boharm Free Church during the last fortnight. Notwithstanding the busy harvest season, the meetings were well attended. Christians were greatly stirred and much refreshed, and others were led to decide for Christ.

Y.W.C.A., Cheltenham.—Mrs. W. E. Legg has concluded a week of Gospel services in connection with this Association. The Bible-readings were crowded each afternoon. The evening meetings were held in the lecture-room at the Corn Exchange. At the praise-meeting a great many rose in testimony to having received blessing.

Boston, Lincolnshire. — Four weeks' tent services have lately been held here by Mr. James Neech, of the London Evangelisation Society. His addresses were earnest, simple, and pointed. The attendance was, all things considered, satisfactory. The rapt attention of the many who came night after night may be taken as a sign that God has been working.

Dr. Pentecost, of Brooklyn, has been conducting, with signal success, evangelistic meetings in four of the largest churches in Helensburgh. The meetings, though fairly well attended from the beginning, gradually increased, until, at the end of a week, the largest building in the town could not seat the audiences. The number of persons who have professed to have laid hold of Christ as their Saviour is very large, and the series was only brought to a close so soon through Dr. Pentecost requiring to enter upon an engagement at Dublin.

Mission Schools, Matthias-road, Newington Green, N.—The officers and teachers of these schools made special efforts in connection with the Children's Sunday. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, of the Children's Special Service Mission, conducted a week's services from Sunday, October 21. Mr. Leigh Holme sang the Gospel effectively. Every evening a large number of children and young people attended. Many stayed behind each evening for conversation. About seventy profess to have found the Saviour, while many others have been deeply impressed.

Mr. E. P. Telford has been conducting evangelistic services in Scotland-street Chapel, Sheffield, which is situated in the midst of a dense population. Large congregations have been attracted, and deeply interested; and many cases of professed conversion recorded.

Y.M.C.A., Dorchester.—A ten days' mission amongst young men has been held in Dorchester by Mr. Newton Jones. The meetings have been blessed in the stirring up of Christians of both sexes to a more whole-hearted consecration. In a class of young lads a number have given clear proofs of conversion. Meetings were held during the second week in the Soldiers' Home and Altington Hall.

Mr. Josiah Spiers has held a fortnight's services for children and young people in the Presbyterian Church, New-road, Woolwich. The services were well attended, much appreciated, and blessed to many young souls. Mr. Spiers' visit will be long remembered, not only on account of the services held, but by the many pictorial books and leaflets which he distributed throughout the town to the number of 25,000. T. POINTS FOR PREACHERS.

PRAYER AND WORK.

THERE is a story of a marble-cutter, with chisel and hammer, working a block of stone into a statue. A preacher who was looking on said, "I wish I could, on hearts of stone, deal such transforming blows!" "Perhaps you might," was the workman's quiet answer, "if, like me, you worked on your knees." We are deeply and unalterably persuaded that the power of prayer is the lacking, if not the lost, power of the Christian ministry of to-day. The work done on the knees is the only work that evinces or effects the transformation which is a supernatural sign that God is with the workman. The Bible, studied on the knees, becomes a new book; the cross, seen from the knees, wears a new halo; the sermon, wrought out on the knees, thrills with a new power.—Dr. A. T. Pierson.

THE BEST EXAMPLE.

I remember my first copy-book when a child. I got through the first line fairly, having the master's copy well under my eye. The second line, however, was a copy of my first, and the third a copy of my second. And so on. When, therefore, I got to the bottom of the page, there was very little likeness between my writing and that of the accomplished penman who wrote the line at the top of the page. In Christian work we have been doing something very similar to this. The first disciples copied the Master, the succeeding age copied the disciples, the third age copied the second, and so on. Accordingly, in some parts of the world, there is very little similarity between the work last done and that which was first done. The Christian needs, therefore, to be constantly reminded that he must copy the first line. He must not copy his neighbour, nor his own earlier efforts, but look straight away to the Great Model.—Dr. Pentecost.

HOW TO MEET TEMPTATIONS.

Temptations never give us notice; can we expect them to do so? The sailor does not expect to have notice of every gale of wind that blows upon him. The soldier in battle does not reckon to have notice of every bullet that is coming his way. By what apparatus could we be kept aware of every advance of the evil one? The very essence of temptation often lies in the suddenness of it: we are carried off our feet or ever we are aware. Yet we must not say, because of this, "I cannot help it"; for we ought to be all the more watchful, and live all the nearer to God in prayer. We are bound to stand against a sudden temptation, as much as against a slower mode of attack. We must look to the Lord to be preserved from the arrow which flieth by day, and the pestilence which walketh in darkness. We are to cry to God for grace, that, let the gusts of temptation come how they may, and when they may, we may always be found in Christ, resting in Him, covered with his Divine power.—Mr. C. H. Spurgeon.

GOSPEL HALL, OSBORNE PLACE, BRICK LANE, E.—Should any lady desire the use of a large hall or schoolroom, wherein to hold mothers' meeting, sewing-classes, &c., in the daytime, they may communicate with Mrs. James Sharpless, 14, Sidney-square, E.

WHAT IS PREACHING CHRIST?

ADDRESS BY DR. ADOLPH SAPHIR.

AT the quarterly meeting of members of the Open-Air Mission, held on Monday evening last, in the library of the Baptist Mission-house, Furnival-street, Holborn, Rev. Dr. Adolph Saphir delivered an address on "What is Implied in Preaching Christ?" The chair was occupied by Sir Nathaniel Barnaby, and there was a large attendance of members of the Mission.

There are, observed the speaker, many expressions setting forth the preacher's duty, but the best of them is "preaching Christ." For Christ is his own Gospel; He is the Truth, the Word of God, and the message of the Most High to the children of men. Theories, ideas, precepts, examples, motives, all have their peculiar power and attraction, but the human soul longs after a Person, one to befriend, to rescue, and give peace and light. The eye of man thirsts not merely after light, but after another eye to look into. And there is no book, as there is no religion, in the entire world which is like the Holy Scriptures—like the message of God in Christ, bringing unto us a Person in whom is contained everything we need, and whose favour and influence are all-sufficient both now and in the ages to come.

Having shown with much clearness that Jehovah in the Old Testament is Christ in the New, the speaker maintained that the Son of God is revealed to us inwardly by the Holy Ghost and outwardly in the Scriptures. Passing on, he showed that to preach Christ is to preach Him crucified as the sinner's substitute—to proclaim that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself. The resurrection of the Lord is not for the world, but for believers, who should realise that He was raised for their justification, and is the source of their life, and the beginning of their glory. The crucifixion of Christ was in public, because it concerned the world: the resurrection of Christ was in secret, and He only appeared unto his chosen disciples. The point is not simply that a man died and rose again, but that the Lamb that was slain rose again; that the atonement was accepted by the Father, and, therefore, we know that we have been saved by the precious blood that was shed upon the cross.

Having pursued thoughts on the sacrificial character of Christ's death, and insisted upon a recognition of his threefold office as Prophet, Priest, and King, Dr. Saphir pointed out that the ambassador of Christ must preach Him in three main aspects. First, Christ is absolutely necessary: "Verily I say unto you, Except ye believe that I am He, ye shall die in your sins." Second, Christ is absolutely sufficient: "In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." Third, Christ is absolutely accessible: "Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out." Each of these points was followed up in a practical manner, and with ample Scripture illustration.

A sense of the need of Christ is sadly required to-day. Men do not feel that they are sinners; they do not believe in the fall of Adam, and therefore do not realise the need of salvation. The third chapter of Genesis is, however, a foundation chapter. The old-fashioned saying, "Ruin by the fall of Adam, redemption by the blood of Christ, and regeneration by the Holy Ghost," is a true saying. John Calvin used to remark that there are three specially important chapters of the Bible, and all of them are third chapters. In the third of Genesis we read of man's fall, in the third of Romans of the propitiation by the blood of Christ, and in the third of John of regeneration by the Holy Ghost.

In developing the subject, Dr. Saphir took occasion to urge his hearers to give more attention to the Old Testament. He lucidly pointed out that therein, as well as in the New Testament, God is shown to be merciful and forgiving, as well as just and holy. It is a common mistake to-day to imagine that the Old Testament is severe, and the New loving; as a fact, the Old is severe and loving, and the New more severe and more loving.

In conclusion, Dr. Saphir counselled the preachers to strive for more of the spirit of Christ, and to let men hear, not merely words about Jesus, but, as through telephones, the voice of the Saviour Himself. It was an evident pleasure to the speaker to address such an intelligent audience. On the other hand, the audience highly appreciated the address.

REAPING AT BURTON.

MR. HENRY THORNE has been conducting a united Gospel mission at Burton-on-Trent, and the results have been quite remarkable. From four to five hundred persons professed conversion, among them the manager of the local theatre. It was an address on the words, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee," that caused anxiety in the case of the theatre manager, who, immediately after finding peace, decided to close his place of amusement. He went further, and publicly told the story of his life, and extolled the mercy of God. Later on Mr. Thorne preached in the theatre, with the result that about fifty persons accepted Christ as their Saviour.

Meetings were held in several buildings. St. George's Hall, the largest, was filled every evening, and many persons who desired to attend could not get in. Workers of all denominations assisted, and nearly all the churches united at noonday prayer-meetings. Before the mission commenced there were special prayer-meetings, and the town was thoroughly canvassed. The facts contained in this notice reach us from several correspondents, all of whom are rejoicing at the blessed outcome of the mission.

THE SCANDINAVIAN SAILORS' TEMPERANCE HOME.—A lady who takes an interest in this institution writes to say that regular gifts of flowers would be welcome. Friends prepared to supply the want should communicate with Miss Hedenström, Garford-street, West India Docks, E.

CONFERENCE ON EVANGELICAL PREACHING.—This Conference is to be held in London on November 19—21. The Conference proper will take place in the City Temple on Tuesday morning, November 20, at half-past ten, and on Wednesday morning at the same place and hour. Rev. Dr. Allon and Rev. Dr. S. G. Green will preside. On the previous Monday evening, November 19, a public meeting will be held in Union Chapel, Islington, under the presidency of Mr. H. H. Fowler, M.P. On the Tuesday evening, a sermon will be preached in the City Temple by Rev. Dr. Fairbairn, of Mansfield College, Oxford. The catholic character of the Conference may be inferred from the fact that the following will take part in its proceedings:—Revs. Dr. Newth, Dr. Angus, Dr. Reynolds, Dr. Stoughton, E. E. Jenkins, Hugh Price Hughes, Principal Cave, Dr. Monro Gibson, Professor Davison, Dr. Mackennal, J. Guinness Rogers, Dr. Clifford, R. F. Horton, and others.

CAMBERWELL MISSION AND RAGGED SCHOOL.—A meeting of workers and friends of the Camberwell Mission and Ragged School was recently held, Mr. A. Parker presiding. Mr. John Kirk, secretary of the Ragged School Union, gave an interesting account of the work. Every Sunday morning some 100 children were gathered for religious instruction, and in the after parts of the day there was a much larger attendance. The Bible-classes were well attended, and the progress of the boys and girls in Scriptural knowledge was very satisfactory. On Sunday evenings a Gospel service to adults was conducted by various Christian friends, and every night the rooms of the Mission were occupied. The young men had started a Saturday evening prayer-meeting among themselves. He hoped shortly to have a gymnasium for the lads; but while they were going on thus successfully, they much needed increased help. He asked for the sympathy and help of Christians of all denominations.

HOME.

Mr. Rankin and his comrades at the Ben Nevis Observatory are all teetotalers. He says they could not otherwise stand the cold.

The Manchester Christian Women's Temperance Union is promoting drawing-room meetings in the suburbs of the city and elsewhere.

The total number of pledges taken at the counter of Messrs. Lockhart's various cocoa rooms in London in the first six months of this year was 2049.

The late Lord Mount Temple was a teetotaler, and one of the very few persons of high social standing who wear at their buttonholes the bit of blue ribbon indicative of their temperance principles.

The members of the Ragged School Union, Manchester, have just held a series of temperance meetings at various ragged schools right in the heart of the slums. Many very degraded people signed the pledge.

Madame Antoinette Sterling, the celebrated vocalist, is a total abstainer. In a recent letter she said: "I have myself known such sad and fearful tragedies through the use of intoxicating drinks, that I long ago became a total abstainer for conscience' sake."

The students of Newnham College, Cambridge, are nearly all total abstainers in practice. In communicating this information Miss Helen Gladstone says this attitude is "not so much from principle as from dislike of wine, beer, &c. (my own case), or from motives of economy."

Although the North of Ireland branch of the British Medical Temperance Association is only two years established, it has now a membership of over forty medical practitioners in the north of Ireland, and there is a fair prospect that this number will be doubled during the present quarter.

A great gathering was held in St. James's Hall on Sunday afternoon to celebrate the re-union of the two Grand Lodges of the Order of Good Templars, among whom a schism has existed for some years on the negro question. About 1500 members of the Order were present; in his sermon, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes denounced the liquor traffic as the devil's strongest weapon, and as the greatest obstacle to the spread of Christianity.

The Bishop of London was present the other day at a church ceremonial, and used the occasion for a timely word on the drinking question. In replying to a toast he expressed his gratification at the absence of intoxicants at the festive entertainment, and wished the example was more generally followed in Church ceremonies. In his opinion such services would be more dignified and proper without the accessories of malt and spirituous drinks.

FOREIGN.

The Calcutta Missionary Conference has resolved to organise a temperance league.

A temperance society has been founded at St. Petersburg by shoemakers. It has 1200 members, and is increasing rapidly.

Spain will assent to the prohibition of drink, arms, dynamite, and explosives in the Pacific Ocean if other nations will do so.

Major Archibald, Jacksonville, Florida, speaking of the recent terrible outbreak of yellow fever there, says: "It strikes persons of alcoholic habits fatally."

It is reported that the rumsellers of New York State propose to raise a campaign fund of 225,000 dollars to secure the re-election of Governor Hill, who favours their interests.

By a new law in Iowa, U.S.A., all liquor stores are abolished, and in future liquors are only to be sold by druggists holding a legal permit and complying with stringent conditions.

The Hungarian Premier, M. Titza, has made proposals for regulating the excise tax, payable by retail dealers in spirits, and for abolishing the system of farming out a monopoly of the trade in districts.

According to a return published by the Education Department in Washington, instruction in physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the effects of stimulants and narcotics on the system, is made compulsory by statute in all schools, at some portion of the course, in 25 out of the 38 States, in all the territories, and in the district of Columbia.

SOUL WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for November 10 (Ps. lxviii.), "Blessed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with benefits, even the God of our salvation."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on services at the Gospel Hall, Luton, by Messrs H. A. Squire and H. M. Barnett, on Nov. 4.——For blessing on Conferences for the deepening of the spiritual life, at Bradford, Nov. 7 to 9, in the Gospel Mission Hall, Kensal-road, London, W., Nov. 12 to 14; at Kendal, Nov. 12 to 16; and at Wakefield, Nov. 13 to 15.——For blessing on special services, by Rev. R. Balgarnie, at Leicester, on Nov. 4, and at Trowbridge from Nov. 10 to 16.——For blessing on a twelve days' special mission to soldiers, in Sandgate, commencing Oct. 28.——For blessing on a mission to young people and children, to be conducted by Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith in Walthamstow, from Nov. 10 to 21.——For Joshua and Mrs. Poole, one of whose dear boys, nine years old, has just died.

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION — CASE of Mr. ENOCH EVANS—PRONOUNCED HOPELESS.

Sixteen months before applying to me, this patient took a severe cold. Oppression at the chest followed. He was treated for bronchitis at the infirmary. Then loss of appetite and other symptoms occurred. Was examined by a physician just before writing me, and told his case was Consumption.

For six months he had been losing both flesh and strength. Hearing of my treatment from an old patient at Rhyl, he was encouraged to seek my aid.

A very large amount of correspondence followed, extending over more than a year and a half, during which various symptoms were met by special advice from me; but there was a steady progress to recovery.

In a letter of last month (dated Sept. 4), Enoch Evans writes me:—"I am glad to say I keep well and strong and can follow my employment, which is heavy work. It is my bounden duty to acknowledge the benefit received by your means; as my case was pronounced hopeless when I applied to you. Publish my case if you will, and may God spare you for many years to benefit the suffering.—Enoch Evans, Hall-street, Ashfield, Newcastle (Staffordshire)."

The Lord's Day.

OUR REST DAY. By Thomas Hamilton, D.D. 1s. 6d. Edinburgh: J. Gemmell. This is a new edition, revised and enlarged, of a work which first saw the light as a prize essay. The origin, history, and claims of our weekly rest-day are lucidly stated, with special reference to present-day dangers and needs. The tone of the book is as praiseworthy as its object is excellent. The contention is that the Lord's Day is the Sabbath of Eden, with the day altered, so as to speak, not merely of a resting Creator, but of a risen Redeemer. The exhortation is to an observance of the first day of the week in the spirit of Christ's frequent illustration of the real use and object of the Sabbath, a day of joyful rest. The cogency of the reasoning gives a particular charm to the book.

THE SABBATICAL REST OF GOD AND MAN. By Rev. J. Hughes, M.A. 7s. 6d. Nisbet. This is an exposition of Hebrews iv. 3—9. The thesis may be briefly stated thus: In Paradise the Sabbath was the symbol to man of the Divine rest, into which he might enter by conforming to the will of God. Under the Old Covenant God's rest was regarded as a type of the spiritual and eternal rest which was held out as obtainable through faith in the coming Redeemer. The Lord's Day in the present dispensation has a precisely similar meaning. The day has been altered so as not to look back upon the six days' work of creation, but forward to the completion of the new heaven and the new earth. Moreover, it is not only a standing memorial of the resurrection of Jesus, but a prophecy and a pledge of the consummation of the great work that is now going on in restoring the old creation, and making all things new. The book is very suggestive throughout.

Suggestive Sermons.

THE DISCIPLES' PRAYER. By Rev. J. M. Gibbon. Elliot Stock. The title of this book is somewhat original, and excites the expectation of something original in its contents—an expectation that is fully met as the book is read. It contains notes of sermons on what is called the Lord's Prayer; but the author justifies his title by saying (p. 8), "This is the Lord's teaching, but it is the disciples' prayer." Though only "Notes of Sermons" are given, the chapters are not meagre or fragmentary. They abound in thoughtful suggestion. The author brings considerable originality to bear upon the subject, and the doctrine right through the book is soundly evangelical. The thought is fresh and strong; the style is clear and vigorous; the illustrations are appropriate and new. Others have given more exhaustive expositions of this theme, but none have better enforced its practical lessons. We like the book, and confidently recommend it.

A Fallacious Argument.

THE BASIS OF TRUE CHRISTIAN UNITY. By Rev. S. Kettlewell, M.A. Vol. 1. Wells Gardner & Co. It is not fair to judge entirely of any book by the first volume; still, the firstfruits are indicative of the lump. The author compares in an able and interesting way the state of the Christian Church in apostolic, post-apostolic, mediæval, and modern times. We agree with his condemnation of Papal policy and factious divisions among Christians, and we deplore with him the present sectarian divisions of Christendom. But when he asserts that one definite and settled form of government is essential to the abiding unity of the Church, we strongly and positively dissent; no such uniformity is found in the Acts, and the Epistles point rather to unity of doctrine amidst considerable diversity of customs and government. The author clings to the delusion that Christ's Church is a visible corporation, and quotes in support of his theory the prophecies concerning Israel in the millennium. Unity and uniformity seem to him synonymous, and this fallacy vitiates most of his arguments.

A Doubtful Biography.

AN INNER COURT WORSHIPPER: Memorials of Elizabeth Maw. By Sarson C. J. Ingham. T. Woolmer. We are hardly disposed to rank this among the most useful and interesting of Christian biographies. There was a lack of incident in the life of Elizabeth Maw, and a sameness about her spiritual experience, which make the book somewhat monotonous reading. Outside of Methodism it is not likely to secure a large circle of readers; though the example of such piety, lived under such social conditions, is worthy of imitation by many. Yet, is it wise to record the experiences leading to her conversion with barely any comment? Are not the following words calculated to mislead rather than to help others? She prayed "that God would show her her sin, and give her to feel it." When the answer came she described her conviction thus: "I looked down, and hell opened its mouth below; I looked up, and God was angry." Then concerning faith she says: "I felt I could not believe until the Lord created faith in my heart." These words are in italics in the book, as though they were intended to have special emphasis. It is certainly doubtful whether Scripture would support these explanations of repentance and faith. Earnest seekers after the light will find confusion rather than help from such experiences.

A Book on Healing.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE HEALING. By Frances Lord. George Redway. We cannot see any reason for including the word "Christian" in the title of this book. It is true that some of the statements of Christ are quoted, but they are put on a level with statements from merely human authors; and it is evident that this science of healing could do just as well without them. The methods by which this system proposes to get rid of evil make it still less worthy of the name of "Christian." A series of denials and affirmations, based upon a certain theory of Being, is to effect the work which, in the judgment of Christ, required nothing less than his death and resurrection. This system even goes so far as to deny that evil has any real existence; a statement that makes the atoning work of Christ an unnecessary blunder! The quotation of a few texts of Scripture, unnaturally interpreted, is no valid reason for calling by the name of Christian a system which so degrades and insults the Saviour. It is simply pitiful to note the affectation of superiority with which the author speaks of prayer. "Not a word shall be uttered by us to take away the belief, the blessedness, the faith which have gathered around those stories of answers to prayer. Let them be told again and again as comfort to whomsover they suit" (p. 50). If there is anything in the system as a Science of Bodily Healing, it is a pity to force into it so much that is revolting to those who have a true conception of the person and work of Christ.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BIBLE STUDIES ON THE HIGHER LIFE. By H. W. S. 6d. Longley. Seven papers by the author of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life." They are well calculated to strengthen the faith and courage of the young believer, and indeed of all.

THE SILVER CORD. By Frances Dawe. Elliot Stock. This is a volume of sacred poems, not in the very highest style of poetry, yet possessing such merit that they will be read with interest and profit by many. They are the heart breathings of a very devout and trustful spirit. The thought is deeply spiritual and gracious, and the expression, though simple, has much of beauty and refinement.

ANIMALS OF THE BIBLE. By H. Chichester Hart. Religious Tract Society. A very useful book on Scripture natural history, calculated to help Bible students to a true understanding of the appearance and habits of Bible animals. The author has qualified himself for his work, for in addition to the study of every standard book upon the subject, he has had the advantage of a lengthened tour in the Holy Land. The many excellent illustrations, and the index and list of Scripture references given at the close of the book, considerably enhance its value.

MOTHERS OF THE BIBLE. By Rev. Charles Leach. 1s. Nisbet. A beautiful book. Tender sympathy and love run through the chapters which will be helpful and comforting to many a troubled and anxious parent.

NEW TESTAMENT CHRONOLOGY. By W. T. Lynn. 3d. Stoneman. The principal events recorded in the New Testament are here arranged under their probable respective dates. Two illustrative maps are supplied. The work of a cautious and competent writer, this little book may be strongly commended to the attention of Sunday-school teachers and students generally.

THE WEDDING RING. By John Maskell. 2s. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. This is a revised edition of a pretty volume, giving the history of the wedding ring, with an account of its literature and the many superstitions clustering round it. Much curious information has been brought together, and is presented in a manner that amply testifies to the author's industry and erudition.

The biography of the late Rev. W. Fleming Stevenson, of Dublin, written by his wife, will be published about the middle of this month by Messrs. Nelson & Co.

THE SURE DETECTIVE; OR, SIN FINDING THE SINNER OUT. This a reprint of a sermon recently preached in Christ Church, Lambeth, by Rev. Newman Hall, with reference to the murders in East London. Sin is forcibly arraigned, and the Gospel message presented with great power. 2d. Nisbet.

THE PROGRAMME OF LIFE. By Rev. W. L. Watkinson. 1s. Woolmer. Another volume of the "Helps Heavenward" series, and one calculated to minister much pleasure and profit to earnest readers. The chapters deal with life in the aspects of its discipline, originality, monotony, contrasts, gentleness, and temptations; they are full of practical instruction set forth with freshness and vigour.

Appeals.

Tent-street, Bethnal Green.—An appeal is made for help in thoroughly repairing the mission hall. The estimated cost is about £70. The treasurer is Mr. J. PEARSON, 5, Cambridge-road, E.

Girls' School, Hong Kong.—Will anyone interested in missions kindly help toward the purchase of a small magic lantern with slides, for use in Chinese girls' schools and women's meetings in Hong Kong?—MARGARET JOHNSTONE, care of Miss WEBB, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W.

Anti-Sunday Travelling Union.—This Union, which is endeavouring to check the prevalent habit of Sunday travelling is in great need of funds in order to carry out an effort for bringing the subject before the ministers of the principal churches in our land. Contributions will be received by the SECRETARIES, 18, Christchurch-road, Brondesbury, London, N.W.

From the Welsh Mountains.—A very cold and long winter is feared by the poor residents of the mountainous district of Longtown, near Abergavenny. Dr. Leslie Thain, surgeon and medical officer of health for the district, will gratefully receive for distribution, and acknowledge by letter, any parcels of cast-off clothing or blankets that may be sent to him, carriage paid, and addressed—Dr. THAIN, Longtown, Pandy Station. Coal money will also be acceptable.

THEATRICAL TEA MEETING.—In connection with his work among the theatrical employés, Mr. Forbes held a tea-meeting on Friday last at the Crystal Palace. A number of the hearers were visibly affected.

OPEN-AIR WORK.—At a recent meeting held in Hawkstone Hall, Mr. Benson, evangelist in connection with Rev. Newman Hall's church, reported that, notwithstanding the wet season, he had held 153 services, at which over 600 Gospel addresses had been given to more than 20,000 persons. Mr. Hall and his assistant, Mr. Grainger, often take part; but the speakers are chiefly working men. Several interesting testimonies were given at the meeting as to good resulting from the mission. Mr. Benson will conduct winter meetings in Jurston-street Schoolroom, one of the many schools in connection with Mr. Newman Hall's congregation.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, November 11.

CALEB'S INHERITANCE.

Josh. xiv. 5—15. Golden Text: Ps. xxxvii. 3.

Time.—Somewhere between six and seven years after Israel's entrance into Canaan. The twelve spies were sent about one and a half years after the Exodus, and so thirty-eight and a half years before the crossing of Jordan. Caleb, being forty years old when he acted as spy (ver. 7), was then 78—79 years old. But he is now 85—i.e., between six and seven years older than when he entered the land.

Intervening History.—The fall of Ai (viii. 1—29) opened the way into the heart of the country. The first use made of this opportunity was to obey the commandment of Moses, and gather the whole nation together at the very place (between the mountains of Ebal and Gerizim) appointed by Moses, for what was probably the most solemn and remarkable religious ceremony ever observed. (Comp. Deut. xxvii. with Josh. viii. 30—35. See also Beecher's vivid description of the scene in his Life of Christ, pp. 234 and 235.) Meanwhile the Canaanitish kings unite in a great league of defence (ix. 1, 2), which league is greatly weakened by the submission of Gibeon (ix. 3—27), a powerful city commanding the pass of Beth-Horan, the gateway from the central highlands of India to the plains of Philistia. Hearing of Gibeon's surrender, the neighbouring kings suddenly unite to attack Gibeon (x. 1—5); the Gibeonites appeal to Joshua (x. 6); he responds by making a forced march and a sudden attack; thereby inflicting a crushing defeat (x. 7—27). When he had thus broken the Southern League, and had followed up his victory by taking the towns and lands of the enemy (x. 28—43), he marched northward to meet and rout the kings of the Northern League in a great battle fought by the waters of Merom (xi.). All this took about six years to accomplish. Our lesson takes up the story just when the land has been subdued, and is about to be divided, first among the tribes by lot, and afterwards among the various families, &c., probably according to other rules, e.g., numbers, merit, &c.

This mountain—i.e., the district round about Hebron, where the spies saw the giants, the Anakim (Num. xii. 23—33). "Hebron is the mountain of Judah" (Josh. xx. 7). The city of Hebron was the highest in Judea, being 600 ft. above Jerusalem, 2600 ft. above the Mediterranean, and only 400 ft. lower than Helvellyn. This mountain included both the cave of Machpelah, with its tombs of the Patriarchs, and the winding valley of vineyards, whence came the huge cluster of grapes of Eschol which the spies cut and carried home to the camp. "In its rocky hills are still to be seen the ancient wine-presses."—Stanley.

Then shall I be able to drive them out.—But how comes it that there are enemies to be driven from Hebron, seeing that Hebron was taken, and its defenders destroyed, after the battle of Beth-Horan (x. 36—39)? Ans.—Though Joshua defeated the foe in open battle, he never fully possessed their fortresses and lands. Much land remained to be possessed, of which an account is given in xiii. 1—7. The Canaanites still held certain stongholds up and down the country, which the Israelites were "slack" to possess (xviii. 3). Among these unpossessed portions was Philistia, westward of Hebron. It seems that many of the Anakims, expelled by Joshua, had retreated to the Philistine country (xi. 21, &c), and had afterwards re-occupied Hebron. Hence Caleb finds them still in possession, and is obliged to overcome them in war (xv. 13 and 14).

LESSONS.

(1) We have here a portrait of a man—simple, true, brave, and strong. "What a charm there is in manliness—in its vigour, its honesty, its fortitude and daring. What worth, what happy union of strength and spirit, what joy! 'Add to your faith manliness,' says Peter. Observe the magnificent manliness of Caleb. It gleams through his report as a spy. It is apparent in this choice of the as yet unconquered territory. It comes out in the energy of his old age. And this simple quality in one man was of incalculable service to Israel. We all need this quality.

Our doubts are traitors,
And make us lose the good we oft might win,
By fearing to attempt.

(2) This man was the man he was, because he was a man of God.—"Godliness gives larger thought, greater dignity, scope for grand purposes, and consciousness of help laid up. By communion with God man attains calmness, wisdom, strength, and help. We are short of manliness because short of godliness."—Glover. Caleb's godliness is seen in: (1) His jealousy for God's honour, e.g., his appeal, "Only rebel not against the Lord" (Num. xiv. 9). (2) His habitual devoutness—"Behold, the Lord hath kept me alive" (ver. 10). It was the Lord who did everything for him. If he glories in his strength, it is as a proof of the Lord's great mercy. Again, though very conscious of, and thankful for, his splendid vigour, he never ventures to think himself sufficient for his task; his sole reliance is in God (see ver. 12). (3) His unswerving and wholehearted obedience—He "followed the Lord fully," i.e. (a) in all things, never picking and choosing; (b) at all times, he was never off duty; and (c) with all his heart, without grudging or reserve. In this wholehearted obedience to his captain is to be seen both the secret and the proof of his manliness.

(3) The good man's reward.—(1) Is a promised reward. Think of Caleb cherishing the bright hope of his possession for forty-five years! How cheering that hope! Let those of us who follow Jesus, anticipate our inheritance in like manner. (2) Though promised it has yet to be attained by earnest and confident effort.—The "Anakim must be expelled." Some of our highest blessings are fenced about with the greatest difficulties. Some of the "Anakim" which resist us are—(a) the evil of our own hearts, e.g., indolence, fear, earthliness; (b) temptations of the world, e.g., bad examples, customs, distracting pleasures; (c) direct hindrance in persecution and opposition growing out of the world's ignorance, prejudice, envy, &c." (3) Is the more precious because it has first to be received by faith, and then attained by effort.—All that was best in Caleb was strengthened by those forty-five years of waiting in hope, as well as by the last great struggle for possession. Also, how peculiarly precious the possession thus given in promise to faith, thus waited for, and thus boldly won. Apply this to private life, special work for Christ in the world, or general philanthropic work. (4) Endures.—"Thine inheritance and thy children's for ever, because thou hast wholly followed the Lord my God (8)." Even in worldly things, nothing lasts like those which result from genuine righteousness. (5) Enriches others.—All Israel was safer, richer, and happier because of Caleb's reward. He relieved the land of a great peril. So it always is; the rewards of faithfulness to God and man bring blessings to multitudes. The lad who by prayer and pains wins his way to honour and wealth, by so doing elevates the whole family. (6) Is glorious.—What pure honour, what glory shines around Caleb! Why? For his deeds on the battlefield? For his strength, wisdom, &c.? No! only because he was faithful; but especially because he could stand almost alone for God, faithful among the faithless. Multitudes of wonderful things have been done since his time, that startled the world; but while these are forgotten, the glory of Caleb's honour is brighter than ever. "The righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance."

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

In a recent letter to The Times, Mr. George Hatton makes a very weighty statement as to the work of the Discharged Prisoners' department, which has now reached very large proportions. "Beyond the breakfasting of prisoners daily discharged and the employment found for them, we are now engaged in a most important work of endeavouring to prevent crime by saving lads of tender age from a first conviction and the consequent criminal taint that would follow, and our success in this department has been very considerable. We have now a comfortable home situated in Greville-street, Holborn, and presided over by a most suitable matron, who watches over the lads with motherly interest. The place has sleeping accommodation for 50. Numbers of the present inmates are already doing well in good situations and the work is daily growing."

Mr. Hatton (whose address is 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.) makes an earnest appeal for £500 required for the necessities of the work. A friend has offered £100 on condition of the balance being raised at once.

Y.M.C.A. Bible Lessons.

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, November 11.

Idleness.—Proverbs xxiv. 30—34.

Solomon points out the perplexities of the idle (Prov. xv. 19), their lack of power in the simplest things (xix. 24), their destitution (xx. 4), their inability to fulfil their own desires (xxi. 25), their disposition to create imaginary difficulties (xxii. 13), and their inordinate love of ease (xxvi. 14). In our lesson we have a graphic picture of the results of idleness as seen in the neglected property of an idle man.

We may notice, with respect to the slothful one: (1) There was no lack of opportunity for work.—The field and the vineyard required cultivation. How much there is to be done in the field of the world. There is the work of digging; of seed sowing (Matt. xiii. 37, 38; Luke viii. 11), and of ingathering (John iv. 36). Comp. "As we have opportunity" (Gal. vi. 10). (2) It was to his interest to work.—The field and the vineyard were his own. Those who work for Satan work against themselves (comp. "What fruit?", Rom. vi. 21), but those who work for God do so to their own advantage (Heb. vi. 10; Matt. x. 42). Herein is "great gain" (1 Tim. vi. 6). (3) His sin was that of neglect.—The neglect of salvation will be enough to involve men in ruin (Heb. ii. 3). The neglect of spiritual culture must be guarded against as much as the neglect of salvation (1 Tim. iv. 14). "Other bishops," says Latimer, "may neglect their dioceses, but the devil never neglects his." (4) His slothfulness resulted in a harvest of a hurtful kind.—Thorns and nettles grew where there might have been wheat, and barley, and grapes. No life is without its harvest. If there is not the fruit of the Spirit (Eph. v. 22), there will be the lusts of the flesh (Eph. v. 21). Daniel Quorm had no weeds in his garden, because, he said, it was so full of flowers, that there wasn't any room for them. (5) Enemies took advantage of his slothfulness.—Note the broken wall. Wicked boys generally break the windows of an empty house, and the devil takes advantage of the man "void of understanding" (ver. 30). Comp. Prov. vii. 7.

Lessons (vv. 32—34): (1) Sin is deceptive.—The sluggard does not propose to be a sluggard always, but he will have "a little more sleep." Little departures from the right course lead to greater. A little sloth may be the precursor of great ruin (comp. "The little foxes," Cant. ii. 15). (2) Punishment is inevitable.—Slothfulness is followed by poverty. Comp. Rom. vi. 23, Num. xxxii. 23. (3) The punishment is appropriate.—The man who will not work for his bread will suffer for want of it (2 Thess. iii. 10; 1 Thess. iv. 11). (4) A bad life is a beacon.—"I saw." Comp. "Hast thou marked," &c., Job xxii. 15.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.—Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd have received a second legacy of £100 to be devoted to the reception of orphan children, and other suitable candidates, in the comfortable bedrooms of Macready House. This important work of rescue is now commenced, and doubtless the family of theatrical children will soon be a large one. The cost of maintenance for each will be 9d. per day—5s. per week, or £12 per annum; thus securing the comforts of a Christian home to some little "fairy," or actress, who has had no religious privileges.

CAMBRIDGE.—On Thursday, last week, Mr. Grattan Guinness gave the first of four lectures on "Romanism and the Reformation in the Light of Prophecy," at Cambridge, by invitation of the Undergraduates' Evangelical Protestant Union. On the previous Monday evening the Martyn Hall was crowded to hear Bishop Horden's story of his work in Moosoonee, North-West America. The subject was quite new to most of the men, and the Bishop left a deep and strong impression on all hearts. His testimony to the blessedness of missionary work, even in a region where "letters come only three times a year," went home to all. "So far as I can judge," says the correspondent of The Record, "the missionary spirit here is stronger and warmer than a year ago; and indeed it was not cold then." The Bishop of Moosonee spoke again on Tuesday evening to an audience filling the large Guildhall.

Presentation Edition: Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"No one can read this almost unique volume without being stimulated to a more diligent study of THE BOOK. It is not, strictly speaking, evidential; yet the key to valuable Scripture evidence is to be found within. It is not exegetical; but the careful reader will be taught thereby a sound method of exposition. It is not homiletical; although the seed corn for dozens of addresses are contained in its brief compass. Buy it, we can say to all; read it with your Bible open and a common-place book to hand, ready to catch up and store away the many precious things so lavishly scattered throughout its pages."—Night and Day.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Autumnal Conference of the Church Association will be held on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday next, at the Pavilion, Brighton, under the presidency of Captain Cobham.

The first meeting of the Joint Committee of the Free Reformed Episcopal Church of England body took place on Friday last, when satisfactory progress was made with the revision of standards, canons, &c. The "Declaration of Principles" was agreed on and passed.

A most successful ten-days' mission has been concluded in St. Mary's parish, Maldon. The missioners were Rev. S. A. Selwyn, vicar of St. James's, Hatcham, and Rev. J. W. Mills, rector of St. Lawrence, near Maldon. The mission was closed by a thanksgiving service, when the church was filled to overflowing, and 246 persons remained to the Communion Service which followed.

A special sermon was preached at St. Luke's, Camberwell, on Sunday week, by Rev. H. B. Chapman, the vicar, on the subject of "Reform in the Church of England." The speaker's remarks, says The Rock, were frequently of a caustic nature; he advocated reforms of a most democratic character, amongst others the total abolition of deaneries, and the reduction of all bishops' incomes to £500 per annum.

To-morrow (Saturday) week, Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway, commences a ten-days' mission in St. James's Parish Church, Maison Dieu-road, Dover.—Rev. C. H. Wainwright, of Blackpool, is to conduct a mission in St. Cuthbert's Church, West Hampstead, N.W., from November 12 to 18. Services will be held each day (Saturday excepted) at 11.30 a.m. and 7.30 p.m., and on Sunday, November 18, at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. Prayer is requested on behalf of these special efforts.

Several most interesting and encouraging letters from Eastern Equatorial Africa are published in The Church Missionary Intelligencer for this month, where also Canon Isaac Taylor's recent article, "The Great Missionary Failure," is replied to. There is news from Uganda up to June 27, reporting Messrs. Gordon and Walker well, and King Mwanga in a more favourable mood. They were having large congregations of Christians and inquirers. Rev. H. Cole writes from Kisokwe, in Usagara: "The itinerating part of our work is very hopeful; the people have begun to cast their idols to the moles and the bats. Their old faiths are being undermined through the preaching of the everlasting Gospel.'

At the weekly meeting of the C.M.S. Lay Workers' Union for London, held on Monday, last week, in the Lecture Hall of St. James's, Holloway, on the invitation of the "Mpwapwas," the young men's missionary band attached to that church, there was a conference on "Lay Help in the Mission Field." It was opened by Mr. Livesey Carrott, who argued that without further delay bands of laymen should be sent out to the mission field. An interesting and animated discussion ensued, at the conclusion of which farewell was given to Mr. F. Swainson, a member of the Union, proceeding to take up missionary work in the diocese of Saskatchewan and Calgary, North West Canada.

BAPTIST.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith on Saturday last commenced a special mission at Upton Chapel, Lambeth-road, S.W. To-morrow they commence a mission in Christ Church, Westminster-bridge-road.

At the autumnal meetings of the Warwickshire Conference held at Cradley-heath, a paper was read by Rev. J. Salisbury, on "Union with Christ the Condition of Spiritual Power," in which he remarked: "Faith in Christ, personal faith in Himself, we hold to be the condition of spiritual power. Creeds never have proved, and never will prove, a sure bond of Christian union, or a wholly satisfactory basis for evangelistic co-operation."

The Autumnal Conference of the General Baptist Churches of the Midland division adopted the following resolution:—"That this Conference regards it as pre-eminently desirable that the General Baptist Missionary Society should, as soon as practicable, seek to unite itself with the Baptist Missionary Society, and that we suggest to the committee of the Foreign Missionary Society the wisdom of referring the question of affiliation to every church in the association."

A service was held at the Baptist Mission House on Tuesday evening, last week, to take leave of Miss Lilian Blackwell, of Northampton, Miss Emily Saker, and Miss Dean, three lady missionaries who left on Thursday for India as zenana missionaries. The ladies are going out in the company of Rev. A. McKenna, his wife, and son, together with Miss Allen, daughter of Rev. James Allen, of Colombo, Ceylon, who goes out to be married to Rev. Herbert Anderson, of Backergunge, Bengal.

On Sunday week the seventeenth anniversary of Toxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool, was celebrated. The pastor, Mr. W. P. Lockhart, preached. In connection with the church six mission stations are maintained. The Sunday-schools are attended by about 1000 children, with seventy teachers. In connection there are children's services, Bands of Hope, mothers' meetings, tract distribution, &c., all involving much labour, which is heartily given by earnest bands of workers. Mr. Lockhart now enters upon the twentieth year of his pastorate. This long service he has faithfully and cheerfully rendered, gratuitously, with much appreciation on the part of the members, who have thus been able to do an amount of aggressive work which would have been impossible if a pastor had to be paid.

SALVATION ARMY.

There are now over 830 Junior Soldiers' Corps in Great Britain. Those in the London District raised £212 for the recent self-denial week.

Large crowds attend the Army's meetings at Enklingen, Holland, where the Burgomaster is very favourable, his policemen acting as janitors.

Since the opening of the Christiania barracks there have been 1300 at the pentitent form. Copenhagen No. 1 Corps report over 140 penitents in 26 days.

All the World for November has some good illustrations and stirring articles, especially one entitled, "A Day with a Rescue Mother." The foreign intelligence too is varied and interesting.

Strong representations will be made to the Government to take up the case of Miss Stirling, a British subject recently sentenced to 100 days' imprisonment in the Castle Chillon, Switzerland, for holding a meeting for children.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A six-weeks' mission in a Gospel tent in Maxwell, Indiana, resulted in many conversions, and the accession of thirty-six members, with the request for a new meeting of Friends.

Anne Warner Marsh, in pursuance of her service, was at Bristol on Sunday, the 21st ult.; and Frances Anne Budge, of London, has been in Cumberland visiting meetings there.

John T. Dorland has recently had a week's mission in Carlisle; besides several meetings in Penrith, much blessing attended both the services. He has also been at Westmoreland quarterly meeting in Kendal, and at Yorks quarterly meeting in Sheffield, following up the latter with Gospel services and Biblical instruction. He goes from thence to Darlington. The Lord has owned and upheld all through.

Indiana yearly meeting has been a time of much blessing. The eighth annual report of the Committee of Ministry reports: 133 series of meetings, with 2335 professed conversions, 1169 applications for membership, 15 new meeting-houses at a cost of 20,000 dollars, and 30 persons, mostly young, coming forward in the ministry. Calls for work are coming from Brazil. Henry Stanley Newman, very acceptably present, and "not a whit behind any Western Friend in modern methods of definite work in soul-saving."

PRESBYTERIAN.

On Tuesday, last week, Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson preached the opening sermons of a new church at Leytonstone, which has been erected by Rev. G. Drysdale. In the district there is large scope for aggressive Christian effort.

Rev. W. Rigby Murray, Brunswick-street Church, Manchester, has commenced a course of addresses to young men and maidens on the "Heroes and Martyrs" of the Reformation," illustrative of the medallion portraits in the windows of his church. The second address was delivered on Sunday week—subject, "John Huss," when the church was filled. A Bible-class for the study of the life of Christ was formed at the close.

The pastor (Rev. Mr. Watters) has conducted a fortnight's special mission in the English Presbyterian Church at Cardiff, which has been blessed by God to the conversion of some souls. The young men of this congregation have formed themselves into a Christian Guild. The chief feature of the Guild will be a parlour, which will be open every evening for the young men. Besides this, it will include a literary society, a White Cross and temperance society, a Bible-class and prayer-meeting, recreation clubs, and occasional social re-unions. Nearly fifty young men have joined it.

METHODIST.

A new chapel is about to be erected at Bassein-park, Bayswater, in memory of the late Sir William M'Arthur.

The young men's class in connection with John-street Primitive Methodist Chapel, Sheffield, has just held a week's special mission. The services have been conducted by the young men, and have been most successful.

In the Brunswick-place Wesleyan Chapel, Newcastle, Rev. T. Waugh has concluded a very successful twelve-days' mission. A large number of persons have passed from death into life. From one family four brothers professed to have found Christ.

A ten-days' mission has been held at Wolverton. The services drew large congregations, and have been productive of much good. The church has been quickened and greatly blessed, and upwards of fifty adults and scholars in the Sunday-school have sought salvation.

An important meeting in aid of the missionary cause, was held in the King's-cross Primitive Methodist Chapel, Winchester-street, on Tuesday, last week. The object was to form a North London Young People's Association, for promoting the missionary spirit, and raising funds to carry on the work.

There was a magnificent collection at the anniversary meeting of the Wesleyan Central Hall, Manchester. A building having been erected at a cost of £44,000 for mission purposes and central meetings of the Wesleyan body, an appeal was made to Methodists to raise £10,000 to reduce the debt on the building. A collection was taken at the close of the meeting, and realised, in money and written promises, over £5000.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new chapel has been erected in Humberstone-road, Leicester, and was opened on the 18th ult., when Rev. Henry Simon preached.

Rev. C. Sales has completed his first year's pastorate of Coverdale Chapel, Limehouse. During the year thirty-five members have been received into Church fellowship, and the congregations have been more than doubled.

At the anniversary services of the Wood-street Church, High Barnet (pastor Rev. J. Matthews), an encouraging account was given of the state of the church; 44 new members were added during the year. It is proposed to make extensive alteration and enlargement of the chapel and school-room.

Rev. J. Lewis Pearse has resigned the pastorate of Nether Chapel, Sheffield, but will remain in the town to assist the Congregational churches round about by preaching, lecturing, conducting special services, forming young people's guilds, &c.

Rev. William Mottram has been ministering in the Borough-road Chapel, as successor to the late Rev. G. M. Murphy, for the past twelve months; his labours have been much blessed by God, and well appreciated by the poor of the district. During the year sixty-two persons have been received into the fellowship of the church, and much good work has been acomplished by the various religious, benevolent, and temperance societies connected therewith.

The Clifton Down Congregational Church, Bristol, celebrated its twentieth anniversary on Sunday week. In the morning Rev. G. H. Brown, vicar of Christ Church, Sneyd Park, preached from Ps. cii. 13, 14. He said that the duty of all Christians was to look to God for help and blessing in their efforts. The work of no church could prosper by simply organising a committee, but by the consecration of each individual member of that church to the work of God. He then urged his hearers to abound in sympathy towards each other and to their pastor.

Rev. J. Foster Lepine, pastor of Trinity Church, Croydon, has issued an appeal on behalf of a new movement which he has initiated. He says:—"The aim of the work on behalf of which I am anxious to secure your co-operation is to bring home to the people individually the love of Christ; and the means by which it is sought to do this are:—(1) personal visitation and Christian instruction: (2) nursing; (3) encouraging habits of cleanliness and cheerfulness with a view to the promotion of health; (4) introduction of young women to situations, and lads to the training ships and shoe-black brigades; (5) encouraging the moralities of home, life and thrift; (6) the supply of wholesome and cheerful literature.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Mr. Scroggie, evangelist, has conducted successful Gospel meetings at Cunningham Free Church, Glasgow. Much blessing was experienced.

Rev. John M'Ewan, of John Knox Free Church, Edinburgh, celebrated his semi-jubilee last week. Mr, M'Ewan stated that during his ministry the membership of the church has increased from 160 to 350, twenty of whom were members when he first became pastor.

The proposal to build a Tabernacle in Edinburgh for Rev. John McNeill is now taking definite form. Two committees were appointed some time ago to collect subscriptions for the erection of a large building, and it is believed a central site can be obtained without much difficulty. The committee, however, will not negotiate publicly for a site until they know the amount of money at their disposal.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Meetings were held last week in High-street Presbyterian Church, Holywood, for the purpose of promoting a deepening of the spiritual life. There was a large attendance.

The seventy-third annual report of the Irish branch of the Wesleyan Missionary Society is published, and shows that Irish Methodists raised last year for foreign missions about £5000.

The Stevenson Memorial Fund now reaches the sum of £2150, but the promoters are aiming at bringing it up to £10,000. It is intended to devote the proceeds to the training of native ministers for India.

A successful series of evangelistic services has been held in the Methodist Church, Donegal, by Rev. R. C. Johnson, Conference evangelist, assisted by Mr. Austen, from England. Many professed decision for Christ.

A praiseworthy effort is being made to have a Soldiers' Home established at Belfast, where the garrison now consists of 2000 men, similar to the Homes already in existence at Dublin, Cahir, Limerick, Cork, and other places.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Robert Roberts, pastor of the Welsh Baptist Chapel, Castle-street, Oxford Market, London.—Rev. Thomas Ramage, minister of the Free Church, Stirling, N.B.—Rev. T. A. Holland, for forty-two years rector of Poynings, Sussex.—Rev. T. B. Wilkinson, for over sixty years rector of EastHarling, Norfolk.

THE TEMPLE OF SOLOMON.—Addresses will be given by Mr. Thomas Newberry, editor of "The Englishman's Bible," with a model, in the Central Hall, Great Charles-street, Birmingham, from November 5 to 9, at 7.30 p.m.

THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE" MISSION.—The new Ratcliff Highway Refuge and Night Shelter was opened on Tuesday last. We hope to give an account of the proceedings in our next issue.

SERVIA.—An additional element of excitement has been furnished to those already existing in Servia by the sudden arrest of a number of so-called "New Believers," or Nazarenes. The tenets of this sect are not unlike those of the Quakers. They forbid the bearing of arms, and the community in Servia is largely composed of Austrian and Hungarian subjects, who have crossed the border to avoid military service. Hitherto the sect has been tolerated, and its members pass generally for being sober, hard-working, and well-conducted persons; but they appear to have felt strongly on the subject of King Milan's divorce, and so the police received orders to enter their places of worship, and to apprehend as many of them as possible on the charge of holding unlawful assemblies. Those of the Nazarenes who are foreigners will now probably be ordered out of the country.—Times.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, TORONTO, has decided to send out a missionary as the representative of the College in the foreign field. The missionary, Mr. James S. Gale, is a graduate of Toronto University, and the field chosen is Korea, "the hermit country." Mr. Gale has had a good training in the McAll Mission in Paris, besides working for two years as a city missionary in Toronto. He goes out as a lay worker, and his entire support is guaranteed for eight years by the graduates and undergraduates of the University.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN INDIA.—Drunkenness threatens to become a serious evil in India. Up to the present time Mahommedans and Hindoos have been preserved by the precepts of their religion, but this barrier has no longer any power. A native newspaper says: "The Hindoos pay no attention to their priests' interdiction of spirituous liquor; and, indeed, some spirit shops in certain towns are kept by Brahmins. For one missionary there are ten liquor shops. Our liquor traffic begins by hanging a sign over the door, and ends by hanging a man on a gibbet."

DONATIONS

⁂ Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

⁂ We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

⁂ Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

THE LAND OF LUTHER.—In the article by Miss Fooks last week on this subject, it was stated in error that Moabit, a suburb of Berlin, has a population of 500,000; the figures should have been 50,000.

THE EARLSWOOD ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS has accommodation for 700 patients. The present income enables the Committee to receive only 570. 150 applicants are earnestly seeking admission by election. Many of these must be disappointed unless funds are forthcoming. Contributions gratefully received. Superior provision made for private cases on payments regulated by the Board of Management.

FATHERLESS.—The Board of Managers of the ASYLUM for FATHERLESS CHILDREN, Reedham, Purley, Surrey, earnestly APPEAL for HELP to maintain and educate the 300 Children now under their care. These children have been admitted to the Asylum at ages varying from six months to eleven years, and will all be retained and cared for until 15 years of age.

The Institution is entirely Unsectarian, has no endowment, and is, therefore, dependent upon public benevolence for support.

The necessary expenditure averages £8,000 per annum, but the only reliable income—that from Annual Subscriptions—does not provide one-third of that amount, hence the necessity for this Appeal. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS will be most thankfully received. HENRY SPICER, Treasurer.

HOMES of HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE, GRAY'S-INN ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case if it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

The Committee are in very urgent need of £250.

REV. NEWMAN HALL, LL.B.,

Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, S.W.

As a true evangelist, a faithful pastor, and a popular author of religious works, Rev. NEWMAN HALL has long occupied a prominent and honoured place in the ranks of the Church militant. He is a Christian worker of a type which is only too rare. Remarkably successful as preacher of a Gospel which has for its centre and circumference "Jesus Christ and Him crucified," he has for many a long year stood out among men "in labours more abundant" as an advocate of all movements and causes which are calculated to help such persons as come under his influence, to lead godly, righteous, and sober lives.

Born in 1816 of godly parents, the subject of this sketch was from the first instructed in the way of the Lord. Among his earliest recollections is the pleasure which he experienced when, on his mother's knee, he was taught the text, "God so loved the world, &c." Having heard his mother plead with God for the conversion of her children, he desired, in order to please her, to be converted, although as yet he knew not what the word implied. The mother's love constrained him. At school young Newman Hall studied to good purpose, and on leaving, at the age of fourteen, actuated by a desire to remain at home, he entered the business of his father, Mr. John Vine Hall, who was proprietor of The Maidstone Journal, the chief Conservative paper in Kent. The father was an exemplary Christian, a total abstainer, for twenty-five years deacon of a church, and author of the well-known booklet, "The Sinner's Friend," which has had a circulation of three million copies in thirty different languages. Mr. Vine Hall had the satisfaction of seeing his son Newman master the entire business in the most practical way, as compositor, printer, accountant, reporter, and sub-editor. But from his birth the lad had been committed to the Lord by his pious and loving mother, whose inmost and ardent desire was that he should be a preacher of the Gospel.

At the age of sixteen young Newman Hall decided for Christ, and became a member of the Independent Church at Maidstone. Two years later he became a teacher in a Sunday-school on Cox Heath, and soon afterwards commenced open-air preaching. Reaching the age of twenty-one, he was recognised by the Church as a candidate for the ministry, and was accepted as a student at Highbury Theological College. Having taken the degree of B.A. in the first session of the new London University, Mr. Hall was called to the pastorate of Albion Congregational Church, Hull. This was in 1842. For twelve years he enjoyed the respect and affection of a large church and congregation, and exerted great influence for good in the town and neighbourhood. Having in 1840 taken the temperance pledge, Mr. Hall formed a temperance society in connection with the church. He also drew the artisans around him by delivering lectures on subjects specially interesting to them. The work was solid in character, and the results were more than encouraging.

In 1854 Mr. Hall succeeded Rev. James Sherman as minister of the church worshipping in Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars-road, London. The move was made to the great regret of the church in Hull, but to the delight of the South London congregation, of which Mr. Hall still continues pastor. It is worthy of remark that during a period of 105 years this congregation has had only three presidents. Rev. Rowland Hill ministered there from 1783 to 1833; after an interval of three years, during which many preachers occupied the pulpit, Rev. James Sherman became pastor, in 1836. Soon after coming to London Mr. Hall took the degree of LL.B., being first in honours, and obtaining the law scholarship. He has received three diplomas of D.D. from America, which he does not use, as they were only conferred in grateful recognition of his early and continued advocacy of the cause of "Freedom and Union," at the time of the Civil War. From the very beginning of Mr. Hall's ministry, Surrey Chapel was crowded every Sunday; many persons were led to turn to God, and new life was infused into the numerous institutions of the church. We believe that he was the first to introduce instructive lectures and concerts into the work of the church, as a means of providing useful recreation for the working classes and drawing them from the public-house. Surrey Chapel used to be crowded at the Monday evening lectures by artisans from all parts of London. The practice has since become universal. In 1866 Mr.

Hall's high character and excellent work were recognised by his being appointed Chairman of the Congregational Union. A public breakfast which he then gave was attended by Dean Stanley, who jocosely addressed the delegates as "Nonconformist members of the Church of England."

Just before the lease of Surrey Chapel lapsed, a freehold site was purchased in Westminster Bridge-road, on which Christ Church, as the "Perpetuation of Surrey Chapel and its Institutions," was at length erected, and opened for public worship on July 4, 1876. It is considered one of the finest ecclesiastical modern structures in London, with seats for 2000 persons, lecture halls, and numerous class-rooms. Ministers of various communions, including four clergymen of the Established Church, preached during the special services which were held. The total cost of site, church, lecture hall (called "Hawkstone," after the birthplace of Rowland Hill), tower, &c., amounted to £62,000, which was all raised by voluntary subscriptions. The old institutions have ever since been carried on with increased vigour. They include thirteen schools with five thousand children and four hundred teachers, and a mission to the working classes with an evangelist and a city missionary. By the benevolent and other societies about £700 yearly is distributed for the relief of the poor; by the Christian Instruction Society services are held every Sunday evening in twelve lodging-houses; and the missionary, Bible, and tract societies likewise have auxiliaries connected with the church. Open-air services are conducted every evening during six months of summer in front of the church and elsewhere. Above 950 members are in church fellowship. Mr. Hall sets his congregation a noble example of liberality by his personal contributions towards carrying on the work, and it is gratifying to know that he has never lacked hearty seconders and supporters. Yet, through the ever-increasing exodus to the suburbs of those best able to render substantial support, the difficulty which is elsewhere experienced in maintaining in efficiency the many and varied agencies is at times also felt more or less keenly at Christ Church.

Mr. Hall has on three occasions visited the United States. In 1867 he made a tour for the purpose of promoting international goodwill by convincing the American people that the English nation, as such, had always taken the side of the North against the Southern Slave Confederacy. At Washington he was invited to open Congress with prayer on its first session; he also preached in the Congress Hall before both Houses; and, further, he addressed Congressmen and Senators on "International Relations," General Grant and other leaders being present. These were all matters of notoriety at the time, and will not soon be forgotten. It is worth remembering, too, that in Wall-street, in the midst of the business of the Stock Exchange, he was called upon to speak, and at the close of a short address "God Save the Queen" was spontaneously sung by the hearers. The significance of these events is best realised when it is borne in mind that a very bitter feeling against England was at the time widely prevalent in the United States. On two subsequent occasions Mr. Hall has visited the States and Canada, preaching the "common salvation" from Quebec to Richmond, and from New York and Boston to Chicago and St. Louis. In the enthusiasm of their appreciation, friends in America raised £3500 towards an international monument to Abraham Lincoln, and a like amount having been subscribed by British citizens, the total was expended in the erection of the Lincoln Tower adjoining Christ Church. The abolition of slavery is thus commemorated, and international brotherhood symbolised.

As a preacher, Mr. Hall has been eminently successful. His style is simple, natural, and pithy. His sermons are for the most part expositions of Holy Scripture, lighted up and enforced with frequent illustrations from nature and experience. Mr. Hall has ever held fast the vital doctrines of the Gospel, and probably has never preached a sermon in which he did not earnestly beseech sinners to be reconciled to God through the only Saviour of the world. During the thirty-four years of Mr. Hall's present pastorate there have of necessity been great changes in the congregation; but the preaching has remained the same, and it is as powerful and acceptable as ever.

Notwithstanding the constant claims upon him by the large church over which he presides, Mr. Hall finds pleasure in aiding the cause of the Gospel throughout the country as opportunity offers, and in the summer months he often delights some village congregation or cheers some struggling pastor by rendering such help as small churches often need, but cannot always command. For many years he has had an excellent colleague in Rev. H. Grainger, by whose attention to local claims it has been made comparatively easy for him to attend to calls from far and near. Open-air preaching he has always rated very highly and also largely employed, and even now, though no longer a young man, Mr. Hall frequently addresses a crowd of artisans in front of Christ Church after the Sunday and Monday services. Time and space would fail us to recount his many activities in the promotion of measures for the amelioration of the condition of the working classes, and in the persistent advocacy of temperance. His sermons to young men and his prayer meeting arrangements have likewise been greatly blessed.

Christ Church is not organically blended with any denomination, but is in harmony with all evangelical churches. The motto over the porch indicates its essential basis, "Christ all and in all." Its worship combines the liturgy with free prayer. There is a Presbyterian eldership, a Congregational election of officers and general reference, and while the trust is distinctly evangelical, baptism and ecclesiastical methods are open questions.

Among Mr. Hall's many publications the largest is a handsome octavo volume on the Lord's Prayer, being a digest of a course of sermons. The best known is one of the smallest, "Come to Jesus," written in 1850, and now circulated in almost all the languages in which the Bible is printed, to the number, so far, of four million copies. Among publications that have had a large circulation are, "Follow Jesus," "It is I," "Scriptural Claims of Teetotalism," "The Priesthood," "The Saviour's Bible," "My Friends," "Prayer," "Grace and Glory," the "Antidote to Fear," and "Now." Among larger works are, "The Vatican and the Forum," "Family Prayers in the Words of Scripture," "Conflict and Victory" (being the life of his father), "Homeward Bound and other Sermons," and "Songs of Earth and Heaven," a volume of hymns and sacred poems. Many of these have been introduced into collections for public worship, including Mr. Spurgeon's, Dr. Dale's, the Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian hymnals.

It is not given to many workers in the Lord's vineyard to maintain for so long a period a beneficent influence such as Mr. Newman Hall has been privileged to exercise. His early press experience and his subsequent successful studies have combined with his natural abilities to make him a singularly capable and useful man. We sincerely trust that he may be spared in health and vigour still to bear steady testimony to the truth as he has during so many years enunciated it, and that he may yet see fruit of his labours in the many directions in which he exerts himself for the well-being of men and to the glory of God.

Blessing in the New Hebrides.

Dear Sir,—We have been labouring on the island of Epi for six years, and the Lord is now giving us signs of blessing. We have only seven church members as yet, and a dozen candidates, but now fully seven hundred listen to the Gospel each Lord's Day, and about 350 are under daily instruction. Two or three of our converts are now engaged in helping us to carry the word of life to their fellows.

There are about 10,000 souls on Epi, and a perfect Babel of tongues. Five of these are quite as distinct from each other as English and French are. This is a great hindrance to the spread of the word, but we are able now to carry on work in three of these. Formerly we were frequently threatened, and sometimes narrowly escaped making food for a cannibal feast. Now we live as peacefully as we would in London, and have more open doors for our work than we are able to take full advantage of.

Still, there is "very much land to be possessed," and the darkness is very great. The fever and ague also try us very sorely at times. Thanking you for your paper, which reaches us regularly, I am, very sincerely yours,

Robert M. Fraser.

THE DUBLIN PROTESTANT DEAF AND DUMB ASSOCIATION secures spiritual ministrations for the adult deaf mutes of the City, and, when required, affords them temporal benefits as well. The seventeenth annual report states that the Gospel is regularly preached in the finger and sign language, and the poor people highly appreciate the services. When out of employment they are helped into new situations by the Association, whose missionary is Mr. M. F. G. Hewson, 21 Room, Christian Union-buildings, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin.

Points for Preachers.

JAHAZIEL—2 CHRON. XX. 14.

Ie was an ordinary man, a Levite, not a hief, or prominent, or well-known personge; but he was probably the man most ut of himself, and most in the Spirit, of ll in the congregation of Israel that day. 'herefore, upon him the Spirit came, and pake by him. "God is no respecter of ersons: but in every nation he that eareth Him, and worketh righteousness, s accepted of Him" (Acts x. 34, 35). The ighest condition of sanctification is to be vessel always meet and ready for the Master's use.

"JONAH PAID THE FARE."

Careful not to defraud man, he was all the ime defrauding God. He might have gone on board as a stowaway; but he wished to stand right with man, yet all the time ignoring God. Just with man, but unjust with God. One could fancy that this striking touch was from another hand than Jonah's, put in by an eye-witness; so graphic and expressive. Would that we were as careful to stand right with God as we are with our fellow-men. We dare not treat man as we often try to treat God. Shame on us that we so often put man first, and God last. Let us be brave and bold to put God first always, and He will take care of those that honour Him.—Captain W. H. Dawson.

VISIBLE UNITY OF THE CHURCH.

This twofold doctrine (1) that Jew and Gentile, Barbarian, Scythian, bond and free —all believers, without national, civil, or social distinction—are incorporated into one visible body; and (2) that Christ is the basis and bond of this incorporation—is a subject which imparts an entire character to some of the Epistles, and which furnishes a clue to much in nearly all. And it is observable how invariably the inspired penmen take occasion from this subject to insist and enlarge on the obligations of mutual love: and how often they ascend from this point to the contemplation of a union in Christ, which is destined to include, not only the holy of every age and nation, but also of other worlds.—Dr. Harris, on Christian Union.

ABRAHAM, THE FRIEND OF GOD.

Nothing draws hearts together like a common sorrow. The earthly father giving up Isaac was typical of the heavenly Father giving Jesus. Three times in Gen. xxii. Isaac is called "thy son, thine only son," in evident reference to God's only begotten Son. In the first case it is added, "whom thou lovest," in anticipation of "This is my beloved Son," "the Son of his love" (Matt. iii. 17; xvii. 5; Col. i. 13). Twice it is said, "they went both of them together," foreshadowing the unceasing communion of the Father and the Son, "I am not alone, for the Father is with Me." The supreme victory of Abraham's faith was in the offering of his son, and this self-abandoning confidence in God brought him into communion with the Eternal Father in his supremest love and sorrow. The Apostle James shows that it was this uttermost obedience of faith, and this sympathy, this suffering together in the self-same form of sorrow, that constituted Abraham the friend of God.—M.

The Cross of Christ.

BY REV. PROF. W. G. BLAIKIE, D.D.*

IF there be any lesson from the history of the Scottish pulpit for the last three hundred years, it is surely this, that the notion of sin which reaches deepest into the human conscience is that which is taught at the cross of Christ, and that it is from the same source that men derive the strongest of all impulses to a new life, a life of self-denial, and of consecration to the good of man and to the glory of God. He is surely a blind preacher who does not find himself in these times face to face with a great and serious problem: How to reach to the depth of the human heart, and how to turn its strongest energies from the idolatries of the world to the service of the living God. It is no sprinkling of rose-water on the surface that will subdue that fell disease which has fastened itself like a canker on the soul; it is no ingenious forms of speech that will appease the conscience in its fierce writhings of self-reproach; it is no fancy picture that will convert the Most High God from an object of dread into an object of confidence and delight. Nor will it do to bring Christ forward merely as the Brother of humanity, as one who shows us how all the forces of disorder may be mastered, who inspires the hope of a purer life, and affords the most glorious example of self-sacrificing love. If the death of Jesus Christ on the cross was not demanded as a sacrifice for sin, it was a crowning instance of the miscarriage of justice.

People talk of the immorality of the atonement; punishment they say is for the guilty, and rewards only for the righteous: you never can be justified in punishing the innocent and acquitting the guilty. Yet, according to their view, the best of all the human race suffered a shameful and cruel death, was the victim of most miserable injustice; and this fact, instead of horrifying men, is expected to impress them above everything else with respect for the government of God—it is to make such an impression on them as will rectify all the disorders of their moral nature. Would it not have been infinitely better, if the purpose of Jesus Christ in visiting our world was merely to afford a pattern of self-sacrifice, that He should have lived through the whole term of human life, exemplifying at its every stage the spirit of self-denying love, and showing how even to hoar hairs life might be made beautiful by a pure devotion to duty, and diffuse to its very close the fragrance of myrrh and aloes and cassia? Why cut short a life before it was well begun that might have been so useful?

The truth is, the Cross of Christ is an utter mystery—is more than a mystery—without the atonement. And the preaching which ignores the work of Christ as an atonement ignores the central truth of Christianity, the truth which God uses most in stirring consciences, piercing men's hearts to the core, and turning them from the tyranny of sin to the willing service of a loving Father.

Exponents of John Bunyan.

THE Bi-centenary of John Bunyan's death naturally gives an impetus to lectures upon the glorious dreamer and his wonderful books. In another column will be found brief notices of two elucidations, very similar, yet very dissimilar, of the man and his work. Pastor Frank H. White has been known for many years for his incomparable Lectures on the Tabernacle, and now for his no less admirable illustrations of the "Pilgrim's Progress" and the "Life of Bunyan." Mr. J. E. Mathieson gives his uncompromising imprimatur, after Mr. White has given his lectures at Mildmay Conference Hall; and Mr. Spurgeon thus emphatically endorses them:—

> So first-rate are Mr. White's views upon the sheet that every eye is pleased, and so clear are his views of the Gospel that many a heart is enlightened. With Bunyan for a subject, and Mr. White for a lecturer, there is sure to be a delighted audience; and what is better, with the Spirit of God blessing it, there is also sure to be a deep impression made. I recommend all our brethren to get Mr. White to lecture for them, and then I recommend all the world to go and see and hear.

It might seem that there was no room for anyone else after such a testimonial as that; but Rev. Adam Chambers, an Englishman by birth but an American by residence and education, has so well commended himself to the Pastor of the Tabernacle that he has thus warmly expressed himself in The Sword and The Trowel, after a lecture at which he presided:—

> Bunyan's immortal work is illustrated in a novel manner by eighteen oil paintings, executed by Mr. Chambers. We can heartily recommend our brethren to arrange for a visit from Mr. Chambers, for his lecture is brimful of the Gospel, and is one of the best sermons to the heart that we have ever heard. Our recommendation was not given without deliberation and investigation, but it is unreserved and intense.

To say that this lecture has been given four times at Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, is to give it a very high and sufficient commendation.

To those who have heard either of these good men lecture on John Bunyan's dream, "which was not all a dream," but a very vivid reality, it will be a double gratification to listen to the other. The excellences of each will be the more clearly perceived by comparison.

ZENANA MEDICAL COLLEGE.—Miss Blackwell, Miss Emily Saker, and Miss Dean, who sailed last Thursday week, in connection with the Baptist Missionary Society, were all students in the Zenana Medical College. Rev. N. Heywood has consented to take the Bible-reading at the College every alternate Saturday in conjunction with Miss Nugent.

THE BROUSSA ORPHANAGE.—Miss Good, for long years engaged in similar work amongst Nestorian girls, has accepted the matronship and care of over one hundred children, and will start for Broussa on the 21st inst. It is proposed to speed her on her way with praise and prayer to-day (Friday), at 5 p.m., at 17, Old Cavendish-street, W. Several of the elder girls have lately been sent back to their own villages, there proclaiming the glad tidings of salvation learnt at the Orphanage. Should any desire to help in this new start, will they kindly communicate with Miss Denham Smith, 38, York-terrace, Regent's-park, London.

* From THE PREACHERS OF SCOTLAND from the 16th to the 19th Century. 7s. 6d. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. This volume, which is "The Cunningham Lecture" for the year, is a most admirable one. Scotland is a land of preachers and sermons; and if it be in a measure true, as a recent speaker has said, that the Scottish sermon of to-day is a minor factor in the life of the people, that has not been always so. Some critics have remarked on the omissions of the volume, but with such a galaxy of great preachers to choose from, it appears to us that Professor Blaikie has shown good judgment. This will surely become a standard work on a great theme.

The Epistle to the Hebrews.

III.—THE GLORY OF CHRIST'S OFFICE.

HEBREWS i.

APART from Scripture, we should have been disposed to infer the existence of other orders of intelligent and spiritual beings besides man. As the order of being climbs up to man from the lowest living organism through many various stages of being, so surely the series must be continued beyond man, through rank on rank of spiritual existence up to the very steps of the eternal throne. The Divine mind must be as prolific in spiritual as it has been in natural forms of life.

But we are not left to conjecture. From every part of Scripture come testimonies to the existence of angels. They rejoiced when the world was made, and they are depicted as ushering in with songs that new creation for which we long. They stood sentries at the gate of a lost Paradise, and at each of the twelve gates of the New Jerusalem an angel stands. They trod the plains of Mamre, and sang over the fields of Bethlehem. One prepared the meal on the desert sands for Elijah, another led Peter out of gaol, and a third flashed through the storm to stand by the hammock where the Apostle Paul was sleeping.

But in the mind of the pious Hebrew the greatest work which the angels ever wrought was in connection with the giving of the law. The children of Israel received the law, "as it was ordained by angels" (Acts vii. 53). It was necessary, therefore, in showing the superiority of the Gospel to the law, to begin by showing the superiority of Him through whom the Gospel was given over all the ranks of bright and blessed spirits, which, in their shining ranks and their twenty thousand chariots, went and came during the giving of the decalogue from the brow of Sinai.

It is not difficult to prove the Lord's superiority to angels. It is twofold: in nature and in office.

In Nature.—"He hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they" (ver. 4). In ver. 7, quoted from Ps. xcvii., where they are distinctly spoken of as messengers and ministers, they are compared to winds and flames—winds, for their swiftness and invisibility; flames, because of their ardent love. But how great the gulf between their nature, which may thus be compared to the elements of creation, and the nature of that glorious Being whom they are bidden to worship, and who is addressed in the sublime title of Son.

In Office.—In ver. 14 they are spoken of as ministering spirits, "sent forth to do service for the sake of them that shall inherit salvation." This liturgy of service is a literal fact. When struggling against overwhelming difficulties; when walking the dark, wild mountain-pass alone; when in peril or urgent need; we are surrounded by invisible forms, like those which accompanied the path of Jesus, ministering to Him in the desert, strengthening Him in the garden, hovering around his cross, watching his grave, and accompanying Him to his home. They keep pace with the swiftest trains in which we travel. They come unsoiled through the murkiest air. They smooth away the heaviest difficulties. They garrison with light the darkest sepulchres. They bear us up in their hands, lest we should strike our foot against a stone. Many an escape from imminent peril, many an unexpected assistance, many a bright and holy thought whispered in the ear, we know not whence or how, is due to those bright and loving spirits. "The good Lord forgive me," says Bishop Hall, "for that, amongst my other offences, I have suffered myself so much to forget the presence of his holy angels." But valuable as their office is, it is not to be mentioned in the same breath as Christ's, which is set down for us upon this page.

(1) HE IS THE ORGAN OF CREATION.—"By whom also He made the worlds." The word translated worlds means also ages. And it is true that each of the great ages of the world's story has been instituted by Jesus Christ; but in the eleventh chapter of this book, and the third verse, it is so evidently used of the material universe that we have no alternative than to use it in that sense here. To make that which is seen out of nothing, that is creation; it is a Divine work, and creation is here attributed to Christ. "By Him were all things created that are in heaven and in earth." "All things were made by Him; and without Him was not anything made that was made."

When genius aspires to immortality, it leaves the artist's name inscribed on stone or canvas, and so Inspiration, "dipping her pen in indelible truth, inscribes the name of Jesus on all we see—on sun and stars, flower and tree, rock and mountain, the unstable waters and the firm land; and also on what we do not see, nor shall, until death has removed the veil, angels and spirits, the city and heavens of the eternal world."

This thought comes out clearly in the sublime quotation made in ver. 10 from Ps. cii. That splendid inspired poem is obviously inscribed to Jehovah: "Thou, Jehovah, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thy hands." But here, without the least apology, or hint of accommodating the words to an inferior use, it is applied directly to Christ. Mark the certainty of this inspired man! How sure of the Deity of his Lord! And what a splendid tribute to his immutability!

This Epistle rings with the unchangeableness of Jesus, in his human love (xiii. 8), in his priesthood (vii. 24), and here in his Divine nature (ver. 11). We live in a world of change. The earth is not the same to-day as it was ages ago, and shall be ages on. The sun is radiating off its heat. The moon, no longer as of yore, burns and glows, and is but an immense opaque cinder, reflecting the sunlight from its disc. Stars have burnt out, and will. The universe is waxing old, as garments which from perpetual use become threadbare. But the dilapidation of the garment is no proof of the waning strength or slackening energy of the wearer. Nay, when garments wear out quickest, it is generally the time of robustest youth or mankind. You wrap up and lay aside your clothes when they have served their purpose, but you are the same in the new suit as in the old. Creation is the vesture of Christ. He wraps Himself about in its ample folds. Its decay affects Him not. And, when He shall have laid it all aside, and replaced it by the new heavens and the new earth, He will be the same for evermore.

With what new interest may we not now turn to the archaic record, which tells how God created the heavens and the earth. Those sublime syllables, "Light be," were spoken by the voice that trembled in dying anguish on the Cross. Rolling rivers, swelling seas, waving woods, bursting flowers, carolling birds, innumerable beasts, stars sparkling like diamonds on the pavilion of night, all newly made; all throbbing with God's own life; and all very good; but, mainly and gloriously, all the work of those hands which were nailed helplessly to the Cross, which itself, as well as the iron that pierced Him, was the result of his creative will.

(2) HE IS THE GOD OF PROVIDENCE.—"Upholding all things by the word of his power" (ver. 3). He is the prop which underpins creation. Christ and not fate. Christ and not nature. Christ and not abstract impersonal law. Law is but the invariable method of his working. "In Him all things live, and move, and have their being." "By Him all things consist." He is ever at work repeating on the large scale of creation the deeds of his earthly life. And if He did not do them, they must be for ever undone. At his word rainwater and dew become grape-juice; and the tiny handfuls of grain fill the autumn barns; and storms die away into calm; and fish are led through the paths of the seas; and rills are sent among the mountains; and stars are maintained in their courses, so that "not one faileth."

All power is given unto Him in heaven and on earth. Why, then, art thou so sad? Thy best Friend is the Lord of Providence. Thy Brother is Prime Minister of the universe, and holds the keys of the Divine commissariat. Go to Him with the empty sacks of thy need; He will not only fill them, but fill them freely, without money and without price, as Joseph did in the old story of the days of the Pharaohs.

(3) HE IS THE SAVIOUR OF SINNERS.—"He purged our sins." We shall have many opportunities of dwelling on this glorious fact. Jesus is the Saviour, Redeemer, and High Priest of men, and herein is his proudest title and the work in which no angel or created spirit can bear Him rivalry. In this at least He is alone. No angel could atone for sin, or plead our cause, or emancipate us from the thrall of evil.

But notice the finality of this act. "He made purging of sins." It is finished, for ever complete, done irrevocably and finally. If only we are one with Him by a living faith, our sins, which were many, are washed out, as an inscription from a slate, as a stain from a robe, as a cloud from the azure of heaven. Gone! as a stone into the bottomless abyss. Gone! never to confront us here or hereafter. "Who is He that condemneth. It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us."

(4) HE IS ALSO KING.—And on what does his kingdom rest? What is the basis of that Royalty of which we constantly sing, in the noble words of the Primitive Church: "Thou art the King of Glory, O Christ?" It is a double basis. He is King by right of his Divine nature.—"Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever." Well might that 45th Psalm be entitled the poem of the lilies, as if to denote its pure, and choice, and matchless beauties. It celebrated the marriage of Solomon; but, after the manner of those inspired singers, its author soon passed from the earthly to the heavenly, from the transient type of the earthly realm to the eternal and imperishable realities of the Divine royalty of Christ.

He is also King as the reward of his obedience unto death.—"He became obedient to death, even the death of the cross, wherefore, God also hath highly exalted Him." Satan offered Him sovereignty in return for one act of homage, and Christ refused, and descended the mountain to poverty, and shame, and death; but through these things He has won for Himself a kingdom which is yet in its infancy, but is destined to stand when all the kingdoms of this world have crumbled to dust.

As he emerged from the cross and the grave, where He had purged our sins, it seemed as if words were addressed to Him which David had caught ages before: "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool" (ver. 13). This is the interpretation which the Apostle Peter, in the flush of Pentecostal inspiration, put upon these words (Acts ii. 34). And, accordingly, we are told, "He was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God" (Mark xvi. 19). "He sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high" (ver. 3).

"He sat down." Love is regnant. The Lamb is in the midst of the Throne. Behold his majesty and worship Him with angels and archangels, and all the throng of the redeemed. Prostrate yourself at his feet, consecrating to Him all you are and have. Comfort yourself also by remembering that He would not sit to rest from his labours in redemption and in the purging away of sins, unless they were so completely finished that there was nothing more to do. It is all accomplished, and it is all very good. He has ceased from his works, because they are done, and therefore He is entered into his rest. And that word "until" is full of hope. God speaks it, and encourages us to expect the time when He shall have put down all rule and authority and power; and death itself, the last enemy, shall be destroyed.

"THE LAND OF LUTHER."

A lady, writing from Berlin with respect to the articles that recently appeared in our columns, under this heading, gives the other side of the picture:—

"I have spent most of my time during the last eight or nine years in Germany, chiefly in Berlin, though I have also travelled much in the provinces. I can never be thankful enough for the many true Christian friends I have found, nor for the Christian life and work I have seen in this "Land of Luther." Faithful pastors, true evangelists, earnest lady workers, are devoting their lives to all kinds of mission work; everywhere doors are opening, and hearts too. Young Men's Christian Associations are busy at work, and flourishing. Mothers' meetings, meetings for cabmen, street sweepers, chimney sweepers, &c., are constantly being held; also public and private Bible-readings, &c. This afternoon I have been to a meeting of street sweepers and their wives at the house of Count Bernstorff, and all listened with the deepest attention to an address given by Dr. Ziemann. To-morrow I hope to go to a public Bible-reading which will be given by an earnest true Christian, whose work is greatly blessed in Berlin.

"These details are, I think, sufficient (though I could give many more) to prove that your correspondent gives a one-sided impression of the real state of things here. I can only say I rejoice to know so many living, loving, earnest workers in Berlin."

TRACTS FOR JAPAN.—Mr. F. Staniland, missionary, writes asking for copies of tracts suitable for translation into Japanese. Simple, but sound, teaching is required to help in the upbuilding of the people in the faith of Christ. Tracts on elementary subjects may be sent to Mr. Staniland, 100, Yokohama, Japan.

XXXII.—"I AM ORDERED OFF."

Sitting one day in a large bookseller's shop, I observed a young gentleman come in. He was one in whom I was much interested, for I had often spoken to him about his soul, and had even prayed with him.

His mother was a devoted Christian, one who prayed daily for her children, and for this one in particular, he being her first-born. She had dedicated him to God from his infancy, and longed that he should not only be saved, but live before Him.

However, her efforts to persuade this loved one to come to Jesus were ineffectual, at least as far as we could see. Nevertheless God was all the time hearing and answering prayer.

I heard this young man ask for some books about New Zealand. What is the matter now? I wondered to myself.

"I want some books," he said, "with maps and pictures."

"Yes, yes," said the shopman, "I think we have something of the kind."

While the man was away looking through his stock, I stepped forward, and said to my young friend, "How do you do? What do you want books about New Zealand for?"

He answered with a sad face, "I am ordered off to that place."

"Indeed," I said, "why is this?"

"Oh, you know, I have been rather wild lately, and they tell me I have just done for myself. The old doctor says, if I go to New Zealand at once, I may live; but that it is quite impossible if I remain in this country."

I thought to myself, God has various ways with men; if they will not "come," they may have to "go." If they will not yield in one way, He tries them in another.

In the meantime several books were brought and set before my friend. Some with pictures and no maps, and others with maps and no pictures. He was obliged to supply himself with more than one book to obtain the information he wanted.

While the parcel was being tied up I said to him, "Why are you getting so many books?"

He replied, "I need them all in order to acquaint myself with the place to which I am going. I must get to know something about the manners of the people, and the climate; also what preparations to make."

"Yes, exactly so, that is well and wise," I said.

He having paid the bill and taken up the parcel, we set off together.

On our way, I said, "My dear fellow, if you had given your heart to God, I do not think you would have had this banishment from home put upon you. Now, the next best thing for you to do is to accept this sentence as from God, and ask Him to bless it to your soul's good."

The dear young man was rather sad, and I thought impressible; so I went on to say, "You have refused many invitations to come to God, and now He is bidding you to go. Thank Him that it is not to go away out of this world, but at present only to another part of it, where you may perhaps live and enjoy health. Now do you propose to spend your life there as you have done here, or be a wiser man?"

"I have been thinking about that," he said. "I see now what a fool I have been; but the fact is I am as weak as water."

"You dear fellow," I replied, "then you are exactly the kind of person to go to God for strength. Do not trust yourself, or your own resolutions."

By this time we were passing by the Bible Depôt, so I went in, and, in remembrance of the kindness I had received from his family, I bought a good Bible, and wrote his name in it.

"Here is a book for you," I said, "a book which will tell you of a better world than New Zealand. It has maps, pictures, illustrations, and directions of all kinds. Mind you read this as well as the other books you have bought. It is well to know about the land to which you are going. I am doctor enough to tell you that we have no abiding city here; we are all under orders to go, but where? To heaven or to hell?"

My young friend was very sad at the thought of going away from home, and, as he said, perhaps to die in a far-off land, and be buried by strangers.

He was intending to read his books, and by their means set up an object of hope in his mind. But, notwithstanding this effort to cheer himself, the prospect of dying in a strange land made him very unhappy.

I was rather glad it did. I said to him, "Now, dear fellow, do let me persuade you to give your heart to God before you go. It will do you good, and nothing will cheer and comfort your dear mother so well. She will have anxiety enough about your going off alone, especially in your precarious state. You really ought to give her this comfort. The voyage itself may do you good, and the climate yonder re-establish your health, or it may not. Give God your heart."

"I will," he said with emotion.

"Thank God," I replied. "Now, then, do it, and I will call again and see you in the evening."

In the evening I found this dear young man in a most hopeful condition. He was not ignorant of the way of salvation; all he wanted was a definite surrender of himself to God, and this he now made unreservedly. After a few words of cheer and encouragement his soul came into liberty. What joy awaited his dear mother next morning, after the sleepless and anxious night she had passed.

"Now, Lord," she said, "I can trust my boy with Thee anywhere!"

In due course he embarked on his voyage, and arrived in safety at New Zealand. There he travelled about, and had many opportunities of testifying for God and telling about salvation, which was too much neglected in those parts.

The physician had told him that, if his health improved by the end of the year, he might return to England.

Accordingly he came home, and spent many happy years in the Lord's service, joyfully following, and by his life recommending, Him to others.

He was especially led to care for young men who he knew were wasting their lives in dissipation and folly. He could speak feelingly to such, and warn them to take heed from his own case. Testimonies of this kind are better often than doctrines and precepts.

His past experience gave him influence with young men, and his present joy was a testimony they could not dispute or gainsay. The deep longing of his heart to win his old companions beamed forth in the expression of his countenance as he pleaded with them.

The Lord loves a mother's children more than she loves them, and He can do them more good; but mothers sometimes mar their faith by anxious fears. Trust and fear cannot dwell together.

Y.W.C.A., TONBRIDGE.—The winter season at this Institute commenced on Wednesday week, when nearly eighty members listened to an interesting address on Zenana missionary work by Miss Wanton, of Amritsar.

BURMAH.—In writing to thank the many friends who have responded to the appeal for books and magazines for Mrs. Ingalls' Railway Library at Thongzé, Burmah, Mrs. Lundie, of Liverpool, says Mrs. Ingalls' health has suffered from the strain of twenty-one years of continuous labour in Burmah, and she hopes to be able to leave in February for a much-needed change in England and America.

The Turning of the Tide, 1688.

Being Extracts, hitherto unpublished, from personal narratives of James and Elizabeth Nimmo.

IV.

THE diaries have brought us down to the year 1679, the first of a decade which, as "the killing times," was to be burned into the memories of the people of Scotland by persecutions exceeding in atrocity and wickedness all that had gone before. January, 1679, brought fresh proclamations against the field meetings, ordering their dispersion by force, and promising indemnity for whatever slaughter the soldiers employed therein should commit; nor were these backward in carrying out their instructions. The Covenanters suffered in dumb endurance, save that "the people sighed by reason of their bondage, and they cried, and their cry came up unto God," however tempted they may have been at times to think that He had closed his ears to it.

Though the public events of the day are rarely referred to in the diaries, the "Rising of the West," which commenced with the defeat of Claverhouse by a party of Covenanters at Drumclog, and ended with their own utter defeat at Bothwell Bridge, a few weeks afterwards, does not pass unnoticed in either of the narratives. JAMES NIMMO thus describes his experience in connection with it:—

"In the beginning of June this year (1679), Clavers and his troops coming against a field meeting of the oppressed Presbyterians on a Sabbath day, the people being still in fears, several who went to the meeting in their arms, in case of attack (rather to defend themselves than be taken, and either hanged or banished into slavery), did, upon the enemy's approach, go out to defend themselves. Several of the enemy were killed, and so the men were necessitate to keep in arms for their defence; and friends from other places coming to their aid, they increased to several thousands, and resolved if possible to free themselves from their heavy bondage.

"I having resolved, when the Lord called for service at my hand, I would venture my all for Him, and seeing that the party now in arms owned to be for the Lord's cause, I judged myself obliged to own and assist them, and accordingly went, without any discouragement from my father, who by this time was become much more kindly to me. But, when I came, I was not half an hour there until I feared the Lord was not with them, seeing no authority or discipline; and, being ten days with them, I observed I could never get liberty in secret (i.e., in prayer), which made me, with other things, fear the issue, perceiving much division among those that should have guided the rest. However, upon June 22, we were broke by the enemy, and wholly dispersed, and many killed and taken; myself, by the merciful hand of God, safely brought off, though for some time I was in the place of greatest danger, and a cannon ball killed a horse under a man hard by me. Oft has that word been sweet to me, that He was 'a covert to me in the day of battle.'

"So I stayed hiddenly, sometimes in one place, sometimes in another, in much hazard. About three days after we were broke, an alarm came where I was that a party of the enemy were coming; it being in the night time I was made to rise and go to a cornfield and hide myself, when, in the morning, getting myself somewhat composed, I desired to address myself to the Lord by prayer, and therein He fully did satisfy my mind, that we were broke, and that it was not yet time, nor were we meet for deliverance; and considering the divisions among them, I was made to bless God we were broke rather than we should have destroyed one another. I was often made to lie in cold barns that winter, yet I enjoyed much pleasant quietness in my mind, though cold, and bad diet and not timely, did affect my body. In the spring, thereafter, I used to come home early, and direct my father's servants to their work, and retire again to the fields, having still a watchful eye, and under fear of the enemy, and at night I went to some retired place and lay down, sometimes in one barn, sometimes in another.

"One night, lying down in a barn belonging to an old honest servant of my father, I found myself very weary, and my body distrest, and therefore resolved that, if it would please the Lord to give me rest, I would lie awhile longer in the morning than my ordinary, which I did. It was a merciful providence; for the old servant, being at the head of his own yard, where he could easily see my father's house, coming in by the end of his barn met his wife, and says to her (so as I heard), 'Alas! I fear James is taken, for there is a party of horsemen on his father's green'; for he knew not but that I was gone early, as I used. The which, I hearing, immediately rose and came out, which made them glad. So I, casting off my coat, put on a cotterman's, and went to a moss hard by, and wrought among peats (I know not for whom). The enemy came by again and again, after they had missed me, and rifled my father's house. They passed and repassed several houses by the moss, in my view, and I busy working in the cotterman's coat, and so they missed me, at which I was glad and blessed the Lord, and though they got some of my clothes, which they took with them, they missed the substance!"

People had got so accustomed to military expeditions against the Covenanters, and to the persecutions attendant upon them—and in those days news travelled so slowly—that at first the "Rising of the West" in Ayrshire, caused little excitement probably in Morayshire, nearly two hundred miles off. But the reality of it, and the alarm into which the Government was thrown by it must have been brought very forcibly home to many a quiet country family like the Brodies of Lethen, when orders reached Elgin for the immediate calling out of the militia. ELIZABETH BRODIE thus describes the effect which the receipt of this news produced there:—

"June 9, 1679.—I came to my father's house, and within two days there came word of the going of the militia to Stirling, against the people of God in the West; whereupon my brother John went to B. C. on Friday, the 14th of the month, and should have returned on Saturday, but he not returning on the day appointed, and word coming to the country that the MacDonalds were within four miles of B. C. on that day, my brother went thither, and that the laird of G. L. and all his country were in arms, the family was much troubled about him.

"The morrow being Sabbath was a sad day, a day never to be forgotten (this was the day on which the battle of Bothwell Bridge was fought), I had the sad affliction of the people of God, the sins of the land, the fear of a sinful compliance among my relations, the present hazard my brother was in, all lying on me, and yet I was not rightly exercised, nor was I able to open my mouth. I thought it was the most judgment-like stroke that ever I heard of. I could neither read nor pray, but could only sleep and hang my head. As to my brother, I had that comfortable reflection that the Lord knew that when I heard of the temptation coming to his people, I had in his sight renounced my part of them that were dearest to me in the world, and him among the rest, in the event of their joining against the people of God, and it was my cry, 'only keep from sin!' Yet sometimes I hoped the Lord would reserve him for a better use. But, of all these the Lord did good to, I think there was never one in such a stupid condition (though I had also the fear of present danger, for the country was all in terror for fear of the MacDonalds coming down that night). The Lord brought my brother back in safety. That week they were making all ready for their going to the West. O, what a sad frame was my heart in, I could not pray a word!

"Next Sabbath was a sad day; the ark of God in the fields, and my relations that should have been there, or bearing burdens with them that had taken their lives in their hands, even they were strengthening the enemies, by complying with them in sending out others, though they went not themselves. The third Sabbath was no better than the rest. The Militia Company were ten days out, and when they came back they brought news with them of the West people's loss! My unhumbled spirit, through the discomposure that was in it, was like to break, and turned most impatient. But He that hath many a day borne with my foolishness, and feverish fits, did at that time bring to my mind that passage of the disciples when they said, 'We thought this had been He that should have restored the kingdom to Israel' (Luke xxiv. 21). I saw much of the Lord's tenderness to me, and that He was fast carrying on his work, though high and far out of our sight; and when I was pleading that He would concern Himself in his people's deliverance for his own honour, that Scripture was cast up in my mind, 'Am I a God at hand, and not far off?' (Jer. xxiii. 23). As if the Lord had said, 'Ye believe me to be a God when my providences bring things so near that ye see my design accomplished in the course of my conduct; but when I am working in the dark, and ye cannot perceive my proceedings, O, then ye find it hard to believe. But I am a God, though afar off as to your uptaking (i.e., comprehension), and my steps no less glorious than when I seem near at hand in the appearance of providence.' O credit the Lord when ye cannot trace his goings."

Deepening of Spiritual Life.

THE weekly meetings for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, formerly held in Stafford Rooms, Edgware-road, are this winter to be held at Portman Rooms, 32, Dorset-street, Portman-square, W. They were inaugurated on Friday last, when meetings were held morning, afternoon, and evening. Mr. H. F. BOWKER presided. At the opening session, Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEBLOE founded a vigorous address on the passage Heb. v. 5—9. He asked why such gatherings are held, and proceeded to answer the question in a somewhat novel manner. They are, he said, an expression of a deep heart-yearning for the knowledge of something more of the Saviour, the realising of something higher than has hitherto being experimentally realised. We perceive that our creed goes far beyond what we actually enjoy, and we are conscious that this ought not so to be.

SELF-EXAMINATION.

Proceeding, the speaker analysed three terms which are in common use as descriptive of unbelievers, and applied the analysis to the case of those believers who have a sense of not having attained unto a blessing quite within their reach. Many men are called "atheists," that is "without God," who cannot with strict accuracy be so spoken of; many men also are denominated "infidel," that is "without faith," simply because they do not believe in the Lord Jesus Christ; many more, in like manner, are styled "sceptics," as if that meant the same as the other two expressions. Much injustice is often done in referring to people by these names. An infidel is not necessarily an atheist, and "sceptics," that is, men who are "looking round," anxious to find the truth, should not be unkindly dealt with.

Alas! however, that many believers, while trying themselves to live through their anxieties, pleasures, and pains, are "without God," and practically atheist. Alas! again, that many are "without faith" in the Lord Jesus Christ, rejecting his promise, not only to be their Saviour, but also the source of life, their keeper, deliverer from sin, and comforter. Whether or no we have been guilty of atheism and infidelity in the experimental sense indicated, surely we would do well to be "sceptical"; we need to come and "make inquiry" before God as to the best way in which we may live for Him. Let us, continued the speaker, not refer to those who in any way believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as atheists, infidels, and sceptics, but rather let us take the solemn charges to ourselves, and follow the course of inquiry which shall be well pleasing to our heavenly Father.

The speaker went on to trace the spiritual life from enlightenment in God's law to obedience to his will, enforcing with powerful illustration and argument the need for progress. If we are Christ's we are not our own, but must henceforth live unto Him, and trust Him to give us victory over sin, peace of soul, and rest in God. Christ is "the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him." Obedience, and everything else, hangs upon faith. This faith we may preach, write about, and hold; but do we really live it? This blessed life was dwelt upon in some concluding words.

The practical utility of such meetings was briefly spoken of by

REV. E. H. HOPKINS.

Though intended for believers, persons knowing nothing of God have been blessed through attending them, and young Christians have also been greatly helped. Proceeding to enlarge upon liberty of soul, the speaker explained that it comes from appropriating, by faith, the righteousness of Christ, which is freely given to us of God, and from a constant repose in the shadow of the Divine protection. The panoply of God is at the believer's disposal, and with it the fight of faith can be victoriously engaged in and carried through. With hindrances removed, we may receive the enduement of power, and have it perpetually renewed.

"THE GIRDLE" AND ITS USES.

In the afternoon, Rev. HUBERT BROOKE gave a Bible-reading, founded on words appearing in Eph. vi. 14, "Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth," in other words, having on the girdle of truth. A person's calling, profession, or standing in life is often indicated by his garment. So also the Lord's people are intended to wear his uniform. In countries where long flowing garments are customary, a girdle is used in order to keep the clothes clean while walking. Then in hot climates people gird themselves in order to secure support in hard work. Further, a girdle is used for binding on a sword or other such weapon. The Christian is expected to wear a girdle in all three senses.

The Israelites were instructed to partake of the passover with their loins girded. That was the pilgrim's attitude; the girdle showed that they were about to start on a journey. Christians, in like manner, are on a journey, and should consider themselves strangers and pilgrims on the earth. One who puts on the pilgrim's girdle declares thereby that he has left the old home, has been delivered from "the present evil world," is seeking another city; he abstains from the things that belong to the country he has left, and is ready to obey the marching orders of the Captain whose leadership he acknowledges. But how often do those who say they are pilgrims look just like people of the land whence they say they have set out! Not having "where to lay his head," the Lord was indeed a pilgrim on the earth; let Him be our example.

The case of Samuel, of whom it is said that he ministered before the Lord, "girded with a linen ephod," brings before us the girdle of service. One who had not his loins girded might certainly be a servant in name, but not in fact. The terms of the Lord's service are: "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God" (1 Cor. x. 31). This service is to be heartily rendered (Col. ii. 17, 23). Like Israel we must say, "All that the Lord commandeth us we will do"; if we fall short of this, we shall not receive God's full blessing. In all that we do, we must remember that it is God whom we serve, and not man; the commission is from the Lord, and to Him alone is the worker responsible. In service also Christ set us an example, for, "taking a towel," He "girded Himself," and washed the disciples' feet. Likewise, in vision at Patmos, John saw Christ wearing the "golden girdle" of the high priest; believers, too, being priests, must be girded so as to offer unto God "the sacrifice of praise continually," and to "do good and communicate" unto men.

We are commanded to put on the girdle of truth; in the truth we shall find strength and support for service. We must gird it on as the sword of the Spirit, for life is a warfare, as well as a pilgrimage, and a term of service. Laying aside malice and wickedness in every shape, we must put on the equipment of the new man; and we must remember that our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against the mighty powers of darkness.

THE RACE SET BEFORE US.

In the evening, Rev. E. W. MOORE delivered an address on the Christian life as a race. He founded his remarks on Heb. xii. 1, and spoke first of the race itself. It is truly a race, not a saunter, or go-as-you-please. There is nothing in the Bible to countenance the attitude of those who are "at ease in Zion." There is no armchair Christianity in the New Testament. Those who are making life a drowsy stroll will do well to remember that exertion, effort, earnestness, zeal, alertness, alacrity, are of the essence of the Christian life.

The running involves preparation, in the form of laying aside all impedimenta and divesting ourselves of everything calculated to hinder. All evil habits, the garments of sin, must be laid aside, and the eye must be kept steadily directed to the goal. Sins of the tongue and evil speaking are great "weights," and sometimes even a feather is the same. Having enlarged upon the need of patience, the speaker referred, in an instructive manner, to the encouragements held out to runners.

THE LIFE OF FAITH.

Rev. C. A. FOX conducted a very profitable Biblical study. The Book of Joshua, he said, presents us with a view of the true risen life. The Book of Joshua is the Epistle to the Ephesians of the Old Testament: they are the books of the heavenly places. The opening verses of Joshua i. bring before us, first, the death of faith, "Moses, my servant, is dead; now therefore arise, go over this Jordan." The true spiritual, or risen, life begins with death, with the death of Christ, whereby our past transgressions are put away, and we are enabled to begin a new life.

In the word "death" is the secret of all power, peace, purity, and victory. Moses represents the life of Christ up to the cross; Joshua represents his resurrection life. "Moses is dead": that is, the child of God is delivered from the law and all its demands. We are rescued from the demands of sin, and the dominion of sin by the death of Christ. "Arise, and go over": it is not said that you may, but you are distinctly commanded to "go over." We must not live, as some think they can, a life such as that of Christ before He was crucified; we must enter upon his new risen life. We must, indeed, "bear about in our bodies the dying of the Lord Jesus," but we must also enter upon the victorious resurrection life.

Proceeding, Mr. Fox pointed out that there must be the venture of faith before there can be the victory, which is referred to in ver. 5. Again, there must be consecration (vii. 13), abstinence from everything that stands in the way of whole-hearted service. The chapter likewise brings to notice the fellowship of faith, "As I was with Moses, so I will be with thee," and the courage of faith, "Be strong and of a good courage." In order to these, however, the command of ver. 8 must be obeyed: "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth." In conclusion, the speaker referred to the rest of faith, spoken of in ver. 15, and urged those who are striving to live the life of faith to be careful to act on the words of the Israelites to Joshua (in ver. 16), "All that thou commandest us, we will do."

The meetings were characterised by much interest and warmth.

THE GERMAN Y.M.C.A. IN LONDON continues to command the interest and support of many friends. Increased accommodation having been found necessary, the committee has taken the entire house, 28, Finsbury-square. The premises will serve, among other purposes, as a boarding-house for young men of the mercantile class. This new undertaking, as well as that in connection with the Home for unemployed artisans, will involve considerable expenditure. The financial secretary of the Association is Mr. A. M. Ely.

UNION TABERNACLE, WANDSWORTH.—A workers' meeting was recently held, at which a godly number sat down to tea. Mr. Robert Paton presided at the public meeting, and gave a most vigorous and practical address on the subject of family religion and the training of children. Rev. R. Culley gave a robust address to Christian workers on "Intention, Attention, and Intensity." Mr. A. Garstin spoke on God's great love; and Mr. H. Macintosh dwelt on the necessity for Christians being filled with the Holy Spirit. Rev. D. Cameron, pastor, in closing, urged upon all present to seek that their hearts might be fired by the Holy Spirit for active service.

Dr. Saphir on the Bible.

On Thursday morning last week, in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington, Rev. Dr. Adolph Saphir delivered the first of a series of addresses on the Bible. There was a goodly attendance, notwithstanding the unfavourable weather. Incidentally the speaker afforded a glimpse of the treasures of the Book, during a preliminary reading of Psalm xix. The Psalmist first speaks, in ver. 1—6 inclusive, of the book of nature, which shows forth "the glory of God"—of Elohim, the Creator, Governor, Lord of the Universe. Going on to the end of ver. 11, David speaks of the book of Scripture, and then God's proper name is mentioned—Jehovah, the Covenant God, Israel's God, the Redeemer. Then, in the last three verses, the Psalmist opens the third book—his own heart.

The precise subject of the opening address was: "The Bible as a Living Book in the Present Age." In some opening remarks, attention was directed to the organic connection between Jesus Christ, the Eternal Word of God, and Scripture, the written Word of God. First, Jesus Christ is the Son of God, the Lord from heaven, who came from above; at the same time Jesus is the Son of man, who in all things became like unto his brethren. So we look upon Scripture as the Word of God, and yet as an intensely human book, written by men and for men, and breathing everywhere the atmosphere of human life and human emotions. The second parallel is this: Jesus is not simply man born of a woman, but the Son of David, and the Son of Abraham. Likewise the Holy Scriptures, though for all men, constitute an intensely Jewish book, and even the Greek writings of the New Testament speak with the voice of Jacob. As Jesus is the Light of the world, so the Word is a book for the whole world, for humanity. The third parallel is this: Jesus Christ spoke in the simplest possible language, and was the Wisdom from above giving instruction daily in the streets. He said, "He that hath ears, let him hear," yet only those who were enlightened by the Spirit of God, only his "sheep," heard his voice. Likewise, the Bible is a book even for children and the multitude, and yet it requires the illumination of the Holy Ghost to understand it, and accept its invitations. These parallels were exhibited at length.

Proceeding, Dr. Saphir pointed out resemblances between the effect of Christ's words and those of Holy Scripture on the minds of men. Dealing then with the objection of some to the idea of God having embodied his message to mankind in a book, he spoke of the wonderful gift of language, showing that man is not able to separate thought and consciousness from words. The blessings which have flowed from the alphabet were then referred to. The Egyptian, Babylonian, and Assyrian nations, far more mighty than the Jews, wishing to perpetuate their history, left inscriptions upon large monuments. For centuries, however, those mysterious figures remained unknown to the world, whereas the affairs of the smaller nation—God's nation—which embodied its history in an easy, correct, and accessible manner, by means of an alphabet, have for centuries been more or less well known by all the nations of the earth, and to-day the children of the nations of Europe are more familiar with Bible history than with the history of their respective countries. God said to Moses, "write in a book"; Christ and his Apostles laid much stress on that which had been "written"; and John in the Apocalypse was told by the risen Christ to "write in a book" the things which he saw. In embodying his message in a book, then, God has indeed acted, not only with the greatest wisdom, but with the most Fatherly adaptation to the wants of humanity.

After considering the circumstances under which the books of the Bible were written, Dr. Saphir referred to the translation of the Old Testament into Greek, in the form known as the Septuagint. In this the providence of God was also manifest, for then revealed truth was reduced to a character in which it could be read by the nations of the then known world, and at the same time the Greek language was made plastic so as to express ideas which had previously no place in its vocabulary—ideas of humility, grace, and of God. And in due course the Evangelists and Apostles found the language ready to their hand as a medium in which to write the tidings of salvation to be sent into all nations of the earth.

It was then shown that, as pagan Rome persecuted the Book, so papal Rome energetically worked against it, by becoming its gaoler rather than its custodian. As in the early centuries of the Church, the people listened with gladness to the reading of the Word, so, when Luther sent the Bible again into the world, and opened up its meaning by pointing out that justification by faith was the key to understanding it, there was great joy among those who heard the things that were read. Rationalism, however, tried to mutilate the Book; then infidelity derided it; afterwards came waves of pantheism and internal criticism; but yet the Bible lives. Like the Jews, whom Pharaoh tried to drown, another great king tried to burn, and Haman tried to give up to an ignominious death, but who still live, so the Bible lives, and never did it show so much vitality as at the present day. After an allusion to the work of Bible circulation, in order to which many languages have been for the first time reduced to writing, Dr. Saphir pointed out that, though an Oriental book (and some such require to be transfused because they cannot be translated for Western readers) the Bible lends itself remarkably to translation. It was obviously written for all peoples of the earth. Luther's translation is the standard of the German language, and in English literature the Book also occupies a similar place. The Bible speaks to the heart of humanity as no other book does. It is at once the voice of God and the human voice, and as was said of Christ, the Word made flesh, "Never man spake like this man," so of the Word of God, it must likewise be said, "Never book was written like this book." Having cited sayings of great men of various modes of thought with regard to the Bible, Dr. Saphir referred to the peace and hope the Book communicates to man; and concluded by drawing a beautiful parallel between the Living Word and the living book.

CAIRO MEDICAL MISSION.

Dear Sir,—The English Medical Mission in Cairo is the only institution of the kind in Egypt. Our dispensary is daily crowded by sufferers needing medical aid, and most of them deplorably ignorant of the Physician of souls. The larger number are Moslems, and the women are more numerous than the men, especially at this season, when "bad eyes" prevail among children, even more than among adults. Troops of poor women attend, carrying miserable little babies, and followed by toddling creatures, half clad in foul rags, and with bandaged eyes, some nearly blind already. Numbers are saved by prompt care and the skill of our devoted medical missionary, Dr. Azury. While waiting for their turns in the doctor's room, I read and talk to them, trying to show the need of spiritual healing, and the comfort and wisdom to be found in the love of God.

Great numbers of our countrymen yearly visit Egypt, when the heat has passed and the climate is delightful, but few out of the number give a helping hand to this blessed work. Perhaps some intending travellers, or others whose hearts the Lord has touched, may be inclined to send some help through The Christian on reading this little reminder.

Yours faithfully, M. L. Whately.
English Mission, Cairo.

JESUS—A SAVIOUR.

When troubles like fierce tempests roll
In surging waves around the soul,
What can the raging seas control?
One voice—the voice of Jesus.

And when the tempter lures away,
By pleasures for life's little day,
The pilgrim from the narrow way?
One name—the name of Jesus.

Or, when the world's bright lamps shall gleam,
Like stars, for just a moment seem;
They pale before the rising beam
Of light—the light of Jesus.

Yea, if the loss be fairer things,
And sorrow from the heart-depths wrings
Sighs for the dove's pure silvered wings,
One thought—the thought of Jesus.

Thus, throughout all this fleeting life,
With trials, conflicts, dangers rife,
One power can conquer in the strife:
His love—the love of Jesus.

CHISLEHURST AND SEAMEN.

Recently a large and most interesting meeting was held at the Church Room, Chislehurst, under the presidency of the vicar, Rev. W. Fleming, LL.B., for the purpose of forwarding the work of the "Seamen's Christian Friend Society." Rev. G. J. Hill read a short report from Mrs. A. P. Townend, the hon. secretary of the Chislehurst branch, from which it appeared that the ladies' committee had raised about £150 towards the new Sailors' Rest at Fowey, in Cornwall, and had supplied a large number of woollen articles, book bags and Scriptural literature, to seamen and fisherfolk on the Cornish and Devon coasts. From what the local treasurer and secretary had recently seen of the work, during a visit to those coasts, not only had their own interest in the work been deepened, but they felt they could most warmly commend it to the sympathy and help of others. About £500 would still be required to complete the Sailors' Home and Rest. It was also stated that through reading in The Christian a short account of the last meeting at Chislehurst, a gentleman had been led to form a branch on the North Devon Coast, and to open a good Sailors' Rest at Appledore.

The claims of seamen on Christian sympathy, and the value of Sailors' Rests, were eloquently and earnestly pleaded by Rev. R. Wallis Boyns, Sir George Hayter Chubb, Mr. H. W. Maynard, and Mrs. Hill. The hearts of all present were touched when several English and foreign seamen testified to the good that was being done by Bethels and Sailors' Rests, and told of the benefit they had themselves received from this Mission. In simple, unaffected language, they acknowledged the debt they owed to the work which this Society was carrying on in the Ratcliff-highway. A liberal collection was taken.

EAST LONDON EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.—We are requested to intimate that Mr. George Holland and Mr. G. Nokes have consented to act as Vice-Presidents of this Society, and that Mr. J. B. Chanceler, chartered accountant, of King-street, Cheapside, has kindly consented to become its hon. accountant.

HOSPITAL IN JERUSALEM.—Some months ago Jerusalem was visited by a lady, who became so much impressed with the value of the medical work that she most generously offered to provide two fully qualified English nurses for the hospital, in order that the nursing may be performed more skilfully and effectively than has hitherto been practical. After much careful search for suitable persons, the Committee have appointed two ladies trained at the Evangelical Protestant Deaconesses' Institution at Tottenham, and they are about leaving England to commence their work.

Dublin Convention.

The fifteenth annual Christian Convention was held here the week before last, and was attended by vast crowds of people. In the evenings, not only were the spacious Christian Union Buildings full, but the passages also, so that the windows were raised to allow the voice to travel through. Large numbers of clergymen and ministers were present from all parts of Ireland; and the fact of their presence on these occasions invests the meetings with more than ordinary importance.

The meetings commenced on Monday with a largely attended conversazione, which gave a favourable opportunity of friendly recognition, and merged into the preliminary meeting, Mr. J. R. Fowler, of Bray, presiding. Addresses were given by Rev. Dr. Nicholas, of Dublin, and Rev. W. E. Burroughs, of Kingstown. The former pointed out that the assemblage had no denominational basis. They met on the broad basis of a common participation in Reformation or Evangelical principles. They held (1) that the Holy Scriptures contain all that is necessary for faith and morals; (2) the right of private judgment; and (3) salvation by faith in the atonement of Jesus Christ.

On Tuesday, Rev. F. B. Figgis, of Brighton, spoke on the Church's need of the Holy Spirit; it was felt to be a time of great refreshment. And the line of his address was remarkably taken up and sustained in a very able address by Rev. E. A. Stuart, of London, who during his brief stay made a profound impression. The afternoon was given up to missions and Christian work, the chair being taken by the Archbishop of Dublin, who spoke at great length and with considerable effect. He took for his text the Pan-Anglican Encyclical recently issued. There are, he said, some who think that meetings on such a basis as that tend to injure the prospects of Protestant reunion; they say that by meeting in that way the conviction that ought to possess every Christian mind, that the discords of Christendom are a disgrace to Christendom, is gradually lost. Now, he did not think this was the case. If he were to take his own experience—and he dared say it was the experience of many others present—he would say that every time they met together they were the more inclined to fall down upon their knees before the Throne of God, and pray, not that they might remain as they were, but that they might be drawn more closely together, and that at last they might be as their Saviour desired they might be—that they might be one together as they were one with Him.

After noticing the charge of some that Protestants have no definite, positive faith, but only stand on a negative foundation, the Bishop concluded by asking the assembly to show the hollowness of the taunt by rising and reciting with him the Nicene Creed. The audience joined in this most heartily.

Rev. F. B. Meharry, of London, was the next speaker, his subject being, "The Reflex Benefits of Missions." It had, he said, been stated that missions are a failure; but how, he asked, can that be true, when there are at this moment two and a half millions of people under missionary instruction and care; when there are seventy large missionary societies in existence, as compared with seven at the end of last century; and when the sum contributed annually for the support of missions is £1,250,000, as compared with £57,000. Revs. W. H. Tindall and E. A. Stuart spoke in the evening.

There was a large attendance at the noon meeting on Wednesday, when Viscount Bangor presided. Rev. F. B. Meharry delivered an address on "The Influence of Reformation Principles on Life and Character." Incidentally he declared himself as disapproving new Gospels. I do not, he said, approve of people going about preaching novelties. I know only one Gospel—the Gospel preached in Eden, announced by the patriarchs, proclaimed by the prophets, taught by Christ and his holy Apostles and servants. He concluded by maintaining that the radical principle of the Reformation was a universal anxiety on the part of men to get nearer to God. Rev. Dr. Mackennal, of Bowdon, followed, his excellent address dealing with "Self-regard and Self-sacrifice."

In the afternoon foreign missions were again considered. One of the speakers pointed out signs of hope for the Mohammedans of India. Some of the best native Christians of the Empire were originally Mohammedans. One of these, a Christian minister, lately created Doctor of Divinity by the Archbishop of Canterbury, was the leader of the Mohammedan side in a controvery with Christian missionaries, and he is now preaching the faith he formerly opposed. There are many others like him, who are most efficient workers in evangelisation.

Colonel Saunderson occupied the chair in the evening. His presence and address, which was full of evangelical spirit, were welcomed by general cheers from the audience. Rev. F. B. Meyer spoke of deliverance from the power of sin, especially exhorting the audience to take up the true attitude with regard to it, as those risen with Christ. Rev. S. M'Comb, of Derry, followed with an eloquent address on the unsearchable riches of Christ, which was much appreciated.

On Thursday the morning was felt to be very searching and powerful. Rev. F. B. Meyer spoke on the conditions for receiving the Holy Spirit; and Dr. Mackennal, of Bowdon, on the growth of the passion for souls, in which he showed that it was proportionate to our nearness to God. At the close of the meeting, a desire was widely expressed to converse further with Mr. Meyer on the subject of his address; and an adjournment was made into a smaller hall, where an interesting time was spent in asking questions, and in united heart-searching and prayer for the baptism of power.

During the afternoon addresses were delivered by Rev. W. H. Tindall, on Christ's Joy; and by Rev. J. B. Figgis, on Spiritual Possibilities. At night a great closing meeting was held; the large galleries being reserved for men. Rev. F. A. Lillingston spoke on Thoroughness; and Dr. Pentecost, who was about to hold a Mission in the same hall, received a cordial and sympathetic audience.

The arrangements for the order and comfort of the meetings were excellent, and reflect much credit on the officials.

Rev. Geo. C. Needham in Manchester.

The meetings held by Mr. Needham closed on Friday last. There has been the deepest interest, and inquirers have been conversed with every night. On Sunday week the hall was crowded in the evening in every part; a large number stood up for prayer, many—both adults and young people—professing to accept Christ.

On Wednesday evening, Mr. Needham gave his lecture on "The Gospel according to Moses," illustrated by stereopticon views of the Jewish Tabernacle. The house was crowded, and the deepest interest evinced in the subject. Many have expressed delight at being led into a deeper study of the types and shadows of the Old Testament, and the afternoon Bible-readings have been a source of great strength to Christian workers. The word of God has been powerful, and the whole city will be the better for our brother's visit.

A very interesting work in connection with the Jewish population round the Conference Hall has been growing for many months past, and some of the adult Hebrews who have been groping after the light, took occasion to come to Mr. Needham's meetings, and a spirit of inquiry has been provoked amongst them, which we hope will lead to much blessing.

RAILWAY MEN IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—The accounts given from time to time in your columns of the work carried on by the Railway Mission at home have for years interested me deeply, knowing as I do something of its excellent work. As to the need for this special mission, there can, I think, be but one opinion: it is meeting a long-felt want and doing noble work in the cause of Christ.

During my eight years' connection with Indian railways it has frequently struck me that if the need for such a mission exists at home, where Christian efforts abound, how much greater is the need for a similar agency in India, with its ever-increasing system of railways. To-day India can number 14,000 miles of railway, on which are employed over a quarter of a million of persons, of whom 10,000 are Europeans and Eurasians, whose families cannot be less than another 20,000 individuals. Amongst this large number it is surprising in these days of aggressive Christian work how very little real earnest Gospel work is done, and how many there are without religious ordinances.

To give an idea of the state of matters let me mention that at four different centres of a railway of nearly 800 miles, where about 50 families reside, practically little or nothing is done to furnish them with the ordinary means of grace; in fact, at one of these centres referred to, where about ten families reside, no minister or missionary has for years conducted any religious service. On another railway of about six hundred miles, where one missionary is engaged, his work at present, owing to his absence on a year's leave, is practically at a standstill. Numerous other instances might be given to show that in other parts of India matters are equally bad. Truly, much requires to be done on behalf of our fellow-countrymen employed on Indian railways.

I am aware that one society endeavours to evangelise among the Anglo-Indians employed on railways and in districts adjacent thereto, some of whom have done, and are doing, excellent work; but this society has confined its efforts to a few railways and districts. In some instances railways have their own chaplains, but these, as a rule, generally confine their efforts to the headquarters of the railways, and are only now and again able to visit outlying stations. In many cases managers and officers do what they can to enable missionaries to visit their staff and conduct services. But, after all, these efforts are very inadequate compared with the need.

If branches of the home Railway Mission were organised in India, conducted on bold and vigorous lines, and equipped with educated, earnest, godly men, they would do a vast amount of good. Such efforts would, I am sure, receive the sympathy and support of many in India. No grander field for Gospel work exists in India. The acquiring of a language is not a necessity; and in addition to the Europeans and Eurasians referred to, there cannot be less than 30,000 native station-masters and clerks who read and write English fluently, many of whom are not averse to Christian influences. [This is a most important appeal, and we trust something may come of it. Mr. D. Spencer, secretary of the Railway Mission, New Bridge-street, E.C., will be only too glad to arrange the formation of branches in India if the means are put at his disposal. Could not some Christian gentlemen who have acquired fortunes in India, combine to do this greatly needed work?—Ed.]

The Opium Question.

May I claim the earnest attention of your readers to a few thoughts on this subject, which has been much on my mind of late? It would be waste of time to refer, except very briefly, to the enormity of this national sin, because it is familiar to all of us, and is admitted on every hand. It is well, however, to remind ourselves, that, while we are busily working for other objects, and enjoying the luxuries of Christian fellowship, in the midst of a highly-favoured land, thousands of poor, wretched Chinese (both men and women) are daily passing into premature graves, and tens of thousands of homes are desolate and afflicted, through the introduction of the Opium, for which England is responsible. Our missionaries all over that vast territory meet with its terrible effects; they find it one of the greatest hindrances to the acceptance of their message, and they marvel at our supineness. There is, I suppose, an impression prevalent, that, permission having been granted to the Chinese Government to levy a certain duty on Indian Opium, the condition of things is improved; but those best acquainted with the facts tell us that this makes but little difference, and that the point to be aimed at is the entire discontinuance of the growth of Indian Opium for the Chinese market.

With regard to this I want to lay before your readers three foundation thoughts:—

(1) Is it possible to bring so much pressure to bear upon the present Government as will induce them to abolish the growth of Opium? I fancy it would stagger many of your readers if anyone were to assert that it is impossible to stop the Opium trade. Yet do we not act as if we thought it impossible? Are not some of the oldest and truest friends of the cause giving way to discouragement?

Mrs. H. B. Stowe, in her familiar story of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," makes the woman Cassy remark, in view of the fearful sufferings of the slaves, "The Lord does not come into these parts." It may have seemed like this in the days of American slavery, and it may seem like it now in the Celestial Empire; but verily the Lord is taking notice of things in China. His ear is not deaf to the never-ceasing wail of sorrow, and a record is made against the English nation. Let us go back in this conflict to first principles. "The Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, neither is his ear heavy that it cannot hear." Nothing is impossible with Him. As He was with our fathers in the overthrow of the giant evil of slavery, as He has been with some of our fellow-workers in the campaign against licensed sin, so He will be with us if we go forward, trusting in Him.

(2) It is only by a tremendous effort that we can hope to overthrow this mighty evil; anything less would seem to me something like sending one small engine to extinguish an extensive fire.

(3) As to the right time, there may be difference of opinion. Circumstances allow of no unnecessary delay, for with every year there is an increase in the growth of Chinese Opium, rendering it more and more difficult for the Government of that country to put a stop to it within their own borders. Then the circumstances—(1) that there is at present no European war, and (2) that there is no all-absorbing cry before the English public—would seem to make the present a fitting time to begin.

We seem to need union and organisation. In union is strength. Should not the friends of the movement draw together with an understanding that something definite will be laid before them? and should not the representatives of each society having missionaries in China be asked to come to the front and aid in the work? I would hope that before winter is over a conference may be held in London, composed of representatives from every town in the three kingdoms, at which a plan of campaign may be discussed, and immediate steps taken for action. Not only should every town receive an important deputation, but members of Parliament and men of influence should be waited upon, reasoned with, and invited to declare themselves on the side of right and mercy. What we need is to ask guidance from our Heavenly Father in everything, and follow it faithfully, and He will care for results. Samuel Southall.

Hope Cottage.

One pleasant afternoon, in the early winter, six years ago, a lady called on me, and something led me to speak to her about two little girls who, I had just learnt, were in a house of ill-fame with their sister, training, in all human probability, for the life of sin that she herself was leading. I also spoke of other little ones who, I feared, were in the same condition, little thinking what would grow out of our quiet talk together. The next day, to my surprise, her carriage was again at my gate, and she entered the room quickly, like one with an errand.

"You will be surprised to see me again so soon," she said; "but, Mrs. Wilkes, I could not sleep last night."

"Why?"

"Well, I thought, if the Lord came then, or in the morning, what could I and many other women say to Him about those poor children whom you were telling me of; we, who have houses with more rooms than we want, more servants than we need, and more carriages than we require." I looked at her with surprise as she continued, "Will you please take a little house directly, furnish it, get a good woman, and take those two little girls and a few more, and I will pay for the furniture and collect the money to keep them."

I was so thankful that I obeyed her at once. It was very quickly done—a small house in Copper Mill-lane, near The Elms, Walthamstow, where I was then living, was taken, a most suitable woman found, the house comfortably furnished, and two days before Christmas, '82, it was in work with six little girls taken from a future one may well shrink from describing, and Hope Cottage, as its foundress lovingly called it, has indeed proved a door of hope to those who have been sheltered there, as her heart was drawn out still more to those poor little ones—many of them worse than motherless, and some with life stories too painful to tell.

After a little time she took them nearer to her own home at Woodford, on the border of Epping Forest, and built one of the most comfortable and prettiest cottages I have seen. It holds twelve children and the same matron, who tells me that seventy children have been taken in since the Home has been open; it is near the Board School, where they go for education, the elder ones taking care of the mites of two and three years old.

I paid them a visit recently, and what I saw made "my heart rejoice," surely the dear foundress of this little house need not fear to see Him who said, "feed my lambs," for here are twelve poor little lost ones found, and fed, and clothed.

And, as I heard them sing, "I will love Jesus," in this bright cottage, I thought surely they will learn to love Him here.

While I am there, Ellen, the eldest, a nice-looking girl of sixteen, brings in some tea; one of twelve leads the singing and is clever at darning stockings; one little body of about ten comes in from work; for these small folk go out to work, cleaning knives and boots, and light charing for neighbours, and, when fit, they go to service outright; then come a girl and her mother for advice; and again one who has been three years in the same situation, her mistress brings her to spend a few days in her old home for a holiday. No wonder she likes to come, for it is a bright, sunny-looking place, with plenty of toys and cheery work, for everyone has something to do. And it is a long time since I have seen such good needlework, knitting, patching, plain sewing, and button holes—work that one's own mother and grandmother could find no fault with. Indeed, useful home life and gentle teaching of the love of God seem to be the order of the little house and nothing else.

Hope Cottage has been kept up by subscriptions amongst friends, and if they chanced to fall short in the past there were ample means to supplement the deficiency; now it is not so, and Hope Cottage is dependent on those who have the ability and will to give; so I just ask the readers of The Christian to help Mrs. Andrew Johnston to keep up this real work of mercy, the true usefulness and beauty of which I know so well. The two dear girls who were on my heart when I spoke to Mrs. Johnston six years ago were saved from a shameful life, and are now in the North of England, cared for and doing well, living witnesses of the power of love—true, practical love—whilst many others have been started on their way in the world with the memory of a sweet home on earth that will help to fit them for a home in heaven.

There is an economy and common sense about this Cottage work that must recommend it to all thoughtful minds. Making use of the School-board, there is only the Home and living to provide for, and it is consequently not an extravagant idea or undertaking, but one which might be followed in many country places. Fancy what a change for a town child, to be taken from a den, and put into a sweet, clean Home, like this!

Mrs. Andrew Johnston, 13, Prittlewell-square, Southend, Essex, will gladly send a leaflet to anyone who would like to know more about this little charity, and I am sure that earnest inquiries would result in the foundation of other Cottages of Hope, something like this for which I plead. Anna Wilkes.

CHARITIES AND THE INCOME-TAX.—We cannot too soon or too plainly call attention to the important decision given by the Court of Queen's Bench on Saturday last. Lord Coleridge held—Mr. Justice Grantham dissenting—that the property of the Moravian Church, which, like every other charity, has hitherto been exempt from payment of Income-tax, is not and never has been entitled to such exemption. The ground of the judgment is that property held on trust for "charitable purposes" is the only property tax-free, and that charitable purposes mean nothing but the relief of actual poverty. Funds given to mitigate physical privation or suffering arising from poverty are henceforth to be the only funds relieved, and the millions of property held on trust for religious and philanthropic objects is for the first time to be subjected to this tax. For the future the tax is to be levied on all funds held for the promotion of missionary or other religious efforts, for the building of churches, for educational purposes, or any other object of public utility other than the relief of mere physical want. And this far-reaching innovation is brought about, not by any change of policy on the part of the Legislature, not by any Act of Parliament embodying the will of the nation, but solely by putting an entirely new interpretation on an old Act that has for nearly half a century been held to exempt every class of charity, in the widest sense of that word, from payment of Income-tax.—The Record.

A LITTLE BURDEN-BEARER.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

Bessie repeated the words slowly with a somewhat puzzled expression on her bright childish face.

Her last birthday gift had been a tiny blue and gold book with illuminated texts for every day in the year, and each morning she learned the verse for the day, and repeated it to her father and mother at the breakfast table. Better than that she took each day's text for a watchword, and all through the day tried to remember and put in practice its teachings.

"I don't believe this text was ever meant for a little girl like me," she said to herself, after a few moments of thought.

"Of course grown-up people could bear other people's burdens, that means, help them with their troubles, I know, but a little girl couldn't do anything. I guess I'll have to ask mamma to find me another text for to-day."

After breakfast, while she was waiting for the lunch her mother was preparing for her to take to school, she asked the question over which she had been pondering. "Mamma, I couldn't bear anyone's burdens, could I?"

"What do you mean, darling?" asked her mother.

"Don't you remember my text, 'Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ'? I can't take that for my watchword to-day if I can't bear burdens."

"But you can, dear," answered mamma.

"Why, mamma, what can I do for anybody?" queried Bessie in surprise.

"Suppose you try to-day to find out for yourself in how many ways a little girl can lighten other's burdens, and if you cannot find any, I will help you to-morrow; but I am sure you will succeed," answered mamma, as she packed the dainty slices of bread and butter into Bessie's pretty little lunch-basket.

"But, mamma, I haven't any money."

"That doesn't make any difference, dear. There are many burdens besides those of poverty to bear, and if you carry a loving, helpful spirit, you will find many ways to fulfil the law of Christ."

"Well, I'm going to try," answered Bessie, as she gave her mother a good-bye hug and kiss, and started off toward school.

A few blocks from the school-house she came in sight of a poor old cripple, who was slowly and painfully making her way along by leaning on a stout oaken stick.

Some boys were chasing each other along the sidewalk, and, as they passed her, one of them carelessly brushed against her, and knocked the stick from her hand.

Before she could painfully stoop to recover it, it rolled slowly away, and did not stop till it reached the street, where it lay across the gutter. Bessie hastened her steps that she might give the stick to poor old Margaret, whom she knew to be almost helpless without it; but before she could execute her kindly purpose, a butcher's cart rattled around the corner, and in a moment the stout stick was broken in two pieces.

Tears of distress stood in the poor old woman's eyes. "What shall I do? what shall I do?" she cried, as she held on to the fence for support.

"Can't you get home without your stick?" asked Bessie, when she overtook her.

"No, and I'm in such a hurry to get to my daughter's, too. She's sick, and I thought if I could only get around there I could help her a good bit by minding the baby. There ain't much I can do, but that would be a little help."

Bessie looked up at the clock on the church tower. Twenty minutes of nine. A little struggle went on in her heart. She had plenty of time before school to help old Margaret go to her daughter's house, and if she let the old woman lean upon her shoulder she would not miss her stick; but the little girl could not bring herself to make the kindly offer at once, and she stood irresolute for a moment. She wanted so much a little fun before the opening of school. Just then another and a better thought came to her. "Bear ye one another's burdens." It almost seemed as if someone had whispered it to her. Here was surely a golden opportunity to fulfil the law of Christ, and she resolved that no selfish reasons should prevent her from making use of it.

"Lean on my shoulder, and I will help you go to your daughter's," she said, stepping close to old Margaret's side; and the old woman overpowered her with voluble thanks, as, resting her hand upon her new support, she hobbled along.

That walk was quite a trial to Bessie, and she had to remember for whose dear sake she was helping old Margaret bear her burden, to keep herself from regretting her offer. So many people passed her whom she knew that it made her bashful, and even some of her schoolmates overtook her. Then old Margaret leaned so heavily upon her that her shoulder ached long before they reached the door of the house where the sick daughter lived. She had to run as swiftly as her little feet would carry her to reach the school-house before the bell sounded its last stroke, and she was tired and breathless when she reached her desk. At recess, she found a burden of sorrow that she could share. One of the scholars had come back to school that day for the first time since her mother's death, and her black dress and sad face spoke of her grief.

"Come out, and let's have a game of 'I spy,'" exclaimed Bessie's desk-mate, as recess was announced.

"Let's ask Bella, too," suggested Bessie.

"Oh, it's no use! She looks so dismal that I don't suppose she would want to come."

"I am going to stay with her then," said Bessie, pitying her lonely little schoolmate from the depths of her childish heart, and, when the other scholars had trooped noisily out to the playground, she went over to the corner where poor little Bella was sitting crying, with her head bowed on the desk, and tried to comfort her. Her whispered words of sympathy and love gladdened the sorrowing child, and Bella's tears soon ceased to flow.

"Thank you for staying in with me, Bessie," she said, gratefully, as the bell rang for the scholars to come in. "You don't know how much better you have made me feel."

As Bessie went back to her seat there was no room in her heart for regret that she had lost the game the other girls had enjoyed, she was so glad to think that she had helped bear a burden of sorrow. Nor was this her only opportunity. Many times that day she found a chance to lighten others' burdens, and at night when she was cosily tucked up in her little white bed, and her mother sat down beside her for their evening talk, she said—

"Mamma, you were right this morning. I think I did help bear some burdens, and I think I will take that text for my watchword always. I would rather be a little burden-bearer than anything else. It is so nice to make people happy when they are sorry."

Mamma kissed her little girl very lovingly.

"I could ask nothing better for you than that, dearest, and may you have grace always to fulfil the law of Christ."

Bessie's gift from her mother on her next birthday was a beautiful illuminated text, in a handsome frame, which she hung at the foot of her bed, that her last look at night and her first in the morning might be at the words of her life motto—

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."—New York Observer.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

A meeting, under the auspices of this Mission, was held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Manchester, on Thursday last week. Mr. F. W. Crossley, J.P., presided, and gave an interesting address in advocacy of the Mission. Rev. W. S. Standen described the work at Blackpool. Mr. A. Haley spoke of his work at Wakefield, and also of the summer seaside work at Filey. Both had been mightily blessed. Mr. G. Banaster, "the Boys' Friend," gave a grand account of the work in which he delights. Letters received tell of the lasting blessing the Mission has been to the little ones. Rev. J. Hodgson Jones told how, as a lad, he had been greatly influenced for good by Mr. Spiers.

Mr. Henry Hutchinson spoke of the work in some of the districts of Liverpool and Glasgow. One of his most interesting experiences was at the former city. There stayed behind at an after-meeting, a girl, a middle-aged woman, and an elderly woman. Questions were asked and answered, little difficulties cleared away, and there went from that meeting three generations—child, mother, and grandmother—with the peace which passeth all understanding.

Children's services were held in the Baptist Chapel, at Barking, last week, by Mr. T. Lewes Sayer. There was a fair attendance, and the services were productive of great good, several of the elder scholars professing to decide for Christ.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, City Hall, Carlisle, November 16—30. Mr. H. Hutchinson, Free Church, Grange, Edinburgh, November 10—17; Derby, November 22, 23. Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Hull, to November 10. Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Clapton Hall, E., November 13—15; Hatfield-street Sunday-school, Golden-lane, E.C., November 19—24; Gospel Mission House, Appleford-road, Kensal Town, November 26—30. Mr. H. W. Pewtress, Baptist Chapel, Upper Holloway, November 18—23.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Nov. 11, Heb. ix. 1—14; Mon., Nov. 12, Heb. ix. 15—28; Tues., Nov. 13, Ps. l. 1—12; Wed., Nov. 14, Ps. l. 13—23; Thurs., Nov. 15, Ps. li. 1—19; Fri., Nov. 16, Ps. liii. 1—6; Sat., Nov. 17, Heb. x. 1—14.

A PRISONER OF CHILLON.

At the close of his mid-day service in the City Temple last week, Dr. Parker said: "You may have read Byron's poem called 'The Prisoner of Chillon.' There is in the dungeon there at present a lady, a captain of the Salvation Army, who has been preaching the Gospel according to the method of that energetic and useful organisation; and she has been sentenced to 100 days' imprisonment in that melancholy dungeon. ("Shame.") It is iniquity of the basest kind. We cannot change the law, but we can denounce it. The particular law under which that lady is sentenced is fifty-four years old, and was made for the purpose of meeting circumstances which were then supposed to be urgent. That old law has been revived and brought to bear in all its severity on an instance of this kind. (Shame.) It is infamous. Our own Government ought, if possible, to intervene. I believe that all civilisation ought to have a voice in such a matter as this. It is not a question of Swiss law or European law; it is a wider, deeper, greater question altogether. Every honest man ought to have an opinion about it, every earnest man ought to make his opinion known. What are we doing with our criminals, vagabonds, lawless ones, who are being convicted of felony and wife-beating, and family starving? Many sentences pronounced upon such people are not more than half so severe as the sentence which has been pronounced upon Captain Stirling, of whom I am now speaking. We can directly or indirectly send messages of sympathy to this prisoner of the Gospel. I am quite sure that we must use our pulpits more for purposes of this kind. I believe that the pulpit of England has a greater work to do than it has ever yet dreamed of."

On the suggestion of Mr. John Ripley, the following telegram was sent to the prisoner: "The congregation assembled in the City Temple deeply sympathise with Captain Stirling, and bids her be of good cheer."

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Dr. Monro Gibson, of the Presbyterian Church, St. John's Wood.

The Journal Religieux, a Swiss paper, comments with much disapproval on the harsh sentence passed on a Salvation Army Captain in Canton Vaud, by which she is sentenced to six months' imprisonment. Some parents complained that she had won their children to attend certain meetings without obtaining their consent. In 1834, a law was passed to satisfy some who objected to religious liberty, "but," says the Journal, "we do not think it has ever been applied till now, when, after fifty-four years of quiescence, and after the proclamation of federal and cantonal liberty of worship, it is revived by the Vaudois Government as a sop to the petitioners who have demanded the expulsion of the Salvationists."

The long-disputed question, "Where was the place called Calvary?" is the subject of a deeply interesting, illustrated article in the current number of The Century Magazine, which we heartily commend to our readers. The writer, the well-known Rev. Dr. Robinson, gives an account of a visit paid to Olivet and the little church which is stated to mark the spot of Christ's ascension to heaven. The article is of deep interest to all those who love to trace the footsteps of Jesus.

The infliction of a fine of £100 upon the publisher of certain French translations is not so much a satisfactory result of the prosecution, as an incident forcibly illustrating the necessity for such legislation as will enable the authorities to deal promptly with like offences. Such a fine must be a trifling matter to a publisher who for years has been flooding the market with shameful books. The undertaking to withdraw several from circulation is, moreover, discounted by the fact that thousands of them have passed over the booksellers' counters into quarters whence they cannot be recalled, and where they will continue to pollute and deprave. It is most desirable, with a view to the future protection of our English youth, that summary jurisdiction in such cases should be attainable. We trust those who have moved in this unsavoury matter will not rest until they have achieved that object.

Meantime, it is not too much to expect that the sentence of the Court on Mr. Vizetelly will be impartially applied to other booksellers, as the Solicitor General hinted that it would. We can direct the police to at least one shop in a well frequented thoroughfare where piles of the condemned books are openly on sale. This does not indicate much zeal or consistency on the part of the authorities.

The poisonous flood of impure literature has extended to India, where some of the native papers complain bitterly of the apathy of the Government in the matter. As regards our own country, there are difficulties connected with the treatment of this social plague which require careful steering on the part of the authorities, if they would avoid an indirect increase of the evil. But the existing prohibitions ought to be more rigorously and impartially enforced. Greater care on the part of newspapers in refusing advertisements of such works would also do much towards an abatement of the evil, and more attention and assistance should also be given to the circulation of pure literature as an antidote.

Whilst referring to this subject of scrapulous literature, we must express our regret at finding in the current number of The Woman's World a eulogy of a French writer whose sins against common decency are less than Zola's only in degree. We are sure that Messrs. Cassell & Co. would not knowingly permit anything to be issued under their name that is calculated to offend against moral and religious feeling. The publication in which the objectionable article appears is one intended for the family circle, and we feel it our duty to warn those of our readers who see it, against the dicta of the writer, who glorifies De Maupassant's "classic utterance" and "mastership in the art of literary composition," but has nothing to say about the features which render most of De Maupassant's books unfit for any but the lover of literary garbage.

Among the subjects discussed at recent diocesan conferences, gambling and impure literature have taken a prominent place. It is earnestly hoped that the feeling which is being aroused on these questions will not be allowed to die out. The first of these social plague-spots will never be stamped out so long as the anomalous practice continues of persecutions for street betting and public-house gambling, whilst the daily publication of "odds" and racing news is permitted to run riot. Why should that be a venial weakness in the nobleman or legislator which is a shocking misdemeanour on the part of the bricklayer or shop assistant?

This question must be referred to first principles. Every form of betting or gambling, whether in a church or chapel raffle, on the Stock Exchange, or elsewhere, is a violation of the law "Thou shalt not covet," and is the obtaining of another person's property by dishonest means. The public conscience, we fear, is not yet sufficiently awakened on this matter to bring the necessary pressure to bear irresistibly upon Parliament; but much may be done by individual determination to avoid the very least appearance of this vice, which extends far beyond mere betting, and taints much of the business life of every community.

Mrs. Fawcett recently protested against the idea that the value of woman depended upon her relationship to other people rather than upon what she was in herself, and on what she did in the world. She also did well to deprecate idle and useless wrangling about superiority or inferiority on the one side or the other, and aptly hinted that in those spheres where man had been most alone—politics and war—he had not been very successful. Without touching here upon the vexed question as to how far women may with advantage interfere in politics, it may be pointed out that feminine influence can render most powerful aid towards the solution of many of the social problems that are pressing for serious attention. The demand for trained and consecrated talents and time is far in excess of the supply, as there are now numberless avenues of Christian and philanthropic work open in which the best gifts and graces of womankind may find ample scope.

We have frequently urged that for certain offences flogging seems to be the fit and proper punishment, because it would have a deterrent effect. We observe that the Recorder of Birmingham, Mr. Dugdale, Q.C., has sentenced an inhuman ruffian, who was charged with assaults upon little children, not only to a term of imprisonment, but to be flogged. The leniency with which offences of the kind have hitherto been treated has done much to increase the number of offenders.

In spite of the scant encouragement afforded by the present political outlook on the Continent, it is gratifying to note that the promoters of the movement in favour of international arbitration are not idle. A meeting held at Paris the other day was attended by several French Deputies who are in sympathy with this peaceful agitation, and by some English M.P.'s. It was decided to hold a Congress, representing England, America, France, and any other countries in favour of the scheme, on the occasion of the Paris Exhibition next year. It was stated at this meeting that thirty-six members of the House of Lords are supporters of the movement. Whilst the European Powers are eyeing each other with distrust and suspicion, each hesitates to be the first to substitute the council-chamber for the battle-field; but, in view of the tremendous strain and burden imposed upon the people by the maintenance of such bloated armaments, considerations of economy alone should be sufficient to secure general acceptance and adoption of the principle and practice of arbitration.

"What will the end be?" is the question which the Bishop of Liverpool discussed last week to his Diocesan Conference, in relation to the advance of sacramentarianism. We quote some of his words:—

> I cannot help thinking that the state of the Jewish Church between our Lord's ascension and the destruction of Jerusalem contains a lesson of warning which "churchmen" would do well to notice. The Temple service of that forty years was magnificent, far exceeding anything in our own day. The Levitical priesthood kept its place. Sacrifices and feasts were kept up with scrupulous regularity. The formal Pharisee, on the one side, made an idol of externals; the sneering Sadducee, on the other side, made light of the resurrection and trampled on a large part of the Old Testament. Such was the state of things after Christ left the world. And how did it all end? There came at length the most fearful crash and complete break up of a system and a church that the world has ever seen. The Holy Temple was burned, and not one stone was left on another. The priests, the sacrifices, and the ceremonies were swept off the face of the earth like chaff.

It is not the clergy only who are responsible for the things that are awakening concern and alarm in the mind of Dr. Ryle, but the people also who love to have it so. Matt. xxiii. teaches what is the Lord's indignation with those who forsake spiritual worship for the traditions of men.

Many of those acquainted with the matter expected an outcry against the mischiefs of the present system of educational examinations. It has at length found a voice in the current Nineteenth Century, in the form of an indictment and protest, which is signed by 376 men and women of letters. Professors Max Müller, Freeman, and Frederic Harrison support it with separate papers. Without endorsing all that is written, we think the following points can hardly be gainsayed: Education is too much becoming a trade of prize-winning; mental overpressure is bringing on the young physical mischiefs of the gravest import; a quick superficiality in skimming over a subject is destroying the faculty for original work; education is tending to the same type, and a class of specialists is growing up, whose duty is not so much to teach as to cram. If these things are true, and we fear they cannot be controverted, there is a justification for Professor Max Müller's assertion that the present system of examinations is poisoning the best blood of England.

Parents ought to look more carefully at the matter. The evils, as the protest says, apply not merely to boys, but with increased force to girls. To neglect the training of the moral sentiments of a girl, and to ignore the cultivation of her special faculties and capacities, in order that she may run a race of prize-winning, may do an injury to her nature which no time will exhaust. There is, moreover, in the case of girls, ground for the fear that the kind of teachers who formerly educated them for home life are being driven from the field. It is easy to hire specialists who can cram on a few points for an examination, but there are Christian ladies who do not care for honours won in that way, and who yield to a more ambitious class. On every ground it is most desirable that the new educational fashions should be seriously canvassed, and the important protest of the month may go far in this direction.

The remedy, we should judge, is not in abolition so much as in reformation. The true scope and purpose of education must be kept more steadily in view. In the words of the late Rev. Edward Thring, of Uppingham, one of the greatest authorities upon this subject, > Minds cannot be inspected. The minds of a class cannot be produced as specimens on a board, with a pin stuck through them like beetles. Shoving in the regulation quantity is one thing; clearing the stuff out of the bewildered brain and strengthening the mind is another, and the two are foes. The business of the teacher is not to make the mind full, but to make it strong—to train athletes, not to fatten geese.

It is no secret (says The New York Evangelist) that the Roman Catholic Church is making earnest efforts to acquire possession of the Holy Land. Pope Leo XIII. recently directed his bishops to see that collections are at an early day taken in all their churches for the restoration and rebuilding of the old Roman Catholic chapels and churches in that country.

CHISWICK.—A fresh effort has been commenced here for the spread of the Gospel by the Union Hall Mission. Evangelistic services are held each Sunday. In the afternoon there is a Bible lecture. The services have hitherto been of a cheering nature, many Christians in the locality expressing their thankfulness to God for this special effort to reach the masses. Particulars may be obtained from the director of the Mission, Mr. R. Bilke, Greenhill-road, Harlesden, N.W.

"GATHER UP THE FRAGMENTS."—A correspondent, in view of the probable distress during the coming winter, makes this excellent suggestion:—"Let all Christian churches invite those who are in a position to do so, to save the scraps of bread, meat, vegetables, &c., that come from their table. Let these be called for every morning by someone appointed by each church, taken to the vestry of that church, and there day by day distributed as the needy ones apply. Let us try this winter, which many fear will be an unusually trying one, to do our part in bearing one another's burdens, and thus fulfilling the law of Christ."

MR. SANKEY IN ENGLAND.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey landed at Liverpool on Thursday last week, after a speedy and agreeable voyage, and on Sunday held meetings in the capacious hall of the Y.M.C.A., Bristol.

Mr. Sankey's intention is to visit various towns during the next two or three months, holding meetings in connection with local workers, and drawing Christians of various sections into harmonious co-operation. The meetings are to be addressed by local ministers and friends, Mr. Sankey also speaking briefly between the hymns and solos. Judging from the results achieved on Sunday last, there is every reason to believe that this effort to spread the glad tidings of the grace of God will be greatly blessed.

At nine o'clock the hall seating 1200 persons, was filled with Christians, for whom the gathering was especially intended. A competent choir, under the leadership of Mr. Passmore, very effectively rendered some of the new pieces from the "Additional Songs and Solos," one of which, was greatly enjoyed, the audience taking up the refrain with much heartiness. Mr. Sankey also sang

"Joy cometh in the morning,"

"I know whom I have believed," and a solemn and eminently suitable address was given by Mr. James Wright, the co-director with Mr. George Müller of the Bristol Orphan Houses. Basing his remarks upon John xxi. 1—13, he said that unless the Lord sealed with his presence the meetings held, as He did the catching of the fish by his disciples, they would be held in vain, and the object of the present gathering was that He might "shew Himself" now as then. As Mr. Wright proceeded to draw further lessons from the Scripture narrative, the power of God was manifestly felt in the meeting.

At three o'clock the hall was more than filled with a splendid audience of men, a number also failing to gain admission. A Gospel address was given by Mr. Benjamin Thomas. After singing a telling solo,

"I believed, and I keep on believing,"

Mr. Sankey followed with earnest, forcible words, pleading for decision. At the close, as the hearts of the Lord's people were uplifted in silent supplication, over fifty men rose to be prayed for, a manifest token that the Lord had indeed "shewed Himself," and that to bless.

The evening was very wet, but long before time the Hall was packed, and, through the kind co-operation of Rev. Dr. Nicholson, in lending his neighbouring Presbyterian church, that building was very soon filled with six hundred persons for an "overflow." Mr. Sankey opened the first meeting, and after a few words and a solo he adjourned to the church for a while, Mr. Rayner, the secretary of the Y.M.C.A., meantime addressing the audience in the hall. The evening was somewhat far advanced when Mr. Sankey returned, but the interest was unabated as he sang the old familiar hymn, "The Ninety-and-Nine," and gave the history of its origin, after which a large number rose for prayer, and of the three hundred who, although the hour was late, remained for an after-meeting, several professed to give themselves to God, and thenceforth to live for Him.

Mr. Sankey held meetings at Bath on Monday; at Weston-super-Mare on Tuesday; and was present at the annual meeting of the Bristol Y.M.C.A. on Wednesday evening; reports of these will appear in our next issue.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

These gifted brethren have commenced their South London campaign under the most favourable circumstances. The meetings at Upton Chapel, Lambeth, and Rev. Newman Hall's Church, Westminster Bridge-road, have been largely attended, many being drawn to the inquiry-rooms every evening. Not a service has been held without testimony to the power of Christ to save. Verily it has been a time of refreshing; to God be all the glory.

On Lord's Day next they commence a week of services at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and efforts are being made to canvass the district, and bring in the careless. Most earnestly are the prayers of the readers of The Christian solicited for a wave of blessing. Will the reader lay aside the paper, and plead with the Lord for a large ingathering of souls? The condition of London is appalling, and the bitter cry ascends to the ears of the Lord God of Sabbaoth. C.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—As will be seen by our list of forthcoming meetings, an important valedictory service, in connection with the China Inland Mission, will be held in Exeter Hall, on Monday evening next. A dozen missionaries about to proceed to China are expected to be present.

THE KENT MARTYRS' MEMORIAL.—A few days ago Col. Sandys, M.P., unveiled a monument which has just been erected at Dartford, in the place of one which was put up in 1851, but had fallen into decay. An inscription states that the monument is in memory of Christopher Waid, Nicholas Hall, and Margery Polly, Protestants who suffered death for their faith in 1555.

PRINCESS MARY, DUCHESS OF TECK, last week, opened the King Edward Institute and Schools, Albert-street, Spitalfields. After being the centre of important agencies for many years, the premises have just been altered so as to admit of more varied operations being carried on. Rooms for different classes of instruction have been fitted up by generous friends, and it is hoped that the Institute will be much used by the rising generation of East London.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—Mr. James B. Wookey, lay deputation secretary to Dr. Barnardo's Homes, has returned to London after a protracted tour, chiefly in the north of Scotland. He is now arranging a further series of meetings in the cause of the waif children in and around the Metropolis. For this purpose he will be very glad to obtain the use of churches, chapels, mission-halls, &c., for dates that can be subsequently determined upon. No cost will be incurred on the part of those who are willing to co-operate with Mr. Wookey in the service of the children. Mr. Wookey will be very glad to hear early from friends of the work, at 139, Powerscroft-road, Clapton, E.

THE LIVERPOOL CONVENTION for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, Dec. 3 to 7, will be eagerly anticipated by many in Lancashire and neighbouring counties. From the number of leading Liverpool names as conveners, and of Keswich speakers who are to take part, there will no doubt be large gatherings. Messrs. Hopkins, Haslam, Meyer, Figgis, and Elder Cumming, will be the Convention speakers. The last day will be devoted to the claims of the heathen world. Speakers: Messrs. Grattan Guinness, E. O. Williams, W. Baller, F. W. Cooper, and Radcliffe. Simultaneously will be held "the Conference of the North of England Y.W.C.A." All the meetings will be held in Gordon Hall, Blackburne-place, Liverpool. Full programmes from "The Convention Secretary," Gordon Hall.

Our Soldiers.—Lance-Corporal A. A. Walker, Gordon Highlanders, Colombo, Ceylon, will be glad to receive from our readers tracts and back numbers of Christian papers for distribution; also reading, arithmetic, or exercise books for an evening school among his comrades.

China.—The floods in Manchuria, according to the latest news, were extending over the country and causing widespread misery. Collections were being made to relieve the distress. The railway from Kaiping into Tientsin is now completed, and although not formally opened to traffic, trains are running on it daily. This is practically the first completed railway in China; as hitherto the line began and ended at villages, now it terminates in the commercial capital of North China.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN IRELAND.

Much good has come of the stay of Major Whittle in Belfast. Day after day for a month past he has been holding meetings in various public buildings. Over and above that, he has visited many of the large factories, and been instrumental in the spiritual enlightenment of not a few who were living "without God and without hope in the world." Ministers of different denominations and other Christian workers, have rendered hearty help.

At the close of the meetings, inquirers have been attended to, and night after night large numbers have availed themselves of opportunities for conversation. Many have been the tokens of blessing received through these and other channels.

The young have been invited to special services. On one occasion chemical experiments were conducted, and made the medium of conveying spiritual instruction. Another sermon was "magnetic." By means of a magnet and a quantity of nails of various sizes, the Major held the attention of the young people to the end, and imparted to them in quite a novel way many useful lessons. On other days his addresses were upon the Ten Commandments, with illustrations and "Candles."

A special feature of the mission has been the young men's meetings. Each night the lecture-halls of the churches where the meetings were held have been set apart for young men, and earnest and solemn work has been going on; a dozen and more have come out boldly for Christ on several occasions. Large numbers of the future business men of the city have been tenderly and prayerfully pointed to the Lord Jesus Christ. In pointing this class to the Saviour, Major Whittle's son Charles has been greatly used of God.

Major Whittle's engagement in Belfast will extend over three more weeks; after visiting Ballymena, Limerick, and places in the south of the island, he proposes to visit Scotland.

At the noonday prayer-meeting on Monday, at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., Mr. William Grove, who has also been labouring in Belfast, gave some account of Major Whittle's mission. The audiences have night after night filled the largest buildings in the city, while many have not been able to find standing-room. The Committee of management held a large number of seats in reserve for business young men who could not attend until shortly after eight o'clock, and this thoughtful provision was highly appreciated by the young men. One night from twenty-five to thirty of their number, all employed in one house of business, confessed Christ. There is, added Mr. Grove, a spirit of hearing in the north of Ireland, and united prayer should be offered to God that a wave of blessing may pass over the entire island.

THE VICTORIA HOME WRITERS ASSOCIATION (39 and 41, Commercial-st., Whitechapel, E.) has been formed to provide work for clerks out of employment. Circulars and envelopes addressed. Every kind of writing, folding, stamping, and posting undertaken. Men sent out on the most reasonable terms. All communications to be addressed to the general manager, Mr. A. Wilké.

"OUR NAVVIES."—Dear Sir,—I am anxious to interest your readers in 450 navvies now employed in digging out the foundations of the new "Middlesex County Asylum," in course of erection at Claybury, Woodford Bridge. We have been holding meetings in the dinner hour; many have listened, and some, we believe, are impressed. We are anxious to give them a tea, in order to know the men better, and to bring them all under the sound of the Gospel.—Yours faithfully,

(Miss) Ellen M. Cordeaux.

THE GOSPEL IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Dear Sir,—After an absence of seven or eight months in Australia, I find, in going through this colony, that a very marked increase of spiritual power and life has taken place in those parts where Mr. Spencer Walton has laboured. As one who has now worked in the South African mission field for over two years I can truthfully say that numbers are praying Mr. Walton's steps may be again directed to these shores. A goodly number of ministers representing various denominations have been drawn together working hand in hand. Not only have Christians been largely blessed, but considerable numbers have been born again of the Spirit.

It might also interest your readers to know that the Lord has given wonderful encouragement in starting Christian colportage in this colony. One cart has already gone forth with three colporteurs, and thus far much blessing has resulted. In a few days another will be started. It is only just to add that South Africa is entirely indebted to the Christian generosity of Christians in Australia for this important addition to the existing missionary efforts. Two friends have also come for Melbourne to work for the Master in this Continent. So extraordinary has been the interest shown by the Christians of Australia that they have expressly sent back to Africa for a Kaffir and Boer in order that they may go and speak for themselves so as to establish a permanent mission between the two colonies.

May I ask your readers to pray for those who will (D.V.) be shortly going to Australia to promote this work between the sister colonies.—Yours most truly, Joseph Hannington.

Kimberley, S. Africa.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Spencer Walton's mission in the colony is closing. From the day he landed, he has worked arduously and incessantly for three months, and yet, not half the towns in this great colony have been touched. The time given to each has been all too short. The mission has been a most successful one, and we praise God for blessed results. Those reached have been church-goers chiefly. We are thankful for this, as dead professors and worldly Christians do more than anything else to hinder the spread of the Gospel in this land among the godless Europeans as well as the heathen.

At the Paarl, quite a Dutch town, Mr. Walton had a cordial reception and crowded meetings. After a stay at Wellington with Rev. Andrew Murray and work among the students, and at the Huguenot Seminary, he proceeded to Worcester, where the Dutch church was placed at his disposal, and souls were gathered in. At Robertson, only one meeting could be held, but it was a most fruitful one.

In the Eastern Province, Mr. Walton's time was so limited that he preached only in Graham's Town, a cathedral town. The meetings in the spacious town hall were largely attended, and numbers received definite blessings. As the Kaffirs and coloured people are not allowed to mix with white sinners, Mr. Walton addressed them in their own churches. A Kaffir spokesman asked, through an interpreter, what I meant by saying I hoped to meet them in heaven, as he understood the heaven of white people was not intended for Kaffirs. The answer he received was Rev. v. 9. He had doubtless drawn his own conclusions, spite of better teaching.

I am making a short stay at Lovedale, the well-known Free Church Missionary Institution, about seven hundred miles from Cape Town. Here no distinction is made between black and white in either the educational classes or religious meetings. Among the students are some grand specimens of what the Kaffirs can become through God's grace. They are a noble race. On the heights around Lovedale, are the kraals of the heathen, still in darkness and degradation, but willing to hear the Gospel. Would that those who are wasting the bread of life on the Gospel hardened at home could look on their wistful faces.—Yours very truly, (Mrs.) M. S. Osborn.

The Soldiers' Home, Cape Town.

MISS DE BROEN'S MISSION.

In spite of the rain, the cemeteries of Paris were crowded on All Saints' Day, the annual day for visiting the tombs. As usual, members of this Mission were stationed near the gates of the different burial-places distributing printed sheets of texts, or tracts to the mourners, who often, with empty, despairing hearts, go to the graves of those dear to them.

In Père la Chaise, Miss de Broen, two of the evangelists, and some of the orphans went to the grave of one who had worked for eight years in the Mission, and sang hymns of hope and comfort, "Qui sont ces gens à radieux visages? Heureux par la foi, ils remportèrent la victoire, lavés dans le sang de l'Agneau." A large crowd gathered around, and listened with respect to the hymn, and to the earnest words that Miss de Broen and Monsieur Bresson addressed to them. Even the policeman refrained from interrupting, until, after a while, an officer very politely said that open-air meetings were not allowed.

Meanwhile another band of the workers were at the Ivry Cemetery, and there distributed many tracts, while a third band went to the Belleville Cemetery, and both sang and gave a number of leaflets. The prayers of the readers of The Christian are asked that much blessing may rest on the distribution of these thousands of tracts given by Miss de Broen's Mission and by many others, and that open-air preaching may be no longer forbidden, for the sake of the people who have so much need to hear the Saviour's voice.

OBITUARY.

MR. THOMAS DAWSON, EDINBURGH.

Mr. Thomas Dawson, eldest son of the late Rev. James Dawson, Chindwarra, C.P., India, has just died suddenly. He was hoping soon to engage in work abroad as a medical missionary; and in Edinburgh, where he was in training, he was regarded in Christian circles as a young man of much promise.

MR. A. H. DARLING.

After much suffering, Mr. Andrew Henry Darling expired a few days ago at Exmouth. He had been gradually sinking for some time, and inflammation of the lungs supervened upon distressing mental affection. In early life the deceased developed a remarkable linguistic faculty, and after serving as an interpreter to the Danish Embassy at Hamburg, he devoted himself heart and soul to preaching the Gospel in various languages, especially to sailors in England and on the Continent. The strain of speaking enthusiastically in half a dozen languages eventually told upon his mind, and temporal rest was enjoined. Two years ago Mr. Darling had to altogether relinquish his much-loved work. His wife has been kept in perfect peace through all her troubles, and is now living at Ryde, I.W.

RESCUE WORK IN LEEDS. — For over two years a little cottage Home has been opened for a temporary refuge for poor girls, who are wishful to do right. More than one hundred girls have been helped, very many of whom are now earning an honest living. God has wonderfully opened the way for the girls, in answer to prayer; situations have been offered, and many gifts of clothes and money received. There is one girl now longing to find some Christian mistress who will give her a trial as nurse to a babe, or in any other capacity she can fill. Address Mrs. Budd, 66, Fenton-street, Leeds.

"BRIDGE OF HOPE" MISSION.

The new Ratcliff-highway Refuge and Night Shelter, in connection with the "Bridge of Hope" Mission, Betts-street, St. George's-in-the-East, was formally opened last week, under circumstances affording much encouragement to Miss Steer and her hearty helpers. In the presence of many friends and supporters, on Tuesday afternoon, the Marchioness of Tavistock, in a graceful and gracious speech, declared the spacious and well-appointed range of buildings open for their good work. Mr. J. Howard, M.P., Rev. J. W. Horsley, and others, took part in the proceedings.

The Bishop of Bedford said he might lay claim to have been a fellow-worker with Miss Steer, because they had co-operated together, and at times had been of some assistance one to the other. With regard to this work, it had been forced upon them recently on account of dreadful things that had happened in a parish with which he had been very intimately connected for some ten years. He hoped no one would think, because of those dreadful outrages, that matters were worse than they were some time ago. To those whose hearts were moved at this time by what they had read and what they had heard, he would say most earnestly he did not think they could do better than help Miss Steer in her undertaking. He hoped to see the day when every district in the East-end would have some such institution as this connected with it, because by means of such agencies they would be able to do a great deal for the rescue of the lost. It was delightful to know that with rescue work there was associated preventive work, for he believed that was almost more important than the other duty with which the institution was charged. No part of preventive work was more successful than that unconscious influence which was exercised by the residence in such localities of such women as Miss Steer and her helpers.

In the evening Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided over the annual meeting of the Mission. In some remarks on the importance of Miss Steer's work, he referred with pleasure to the great blessing that is to-day crowning all honest work for God.

The balance-sheet, read by Mr. J. J. Corbin, showed expenditure during the year amounting to £1936, and a small sum remaining in hand. About £1000 has still to be raised before the new building can be paid for. Mr. Walter Hazell, a hearty sympathiser in Miss Steer's efforts, expressed the conviction that much of the prevailing vice among women is consequent upon the fact that there is work for only about fifty out of every hundred. As, however, the overplus of female labour is deplored at home, so the lack of such labour is regretted in the colonies; and many young women might be planted in Australia, Canada, and the other new English-speaking countries, where they would not only be away from temptations such as surround them in our great cities, but would also be on the road to happy and useful careers in domestic life.

Rev. Peter Thompson spoke in high terms of the excellence of Miss Steer's work. He emphasised its sad necessity, and told of some of its blessed achievements, as he had been permitted to see them. Speaking of the vice and misery of the district, he said: I feel that there are going on side by side with us such workings of iniquity as are more than competing with us all along the line; and when I go by the public-houses—they are open before we are, and close later than we do—at all hours in the day and night, I feel that Christians will not be desperately in earnest until they know the worst and the utmost of the degradation that prevails. Having thanked God that strong drink had never passed his own lips, the speaker mentioned some of the scenes he had witnessed in the public-house bars, where he had seen mothers pouring drink into the mouths of their babes, thus giving them in their tenderest years a taste for that which is doing so much harm and evil. He went on to refer to the fact that, after leaving school, and before getting work, young girls frequently become demoralised. He maintained that, if poor girls could be taken in hand directly they leave school, their after life would be much better than it generally is. Rev. L. S. Wainwright also spoke very highly of the work done in the "Bridge of Hope."

Miss Steer followed with a brief recital of some of the joys and sorrows of her life of service. The Preventive Homes for the protection of young girls have been greatly blessed to many. The Night Shelter is a department very difficult to work; but, with care and judgment, it may be instrumental in rescuing many from evil courses. Girls out of work are befriended, and are thus delivered from temptation. During the month of October no fewer than two hundred poor women were taken in, and all were substantially benefited in some way. It was very gratifying to learn that some women who, when the Refuge was open ten years ago, were pacing Ratcliff-highway in sin and misery, are now leading honourable and Christian lives. In view of such trophies of Divine grace, Miss Steer declared, with much heartiness and earnestness, that the results had been so blessed as to be worth a thousand such lives as hers. After a few words by Mr. T. Woollacott, one of the Council of the Mission, who intimated that visitors would always be welcome to inspect the buildings, the meeting closed.

A MISSION IN GREENOCK.

A time of great blessing has been experienced in Greenock in connection with a three-weeks' mission arranged by the Church of Scotland Young Men's Guild. The first week was devoted to prayer-meetings in the Wellpark Church, which were addressed by Revs. W. Wilson, John Sloan, A. T. Donald, and T. Duncan. The meetings were then transferred to the East Kirk, where Rev. George Wilson, St. Michael's, Edinburgh, conducted evangelistic services every night. Mr. Wilson has lately been appointed one of the Church's missioners, and this has been his first mission since the appointment was made. We are very thankful the Church has taken this step, and we trust it may be the means of great blessing.

The last meetings were held in the West Kirk, the missioners being Rev. W. Robertson, Home Mission Deputy, and Rev. W. Hutchison, of Coats. Bible-readings were given in the afternoons, and a children's service was also held. It is felt and known that much good has resulted. Many have given testimony of blessing received, and evidence has not been wanting that the Christians have been led to fuller consecration and into greater joy in the Master's service.

LICENSED VICE IN INDIA.—Referring to this subject, The Bombay Guardian says:—British Christians are determined. Let there be no mis take. The C.D. clauses of the Cantonment Acts are doomed, fatally, irrevocably doomed. The Government of India of the future is going to lend its aid in protecting virtue and not vice, in uprooting sin instead of providing for and encouraging it. The Pro-Vice party at Simla will have to be converted, radically converted, or go!

CHILDREN IN PANTOMIMES.—A meeting was lately held in Porchester-terrace to protest against the employment of children in theatres and pantomimes. Mrs. Henry Fawcett said that children by their employment on the stage were injured educationally, physically, and morally. There was a Home in London for fallen girls under twelve years of age, and it was crowded within a short time of being opened. She did not think the theatre was the sole cause of the festering sore, but young children employed at theatres were subjected to influences which tended to make them social wrecks. Mrs. Ormiston Chant advocated the employment of women inspectors for the factories as well as the theatres.

THE DREAMER OF BEDFORD.

On Wednesday last week, Pastor Frank H. White gave his admirable lecture on John Bunyan and The Pilgrim's Progress, illustrated by superb dissolving views, at the large new Gospel Hall, Wood Green. These splendid pictures are all hand painted, specially prepared, and exhibited on a large scale. There are forty-two of them, representing the chief incidents in the life of John Bunyan and the principal features of his book, "The Pilgrim's Progress." The audience consisted chiefly of children. When we remember that the conversion of one child of ten years is at least equal in its possibilities to that of five men or women of fifty, a valid argument is supplied for giving the children of this generation, no less than the adults, an opportunity of seeing and hearing these soul-saving truths so picturesquely delineated by the artist and so enthusiastically expounded by the excellent lecturer.

R. C. M.

The lecture by Rev. Adam Chambers on the Glorious Dreamer of Bedford is in every sense a success. We have had in my time at Abbey-road Chapel many intellectual entertainments and spiritual treats; but I do not remember one, during a quarter of a century, which so commanded the attention and riveted the people as did this. The lecturer held the large audience as by some magical spell all the way through; the lecture was too full of interesting and racy points for anyone to be dull, and yet it was solemn as a sermon. From first to last it was full of power and beauty. It was simply a treat that ought to be brought within the reach of every congregation in Christendom where the grand old Gospel is preached.

The lecturer is an artist of no ordinary merit. His oil paintings, eighteen in number, and illustrative of the pilgrim's journey, manifest care and boldness of treatment; his characters are dressed in the ordinary costumes of the nineteenth century, and this brings the great subject to ourselves and our times. The pictures are not only so painted as to make each character live before you, but Mr. Chambers has introduced some startling novelties; the falling off of the burden from the back of the pilgrim, and the sudden appearance of the three shining ones at the cross, are clever and good. Then Mr. Chambers gives his hearers a much-enlarged and spiritual interpretation of Bunyan's book, bringing home to the heart and conscience the great and undying truths of salvation. Heart and soul are in his theme. The subject seems to be part of himself; and we pity the man who can sit and hear the touching and pathetic description of Christian at the cross and remain unmoved.

God is sure to bless this lecture to the delight of thousands, and to the salvation of souls.

Y.M.C.A., Westbourne-grove Branch, 172, Queen's-road.—A public meeting and valedictory service were held here on Wednesday evening, October 31, on the occasion of the departure of missionaries for China. The chair was taken at eight o'clock by Mr. C. C. M. Baker. The hall was crowded to overflowing. The speakers were Rev. F. W. Baller, Messrs. Hunt, Lambert, Cooper, Selkirk, Duffy, and McNair, and Miss Steadman.

THE HOSPITAL SHIP.—In a letter in the current Toilers of the Deep, Mr. E. J. Mather states that the career of the new hospital ship must abruptly terminate at the close of her experimental cruise, unless sufficient funds are received to warrant the Council in sanctioning the despatch of the vessel on regular service. The same number of the organ of the Mission contains some interesting articles and editorial notes, showing how greatly the fishermen appreciate the philanthropic efforts of the Mission on their behalf.

RETROSPECT AND PROSPECT.

THOU hast praised Him oft of yore,
Praise Him now, as ne'er before;
Loudly make each glad note swell;
Praises suit redeemed lips well.
Great has been his faithfulness,
Great his willingness to bless;
Sure, He hath supplied thee ever,
Thou hast found Him fail thee never!

As thou see'st in full review
All the way thou hast gone through:
Thou wast in the land of sin,
Fettered, tightly bound therein;
Thee Jehovah did release,
Changed thy groanings into peace;
Far away his kind love sought thee;
Safely out of Egypt brought thee.

For the hand that led thee out
Hath conducted thee about;
Made thee drink of joy's pure streams,
Lit thy path with brightest beams;
Led thee, too, through sorrow's maze,
Tried thee, too, in countless ways;
That as gold thou mightst be purer,
And thy trust in Him securer.

Great have been his mercies past,
But the best comes always last;
Glorious things before thee lie,
Veilèd in futurity;
Wondrous things thine eyes shall see,
Praise Him for what yet shall be—
For the blessings on thee streaming,
And thy path with love-light gleaming.

And with hopeful gladness stand,
Gazing on the promised land:
Victories must yet be won;
Still thy Joshua leads thee on.
On—to conquest over sin,
On—all blessedness to win.
See, the milk and honey flowing,
All thy future bliss fore-showing.

Thinking of th' eternal home,
To whose bliss thou soon shalt come;
Treasures hid in Jesus Christ,
All unuttered, all unpriced.
There, thy wonderment shall be,
Through the grand eternity;
All things then to thee unfolding,
No reserve and no withholding. W. A. I.

"ROMANISM," says Mr. Ober, an accomplished American lecturer, "does not have as much power in Mexico as it has in the United States."

WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.—The fifteenth annual convention was held at New York, on October 19 to 23. About 250,000 members, residing in nearly all the States and Territories, including Alaska, were represented, and the proceedings were full of encouragement. Matters of great practical importance were discussed. It was reported that twenty-five States and all Territories have secured to the children in all public schools scientific temperance instruction. Two hundred thousand pledged children belong to the Loyal Temperance Legions. Miss Willard was, for the tenth time, elected president of the Union.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission to young women, Nov. 12 to 18, Y.W.C.A., Battersea-park, London, to be conducted by Miss Barber.——For blessing on a mission at Cheltenham, by Mr. Opie Rodway, Nov. 10 to 13.——For blessing on evangelistic meetings in the F.C. Hall, Campsie, N.B., beginning Nov. 12.——For blessing on meetings at Carluke, N.B., beginning Nov. 18.——For blessing on a mission at St. Stephen's, Cardiff Docks, by Rev. Walter Bradbury, for ten days, from Nov. 17.——For blessing on a mission at Gresham Chapel, Brixton, commencing Nov. 11, by Miss Smith and Miss Bax.——For blessing on the permanent Epileptic Home, Polegate, Sussex.——For the restoration to health and sight of Mrs. Chalmers (formerly of Beckenham Rectory, Kent), now suffering much after an operation on one of her eyes.

Personalia.

Miss Herdman and her party, of the North African Mission, have safely reached Fez, where they are to settle and labour in the Gospel.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon continues to suffer severe bodily pain. It is his intention, as soon as possible, to start for Mentone, in the hope that renewed health may ensue.

Mr. Opie Rodway, of Stroud, for two months past has been incapacitated from engaging in active service, but he is now much better and again commencing evangelistic work. He will be at Cheltenham from November 10 to 13.

Dr. Murdoch, of the Christian Vernacular Education Society (says The Indian Witness), produces excellent literary fruit in old age. His fertility is remarkable. Our contemporary does not see how any missionary or intelligent Christian in India can get along without Dr. Murdoch's books.

Lady Whitworth and her co-executors are giving to Darley Dale, Derbyshire, under the will of the late Sir Joseph Whitworth, Bart., an institute for educational and recreative purposes, a hospital, and a smaller hospital for infectious diseases. The total expenditure is estimated at upwards of £25,000.

Bishop Taylor recently preached at Ocean Grove a sermon one hour and fifty-five minutes long, on the condition and needs of the heathen. At the close he said he would not ask a public collection, but those who wished to assist the work he is doing in Africa might give him what they pleased. In a few hours the gifts amounted to 5000 dollars (over £1000).

The Lord Mayor elect has decided, subject to the permission of the Guardians of the City of London Union, to give a dinner of roast beef and plum pudding on Lord Mayor's Day to all the poor residing in the workhouses, and also a pound of tea to all who are in receipt of outdoor relief within that Union. He is also providing for the entertainment of the poor in the several unions of Westmoreland, the county of his birth, and in the parish of Lewisham, in which he resides.

Dr. Charles S. Robinson, of New York, whose article on "The Site of Calvary" appears in The Century, is also preparing a new volume of hymns and tunes for the Sunday-school. The Chicago Standard says he is a man of wonderful resources, and of most indefatigable labours. To sit with him for an hour is an inspiration for months. He is opening a way through Egypt and the Wilderness for other scholars to follow, and for tens of thousands of plain men and women as well; and is doing much other good literary work.

Dr. Nevius, writing to an American paper on work in China, says:—"The church at home must not indulge in impatience for hasty results in China, unless it be an impatience which leads to more earnest and importunate prayer for God's presence and blessing. Pride, material prosperity almost unprecedented both in its extent and perpetuity, a high degree of social and intellectual culture, hoary and ingeniously devised systems of religion and superstition interwoven with national, family, and social institutions, combine to present barriers to the introduction of Christianity such as perhaps it has on the whole never yet encountered."

Mrs. Booth-Tucker lately received at Bombay a welcome, with the fifty new workers from England taken out by Mr. Tucker. Mrs. Tucker's address was the event of the evening. "She is," says The Bombay Guardian, "a young lady with a spiritual-looking face, but looked, as her husband said she was, very unwell." She said she was perplexed, but not cast down, at the great problem of the salvation of Bombay. She admired her husband's faith in going forward amidst so many difficulties and with so little results during the past six years. India (adds our contemporary) can very well do with a dozen such as Mrs. Tucker, if England has them to send. "We trust, however, that Natives will not be turned away, as they were last Sunday evening, at the head-quarters of the Army in the Fort, because they could not pay the admission fee of two annas. We do not want to see the system of payment (especially on Sunday nights), for that which is 'without money and without price,' introduced into India."

Miss Sharman, we are very glad to know, has just received a bequest of £1000 for her orphanage, from the estate of the late Mr. Boustead, of Clapham.

Mr. D. C. Joseph is now on his way back to Jerusalem to resume work there among the sons of Israel. He desires prayer for a safe journey, and blessing on the work in his hands.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has been invited, in connection with the Christian Workers' Conference at Detroit, Mich., U.S.A., November 15 to 20, to conduct a series of children's meetings and to give an account of the Children's Special Service Mission.

Dr. Talmage is to furnish The New York Observer with an article every week, under the general title of "Sparks from my Anvil." Dr. Talmage (says our contemporary) has the talent of original expression. He does not deals in platitudes. His utterances are of the scintillating order, and his sparks set other hearts aflame. In this busy age, when there is so much to attract attention, he who would fasten home his thoughts in other men's minds must put them in striking terminology. Truth must be made portable if it is to be carried away.

Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, says in The Golden Rule:—So far as my experience of the working of the Society of Christian Endeavour goes, it has won my sincere gratitude. And this, not simply for what it has helped to do, but quite as much for what it has helped to undo. The rage for church amusements and vestry entertainments, which the last few years have witnessed, has filled me with sincere alarm. It is said that, in order to draw the young people, we must have literary, and dramatic, and culinary attractions; which is true as far as it goes. These things do attract to themselves, but they attract no one to Christ, and we want to see them displaced. The coming in of the Society of Christian Endeavour has done much to solve the difficulty with us. It has turned the energy and activity of our young people into a better channel. Instead of amusement, it is now solid Christian service.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

A seven-days' mission, conducted by Rev. R. Balgarnie, was concluded on Friday at Grosvenor Chapel, Manchester (Rev. T. Willis, pastor). A large number of young people connected with Roby Sunday-schools came into the inquiry-room.

Mr. Wm. Grove and Mr. Leonard Weaver have concluded a successful nineteen days' evangelical mission in Belfast. The meetings were held in a wooden building, said to be capable of accommodating about three thousand people. Many professed conversion, and many Christians have been revived.

Miss Smith and Miss Bax have concluded a mission at Sumner-road Chapel, Peckham, in the Primitive Methodist Connexion. Large numbers of adults passed through the inquiry-room, at the praise meeting. At the close, the majority rose to testify to much blessing received, both to salvation and sanctification. At the children's meetings many little hearts were yielded to God.

Falkirk.—Mr. J. W. Moodie has conducted three weeks' evangelistic services here, under the auspices of the local "Evangelistic Mission Band." The word was with power, and it is believed that many have accepted Christ as their Saviour. Mr. Moodie also spoke on his recent travels through the Holy Land to large and attentive audiences. His graphic description of the Land seemed to excite much interest. He is now conducting meetings in Duns.

Revival at Bombay.—Rev. J. H. Bateson sends an account of the blessed revival of religion which has accompanied the mission he has been conducting in Bombay; more than eighty, it is said, have been added to the church. People from all churches went to the meetings and got converted, so that, whilst the Methodists have an encouraging increase, all the churches in Bombay gain from the effort. Such a blessed outpouring of God's Spirit almost at the commencement of the Bombay mission will leave its impression on all the future work.

Or, The Pleasure and Profit of Bible Study. Being an Introduction to the Study of the Holy Scriptures.

By DR. G. F. PENTECOST, M.A.

With Introduction by Rev. Joseph Cook,
and Rev. J. H. Vincent, D.D.

Presentation Edition: Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"No one can read this almost unique volume without being stimulated to a more diligent study of The Book. It is not, strictly speaking, evidential; yet the key to valuable Scripture evidence is to be found within. It is not exegetical; but the careful reader will be taught thereby a sound method of exposition. It is not homiletical; although the seed corn for dozens of addresses are contained in its brief compass. Buy it, we can say to all; read it with your Bible open and a common-place book to hand, ready to catch up and store away the many precious things so lavishly scattered throughout its pages."—Night and Day.

FOGS.

The foggy season came upon us early this year, and numbers of poor sufferers were filled with dismay as the choking fogs that Londoners know only too well darkened what may generally be called the golden month of October. Our hearts ache as we realise how great is the suffering caused to those afflicted with chest weaknesses, and we wish that something could be done to mend matters. What can be done? Certainly the advent of foggy weather cannot be delayed, neither can its distressing effects be separated from it; but we can give those who suffer the means of nullifying its influences, and that, too, in the simplest, most natural way.

Robust folks do not mind the fog much. Granted, it makes the eyes smart, but it doesn't set them coughing and choking as it does those who are weak at the chest. It is, therefore, logical enough that if we make the weak chest strong, we do all that is necessary to free the sufferer from the terrors of fogdom.

The means of doing this are wonderfully simple. By supplying the system with the vitalising force of Odo-Magnetism by means of Appareil Magnétique, the weak respiratory organs are at once protected and strengthened, and by degrees they gain power to successfully resist all unfavourable atmospheric influences. Read the following:—

Mrs. BROTHERHOOD, Forest-street, Sheepshed, Leicester.

"More than five years ago I received one of your appliances for asthma, as I had been suffering from that sad complaint for seven years, sometimes not able to get across the room or lie down in bed. When propped up I had to struggle for breath. I had many doctors, but all medical skill failed. I grew worse till there was scarcely a day passed without an attack. My sufferings were indescribable before I wore the appliance. For a time it may not have had much effect, but by perseverance the attacks became less frequent and not so bad. I am continuing to wear your appliance, and am pleased to say it is over two years since an attack occurred. You are, I believe, in God's hands, the honoured instrument of my cure, as I can go out in all weathers and walk a good distance. It gives me pleasure to say I am in better health now than I have been for twelve or thirteen years.

"You can make use of this as you please; I shall be glad to give information to anyone suffering from the same complaint."

It is no easy thing to overcome a complaint of so chronic a character as the above, and it speaks volumes for the efficacy of the treatment that has enabled such a sufferer to endure all weathers without discomfort. This, however, is no solitary case, but merely one from among numbers who have testified just as favourably to Mr. B. Copson Garratt's treatment. Many people have been unable to winter in England till they acted upon his advice, whereas they can now even enjoy the English winter.

Mr. Garratt will be happy to correspond with any sufferer, and to give advice gratis. Of course, every case cannot be cured, but none need hesitate to seek advice, for a thoughtful and candid opinion may always be anticipated.

"It is impossible to tell into whose hands these words may fall. Young men amidst the godless tea-planters of India, or in the wild bush-life of Australia. Sailors on shipboard, and soldiers in camp; lonely confessors of Christ in worldly and vicious societies; where there is everything to weaken, and nothing to reinforce the resistance of the brave, but faltering spirit. Let all such take heart! They are treading a well-worn path, on which the noblest of mankind have preceded them; and which was much more difficult in days when few were found in it; and specially in that day, when a solitary man, the 'father of many nations,' trod it."

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

BRONCHO-PHTHISIS—CASE of a CHRISTIAN WORKER near HENLEY-IN-ARDEN.

The patient—John Neale, of Lowsomeford—had been suffering two years; his disease originating with a severe cold; but Consumption had made some havoc in the family. The expectoration had become green and purulent, and cough severe; the left side tender and painful; the breathing had become very bad; and the medical reports, "Left lung diseased."

This case was brought before me, and advice and medicine was sent. The patient commenced on 1st January last year; and this was his encouragement to perseverance. He says:—"I once had a daughter set up by taking three bottles of your medicine, and she is as well as ever she was in her life."

In a month he was much better. In another month he says:—"I am thankful to report that I am improving in health, and am able to do a little work."

In another month he says: "I am grateful to our heavenly Father and to you for your medicine, as I continue to get on well." In July he says: "I never expected to be so well."

I recently received a letter from Rev. E. Gould, of Henley-in-Arden, in which he expresses thanks for the recovery of John Neale, and for reduced charge for medicine to him, and adds :"In all human probability if he had not been spared the little Home Mission Station would long ago have been closed."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

EPILEPSY OR FALLING SICKNESS.

GIDDINESS, SENSATIONS, AND FAINTS.

I will demonstrate to the whole world how that most dreadful of all complaints, "Epilepsy," which has been hitherto considered incurable, can be permanently cured (without the chance of failure). All afflicted may write with full hope and confidence to Mr. Williams, 10, Oxford Terrace, Hyde Park, London; who will send full particulars to any person, free of all charge.

INQUIRERS' PAGE.

IMMERSION.

SIR,—Your Barnstaple correspondent, in questioning, as so many do, the possibility of immersion (in large numbers) as baptism's true ideal, and thinking that 3000 could not have been immersed at the time of Pentecost, seems to forget that the river Jordan, which was not far off, could readily find convenience for three million candidates as easily as three thousand.

John baptized all his candidates in the Jordan, and found no difficulty in carrying out his orders on the point from heaven. Your correspondent also forgets that the Lord Jesus used a word to express his will, which cannot possibly have the two meanings, sprinkle and immerse; and he forgets also, as to candidates, that the express command of the great commission was that they who were made disciples were to be baptized, and none others; infants cannot be instructed and made disciples of.—Yours, &c., PATROBAS.

SIR,—While quite agreeing that immersion and not affusion was the usual method of Baptism in the ancient Church, and that the latter mode was, as according to the Church of England it is now, a concession to bodily weakness, allow me to point out to your correspondents that our Lord speaks of baptizing of tables or beds (Mark vii. 4), which can hardly be supposed to mean immersing them, and that Paul tells the Corinthians that "all our fathers were under the cloud and all passed through the sea, and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." It was not the Israelites but the Egyptians who were immersed: the Israelites passed over dry-shod; sprinkled they may have been, immersed they certainly were not.

As the question is, "What saith the Scripture?" I will not touch upon the practical difficulties of an unvarying rule on the subject of immersion. Christ, our Lord, has commanded baptism; but, unless the word "baptize" must always mean "dip," He has left the quantity of water to be determined according to circumstances.

While on this subject, may I further point out, in reference to a former correspondence, that there is one method of Christian baptism about which there is no dispute; no one denies that the immersion of adult converts is valid baptism. If Mr. Tucker would but make sure that his converts are baptized after that manner, he would remove what seems to many a blot on his noble work.

DEAR SIR,—Granting without hesitation that the word "baptize" strictly means to dip, does it follow that the Sacrament of Baptism can in no other way be valid? I see:—

(1) That the fulfilment of the promise in Acts i. 5, "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost," is thus described in Acts x. 44, 45, "The Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word"; "On the Gentiles was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost."

(2) That it is difficult to conceive that in Jerusalem, a city beyond all others remarkable for its ancient provision of vast cisterns for storing water, thus testifying to its immense preciousness at all times, the few public pools within reach would have been permitted to be contaminated by the immersion in them of 3000 persons on one day (Acts ii. 41).

(3) That the jailor's house at Philippi would have been very unlikely to contain convenience for his immersion during the hours of the night.

(4) That in arctic or desert regions, immersion would be almost impossible during many months of the year.

(5) That, even in our climate, it would in a large number of cases be so dangerous as to be prohibitive.

(6) That our Lord sanctioned the relaxation of outward form, distinctly commanded, when man's needs so require (Matt. xii. 1—8).

(7) That, even when no necessity has compelled, we recognise the propriety of this alteration of the Day of Rest from the Jewish Sabbath to the Christian Lord's Day.

(8) That we probably agree in thinking that the marks of the Lord's presence and of spiritual life and power, which belong to the Church, and which unbaptized could not possess, have rather been with the Reformed Churches of the West habitually practising aspersion, than with the Eastern Church which boasts of its immersion.

May we not, therefore, rest in peace, and conclude that the sacrament which is known by the name of Baptism from the ordinary form of its original institution is the truly vital question; but that the Lord does not tie his blessing to one mode of administration or to the other. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind, for "the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace, and joy, in the Holy Ghost."

Your faithful brother, NEMO.

Among other letters is one from Joel Jellyman, contending that the word baptize means "washing or purifying in general;" and one from A. M. Z., who endeavours to show that the early Christians were called "sprinkled ones" by the Rabbinical Jews. This letter would provoke a discussion on a question of facts outside the real subject in hand. Mr. Joseph W. Spurgeon, writing from Leytonstone, points out, in reply to Mr. E. W. H. Langdale, that the question is not one of convenience but of obedience. On the question as to the ennuch continuing his journey with wet clothes on, he says, "I do not suppose he did so, but if he did, the coolness would be enjoyable and harmless in a hot climate." Mr. John Hunter maintains that baptism is a rite of Mosaic origin, and he quotes Hebrews ix. 10—14 in support of his contention that it was by "sprinkling."

FASTING.

DEAR SIR,—There is one aspect of fasting which I think has been somewhat overlooked in the correspondence in THE CHRISTIAN.

I would suggest that in John iv. we get an example of the true spirit in which abstinence is right and acceptable with God. I refer to vv. 31—34: "The disciples prayed Him, saying, Master, eat; but He said, I have meat to eat that ye know not of. Therefore said the disciples one to another, Hath any man brought Him ought to eat? Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me and to finish his work."

There are times when the needs of the body are held in abeyance, through the intense concentration of all energies upon the Lord's work; when the desire after spiritual things is paramount and all else is forgotten.

Eliezer was so intent upon his mission that he said, "I will not eat until I have told mine errand." Gideon's three hundred men were chosen on the same principle, namely, that of voluntary (almost in-voluntary) abstinence for the sake of the work before them (Judges vii. 5—7).

Paul said of one who "for the work of Christ was nigh unto death, not regarding his life," "hold such in reputation." Though the occasions may be very few when such self-sacrifice as that is needful or right, yet the spirit which prompted it is known to all true followers of Christ, and I believe that God sees and accepts in them such fasting, and blesses them accordingly in their service for Him.

G. M. T.

LAYING BY.

DEAR SIR,—The question of your correspondent, "L. A.," in your issue of October 19, seems to arise from conscientious scruples which he entertains with regard to the injunctions of our blessed Lord in his Sermon on the Mount (Matt. vi. 19—21, and 25—34). But these scruples he may discard, as neither the Authorised nor the Revised Version give the exact meaning of Matt. vi. 19—21, which is not, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth," &c., but, "Do not treasure up for yourselves (goods or things) upon earth…but treasures up for yourselves (goods or things) in heaven." The real force of the commandment lies in the treasuring up, "for where your treasure is there will your heart be also." The real meaning therefore is: "Set not your heart upon things on earth, but upon things in heaven." See also Col. iii. 1, 2. According to the Authorised Version, we are exhorted in Matt. vi. 25, "Take no thought for your life," &c.; but the Revised Version says, "Be not anxious for your life," &c., which is also repeated in vv. 28, 31, 34; or, perhaps, it would still be better, "Be not over anxious," or, "Take no anxious thought for your life," &c. Christ, therefore, does not forbid us to lay by money for sickness, old age, or for any other lawful purpose; but He warns us against doing so with anxious care, and against setting our heart upon it, instead of putting our trust in our heavenly Father, who knoweth that we have need of these things. Instances of such laying by for future use we find, amongst others, in Gen. xli. 35, 48, 49; Prov. vi. 6—8; 1 Cor. xvi. 2; 2 Cor. xii. 14; 1 Tim. v. 8, vi. 17—19. From all this it seems to be a "poor Christian's" duty to lay by money for sickness and old age, when he has an opportunity to do so; but without being over anxious about it—not setting his heart upon what he may thus have laid by, but putting his whole trust and confidence in God, his heavenly Father, who will either provide for him the means of laying by, or, if not, will take care of him in sickness and old age, according to his gracious promise in Ps. l. 15. A BIBLE STUDENT.

Letters to the Editor.

AUSTRALIAN ANTI-INFIDEL CRUSADE.

SIR,—May I appeal through your columns to Christians generally to lend a helping hand to distribute throughout Australia and New Zealand 100,000 copies of Mr. Hastings's "Inspiration of the Bible," at cost price. The gratuitous distribution has already commenced, and will be continued as the funds for that purpose are received.

Subscriptions will be thankfully received by H. L. Hastings, 47, Cornhill, Boston, Mass., America; J. A. Packer, 130, Pitt-street, Sydney, N.S.W., Australia; and by S. Packer, 48, High-street, Andover, Hants, England. Trusting that Christians will support us in this labour of love, in our endeavours to wreck Australian infidelity.

I am, yours truly, JOHN H. MITCHELL.

ROMISH SCHOOLS IN WALES.

SIR,—I can confirm what your correspondent tells of the growth of Roman Catholic schools in Wales, and the sad fact that they are largely attended by the children of Protestant Nonconformists.

I was in North Wales recently, and learned that at several Catholic schools there was a large attendance of Protestant children. At one school in particular nearly all the children were Protestants. Though religious instruction is nominally not given to them, I was told that they were accustomed to make the figure of the Cross and repeat prayers to the Virgin.

I was told the reason of this strange fact was that the Catholic schools were good and cheap, and gave the children treats, and that the parents thought it was enough that their children attended Protestant Sunday-schools. I fear there is a system of Romish propagandism little apprehended in this country, which is pregnant with danger for the future. Surely the Welsh Protestant churches will take up this matter, and see that schools be provided, if necessary, sufficient for all their children.—I am, &c., A PROTESTANT.

MUSIC-HALLS.

Several letters, in addition to those already published on this subject, have reached us; but they do not throw much fresh light upon it. "Augustin Wellington" replies to his critics, but his letter if published would certainly not advance his side of the controversy. "Margaret L. Conyers D'Arcy," a music-hall artiste, asserts, after ten years' experience of the profession, that "no lewd or disgusting song is ever allowed in any of the first-class halls." On behalf of the many "pure, true wives, mothers, and daughters" in the profession, she protests against the wholesale condemnation of the music-hall.

On the other hand, "Charles E. Medlicott," formerly a writer for the theatrical press, emphatically states that indecent language and gesture are more or less common in London music-halls. "A Student," who was for some time a "song and dance artiste," says he has known leading performers whose whole reputation was built on "a heap of filthy songs and patter." He has heard Scripture quoted to serve a vile purpose amid the applause of the audience. "Truth" tells of one music-hall in Edinburgh which is a "recognised market for the sale and barter of souls and bodies." As one who in former days knew the outs and ins of these "music-hells," he entreats young people to avoid them as they would avoid a colony of lepers.

Having sounded what we believe to be a much-needed warning note, we do not propose to prolong this discussion.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.—A member of the congregation of Holy Trinity, Richmond, Surrey, has lately been led to give up his business and offer himself for the Lord's work in the foreign field, at his own charges, in connection with the Church Missionary Society. Not being able to complete his arrangements so as to proceed at once, he has handed in a cheque for £100 towards the expenses of another labourer until he himself is able to engage in the work. How many others, who cannot go out themselves, might thus help to support their substitutes!—Life of Faith.

The Book World.

* Prices of books sent for review will be given if stated.

The Treasury of Scripture Knowledge is a work of genuine utility. It consists of five hundred thousand Scripture references and parallel passages, with numerous illustrative notes. Those who have few works of reference on Biblical subjects will find this book, with its several appendices, a library in itself. (5s. Bagster & Sons.)

Rest and Reaping, which is the organ of Miss Mason's Kilburn House of Rest, gives special attention to the unfolding of the prophetic Scriptures. Miss Mason continues in the current issue her interesting story of the rise and progress of the House of Rest, and finds in it many lessons helpful for the strengthening of the spiritual life. (1d. Morgan & Scott.)

Hazell & Son, Brewers. By Annie S. Swann. 2s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. This story tells the history of a brewer's family. The father and one son are almost ruined by the drink, through the sale of which they live in luxury; but they are eventually saved through the love and patience of the daughter and sister. The tale is admirably written, and the interest is well sustained throughout.

The Threefold Course; or, The Christian's Walk, Work, and Warfare. By Rev. Francis Bourdillon, M.A. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. This is vol. x. of the series of "Companions for a Quiet Hour." While it contains nothing that is specially fresh or deep, it will prove a help to many. Its earnestness, and the practical application of simple truth to the every-day needs of the average Christian, to be seen in every page, commend it as a useful book.

Our Own Picture Book. By Emma Marshall. 3s. 6d. Nisbet. Another capital volume from the pen of a distinguished literary benefactor of the young. A picture and a story is the order all through, and the topics are so various that little ones in general will find much to please as well as instruct them. The pictures are very attractive, and the letterpress simple, so that the lessons conveyed are likely to be both appreciated and remembered.

Rev. Thomas Champness has prepared three neat pamphlets—"The Sufferer's Bible" (2d.); "The Old People's Bible" (2d.); and "The Young Man's Bible" (1d.). Each contains passages carefully collated from the Scriptures, having special reference to the class indicated, and forms a valuable body of teaching and counsel. Those who will be at the trouble to commit the passages to memory will be certain to reap immense benefit. The little books can be had of Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co., 9, Paternoster-row.

The Encyclopædic Dictionary, which is still coming out in shilling monthly parts, is a work of great value. The origin, meaning, pronunciation, history, and use of words are given in great detail, and, in addition to many artistic illustrations, there is throughout much information—such as is not usually found in dictionaries. The November part carries the undertaking as far as the word "prepollence." Messrs. Cassell & Co. are to be congratulated upon the production of so complete and reliable a work of reference.

The Biblical Treasury of Expositions and Illustrations. This is a new edition of the ninth volume of a very excellent work, prepared specially to meet the needs of Sunday-school teachers and Bible students. The book contains notes illustrative of the Old Testament, from Job to Malachi, as well as a valuable appendix, which will be welcome to all who possess the earlier volumes. The compiler has been very judicious in the selection of notes from a wide field of literature, and the book is a very useful one indeed. (2s. Sunday-school Union.)

One Body: the Story of the Church of England By Rev. J. R. Turnock, M.A., Canon of Norwich. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co. The work of a thoughtful High Churchman, who sees the errors of Laud, but does not appreciate the work of Wicliff. He glories in the Church's ecclesiastical independence of Rome, but thinks little of her evangelical principles. Of course he holds Apostolical succession. Episcopacy is, in his opinion, essential to the Church of Christ, which is, according to him, a visible corporation. These grave errors vitiate an able and interesting book.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have commenced the weekly halfpenny issue of the Bible with Doré's illustrations.

A Lay of Two Cities. By Jeshareloh. 2s. Passmore & Alabaster. Thoughts in verse on Babylon, literal and spiritual, and Jerusalem that is above. Nothing very original, but much that is profitable and evangelical.

A Manual of Christian Baptism. By Joseph Agar Beet. 1s. Hodder & Stoughton. This is an amended and enlarged reprint of papers which appeared a few months ago in The British Weekly. That the institution was originally a divinely appointed means of confessing personal faith in Christ is fully admitted; but, by a course of reasoning, ably conducted, the author endeavours to justify the administration of the rite to infants, who are incapable of exercising personal faith. We do not expect to hear of any who have hitherto contended for believers' baptism finding in this book a single reason for baptizing children, or any persons who do not first "repent and believe the Gospel."

The Last Journals of Bishop Hannington. Edited by E. C. Dawson. Seeley & Co. This volume, which possesses a most pathetic interest, contains narratives of the late Bishop's journey through Palestine in 1884, and through Masailand and U-Soga in 1885. When the well-known "Life" was written, the diaries had not been recovered. They now tell their own tale, in terms grave and gay, but towards the last very grave, though the saddest portions of all are relieved by brave demonstrations of faith in God. The martyred Bishop showed his true manliness in adversity, as he ever showed his Christian gentleness in happier circumstances. Some illustrations from the Bishop's own sketches add much to the attractiveness of the book.

Christ and his People. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. This book contains thirteen addresses and sermons, reprinted from The Record. The Bishop of Liverpool, the Dean of Ripon, the Archdeacon of Southwark, Canon Hoare, Prebendary Edmonds, Revs. H. C. G. Moule, Sir Emilius Laurie, J. W. Bardsley, and George Everard are the authors, and their names are a sufficient recommendation of the book. The title, also, is appropriate to the subjects dealt with, and more timely and important subjects could not have been chosen. Evangelical truth is clearly expounded and defended, on the one hand from the broad theologians, and on the other from the advanced Ritualists. We rejoice that the Established Church of England possesses men so true to the Word of God, and so able and fearless in declaring its teachings.

Beyond the Stars. By Thos. Hamilton, D.D. 5s. T. & T. Clark. This is a moderately successful attempt "to tell in plain and popular language all that can be gathered from the Bible" about heaven—its inhabitants, and occupations, and life. It is devout in spirit, but not remarkable either for depth or originality of thought. Upon some of the themes dealt with Scripture has not much to say, so the author calls sentiment to his aid, by no means to the advantage of the book. The chapter on "The Little Ones in Heaven" reads like an attempt to show, first, the advantages that children of believers have over those of unbelievers; then, to prove to a demonstration that no such advantages exist! Those who are in the covenant by reason of their Christian parentage are saved; infants who are not thus born into the covenant are saved also. Q. Of what value then is the covenant? This chapter spoils an otherwise useful and interesting book.

From Poverty to Plenty. By W. L. Rees. Wyman & Sons. We perused this bulky and somewhat discursive book with keen anticipation, only to find, however, that the author, like many who have preceded him, is better able to state the painful facts of nineteenth century civilisation than to suggest common sense and practical methods of bringing about a satisfactory state of things. It is gratifying to find in Mr. Rees an able opponent of the doctrines of Malthus, which, despite their inhumanity and inherent fallaciousness, have recently been strongly advocated by statesmen and others who ought to have known better. The author also considers the modern dictum of the political economist that "God sends millions of mouths for which no food is provided," as not only a contemptible and ridiculous error, but a blasphemous untruth. With half our land untilled and unused, and with our vast colonial empire but very sparsely populated, and with the means and the power of almost indefinite extension before us, we may assume that if the social problem is assuming terrible importance it is only because we are not making use of the means which God has afforded us as a nation.

CHRISTMAS CARDS, &c.

These popular souvenirs herald the near approach of the Advent season. An exceedingly attractive parcel comes from Messrs. Hildesheimer & Faulkner, Jewin-street, E.C. For gracefulness and originality of conception, with artistic skill in execution, they would be hard to excel. They are of all sorts, sizes, and styles—sentimental, humorous, picturesque, religious, &c. There are some very choice illustrated books and booklets. Sunbeams, by F. E. Weatherley, charmingly illustrated (6s.), is a splendid gift-book for children; and so is Nursery Land, by the same popular author (3s. 6d.). The Good Shepherd (2s.) is excellent for Christmas. We are sorry that the exquisite illustrations of "Here's to the Maiden" should be wedded to a drinking song. Some shilling booklets, by Mr. Weatherly and others are exceedingly pretty; one of the most delicate and suggestive being "The Honeymoon." There is an almost endless variety of general designs and mottos; among the names of the artists Alice West, D. B. Sigmund, and G. G. Fraser are deservedly prominent. The "Photographic Opals" are also worthy of special mention as real works of art.

An excellent selection of this kind of literature is published by Mr. J. E. Hawkins, Paternoster-row. For those who prefer cards with a distinctly religious bearing, wedded to artistic quality, his are highly to be commended. Among his chastely illustrated booklets are Songs of the Ransomed (5s.), by W. Garratt and others—among the "others" being Dr. H. Bonar; Under his Shadow (3s. 6d.); and Serving the King (2s. 6d.), by Cecilia Havergal and others. All these contain verses that breathe sweet and hopeful thoughts, couched in rhythmic phrase. The Mildmay series of cards well sustain their reputation for beauty and general attractiveness; friends should send to Mr. Hawkins for a catalogue.

The Christmas issues of The Religious Tract Society are varied in subject and refined in character. The verses are by such well-known writers as Frederick Langbridge, Charlotte Elliot, Mrs. O. F. Walton, and others, while the landscapes and other artistic accompaniments are up to the modern mark.

Mr. C. Caswell, of Birmingham, has published several pretty poems by Mrs. Gorges, whose pleasing verses have frequently graced our columns. Your Heavenly Father Knoweth (8d.) is an illuminated booklet; the lines are full of confident trust in the wisdom and love of God. "A New Year's Wish," "Hitherto," and "Who teacheth like Him?" convey helpful thoughts for the New year. Thoughts on Peace (1d.) is a little New Year's tract, in which are embodied many comforting reflections.

A varied selection of cards, printed letters, and seasonable Gospel papers are published by Messrs. Hazell, Watson & Viney, Limited, Hatton Garden, E.C., on behalf of the Christmas Letter Mission.

Mrs. Grimke's Text Cards are appreciated all over the world as meeting an important need in evangelisation. Among recent issues are some attractive designs setting forth Light and Life, Faith, and other facts and aspects of Gospel truth. Some Hebrew cards, for distribution among Jews, are very creditably produced. Mrs. Grimke's address has been altered, and all future communications should be sent to her at Wellington House, Higher Broughton, Manchester.

ABERGAVENNY.—The annual meeting of the South Wales District Union of Y.M.C.A. was held here on November 1. Delegates from Swansea, Cardiff, Newport, and Abergavenny gave encouraging reports. At a public meeting addresses were delivered by Messrs. Pratt, Fennell, Baker, and Fawckner, of Newport; Mr. Hobson, of Cardiff; and Mr. Nichølls, of Swansea.

"CORNERS."—It would be easy enough to moralise at length upon the recent wheat panic whereby a certain speculator in Chicago enriched himself to the extent of three or four millions of dollars. But the story is an old one, and will continue to be repeated, we suppose, as long as greed and selfishness are among the principles that rule in the business world. It is, of course, a matter of no importance to those engaged in making "corners" and working up panics in the markets, that such operations redound in every instance to the injury of the poor and the consuming classes. We live in hope that the time will come when both law and public sentiment will combine in declaring that these things shall not be.—New York Independent.

HELPING ONE ANOTHER.

JOSH. xxi. 43—45; xxii. 1—9. GOLDEN TEXT: Gal. vi. 2.

THESE words were probably spoken in Shiloh (xxii. , and xviii. 1), whither the Tabernacle had been carried, and where it remained during the times of the Judges. Shiloh lay in Ephraim, "17 miles north of Jerusalem, midway between Bethel and Shechem, being 9 or 10 miles from each. Its modern name is Seilun.

EXPLANATION.

THE LORD GAVE UNTO ISRAEL ALL THE LAND WHICH HE SWARE TO GIVE UNTO THEIR FATHERS, &c. (43—45).—The land actually promised (Gen. xv. 18; Numb. xxxiv. 1—12; and Josh. i. 4) extended from the river of Egypt to Lebanon, and from the Euphrates to the Mediterranean. Now it was not till the days of David and Solomon that Israel governed the whole of this territory; and even some of it was only tributary to, and not actually possessed by, Israel. Further, we know from Judges i. 21, 36, that even within the territory conquered by Joshua, and allotted to the several tribes, there were several cities that were still held by the Canaanites. How are these facts to be reconciled with our lesson? Answer: God had fulfilled his promise. He had led them into the land, and had broken the power of the foe, so that they could no more meet Israel in open war. What Canaanites remained were discouraged and broken, clinging to isolated forts, and surrounded by victorious Israelites. So much was the land possessed that it was actually apportioned to the several tribes, whose duty it was, step by step, to possess themselves fully and actually of every spot within their borders. This would have been done easily and swiftly if the several tribes had not failed in zeal and faith. "God gave the whole to them," says Peloubet, "and they could have had actual possession at any time if they had done their part. It is as if a father had deeded a farm to his son, given a perfect title and full possession; but the son was idle and permitted a part of the land to go to weeds. Still the gift was perfect, and the son lived on the farm." Again, the conquest of Canaan was a completed work as far as God's part and purpose were concerned; just as in the New Testament the triumph of the individual Christian, and of the Christian Church, is often spoken of as accomplished in view of the Divine will that it should be so, and of Divine grace that it may be so (see Sp. Com.). Once more, it is very important to notice the distinction between general possession of the land and total annihilation of its ancient inhabitants. While it was God's purpose to give them victory in every battle, and a swift conquest of the whole country, He says distinctly that it was not his purpose to destroy totally and at once all the native inhabitants (Exod. xxiii. 29, Deut. vii. 22). This was to be done "little by little," according both to Israel's faith and to her increasing needs.

The tribes of Israel failed to rise to the height of God's purpose and their privilege; they were "slack to go to possess the land" (Josh. xviii. 3), and almost all the subsequent history of their sin, defeat, and sorrow is to be traced to this early neglect of theirs. A thousand years of wrongdoing and suffering might have been saved, had they been zealous and bold enough in God to make a thorough conquest at the first. Teachers of advanced classes will know how to apply this to young Christians.

LESSONS.

(1) God's Faithfulness to his Word (43—45).—"There failed not ought...all came to pass." His promises were fulfilled to the uttermost, except when Israel's failure in obedience and faith interfered. He was ready to give them complete possession of every post held by the enemy. They had but to challenge his help by marching against the enemy in the name of the Lord. He was waiting only for this to deliver it to them. Therefore, any failure whatever to possess the strongholds of the Canaanites was entirely due to Israel's want of trust or zeal. Just so, God is pledged to give his people victory over every form of sin in the heart. They must challenge his help, by attacking the sin boldly in his name; but when they fail to attack it, or do so without a bold faith in his promised help. He is no longer pledged to deliver.

Illustration of God's Faithfulness.—Frederick the Great tried one day to put his chaplain in a difficulty by asking him suddenly to give him at once, and in a word, a proof of the truth of God's Word. "The Jews, sire," was the good man's ready answer. It is said that the King was greatly struck with it. He knew how miraculously God had kept, and still keeps, his people, both preserving them and punishing them exactly as He said He would in Deut. xxviii. and elsewhere.

(2) Faithfulness to one another (1—4).—"Ye have not left your brethren these many days," i.e., some seven years or more. All this time their own lands on the east side of Jordan were secure in the possession of their families and fellow tribesmen; yet they fight in the conquest of Canaan as earnestly as if they were to possess it. This was according to command (Num. xxxii. 6, 7, 16, 17). Their faithful service was marked by: (1) Obedience to orders (ver. 2).—The first duty of those under authority is obedience: conscientious, thorough, and cheerful. These did not slacken in obedience because they were fighting for others. They obeyed Joshua in all things, just as though they were doing it for their own pleasure and profit. If we promise to serve God or his people, we should be just as faithful to do and to obey as we should if we were working for hire. (2) Brotherly kindness.—"Ye have not left your brethren," &c. They fought on for them till they saw them well settled in their possessions. "Bear ye one another's burders, and so fulfil the law of Christ." (3) Concern for God's law.—They "kept the charge of the commandment of the Lord." Thus they were faithful to their brethren, because faithful to God.

(3) Faithfulness to God.—Solemnly enjoined (ver. 5). Notice how "the expressions are remarkably varied and accumulated, to show, in the most forcible manner, the unspeakable importance to every child of man of a life of devoted obedience." "Love the Lord." Love is the heart of true religion. "Cleave unto Him." Nearness to God their only safety. "Abide in Me." "Serve Him with all your heart." Not with half-heartedness. "Seek first the kingdom of God."

(4) Faithfulness rewarded (6—9).—(1) With Joshua's blessing. So the great reward of faithful service is the Master's "Well done!" (2) "Much riches." They were well paid. God's servants always are. He allows no man to be in his debt. "Seek first the kingdom, and all other things shall be added."

Appeals.

George-street Mission (Prince's-road, Lambeth-walk, S.E.).—An effort is being made to raise a substantial sum for distribution among the needy and deserving sick and poor, principally in the form of food, clothing, and coals during the winter months. Contributions will be acknowledged by Dr. OSWALD, 245, Kennington-road, S.E.

Mission Hall, Fraser-street, Chiswick.—After renovation and repairs, this building was recently reopened, burdened with a debt of £45. The numerous agencies have been much blessed, and the cause of the Mission is commended to public support by many local workers. Contributions will be gratefully acknowledged by Mr. R. T. SMITH, evangelist, 13, Barrowgate-road, Chiswick.

Work among Jews in Rome.—The magic lantern provided to help the work of the London Jews' Society in Rome has been largely used, and to good purpose. It is very desirable that the stock of subjects should be now increased by the purchase of new slides. Mrs. K. E. BURCHAELL adds that about £10 is also required to provide benches and other appliances for the night school. Contributions may be sent to the Society, 16, Lincoln's Inn-fields, W.C.

East London.—Rev. W. KNIGHT CHAPLIN, pastor of the Poplar and Bromley Tabernacle, Brunswick-road, E., writes, in view of the distress consequent upon the approach of winter:—"Pathetic appeals reach us every day for that kind of help which results in permanent benefit, such as the redemption of tools from pawn, keeping up club payments while the bread-winner is out of work, and so on. We have a devoted band of voluntary workers; we should, however, be glad to communicate with Christian ladies willing to visit among the poor."

A Plea for the Little Ones.—In 1882 we opened a day nursery in our district. A rich congregation in Kensington at first supplied us with funds, but owing to the clergyman being removed, and his successor not having the work at heart, this help was discontinued. The attendances for the past six years have been 16,806, and the average for the week last year sixty-four. Unless we can obtain £30 within a month our nursery must be closed; the debt is already £20.—(Mrs.) M. STAPLETON, lady superintendent, 8, Rackham-street, North Kensington, W.

Sunday Afternoon, November 18.

THE PHARISEE AND THE PUBLICAN—LIKE, BUT UNLIKE.—LUKE xviii. 9—14.

SEE here the story of Cain and Abel reproduced in a parable. In some lives we see both the Pharisee and the Publican. See that of Saul of Tarsus. He once had the spirit of the Pharisee (Phil. iii. 5), and afterwards that of the Publican (Titus iii. 5). Note:—

(1) THE PERSONS.—The Pharisee and the Publican had much in common; both were men, both were sinners, both had instincts which impelled them to pray, both went to the same house of prayer. Yet how different were their conditions in the most important particulars! In the Pharisee was a sense of superiority, and in the Publican a sense of need. For the character of the Pharisees, see Rom. x. 3; of the Publicans, Luke v. 27, Luke xix. 3.

(2) THE PLACE.—"The Temple." The right place. Called "the house of prayer" (Matt. xxi. 13). See Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the Temple for those who would seek the forgiveness of sins in the Temple (1 Kings viii. 35, 36). Note the relation of prayer to the sacrifice on the altar (1 Kings viii. 31).

(3) THE PURPOSE.—"To pray." There is an instinct which is almost universal, by which men are impelled to pray. All instincts of which we have any knowledge have something to answer to them. The swallow flies to the south, and finds there is a south to fly to. The new-born babe gropes blindly for the nutriment it requires, and finds that nutriment in the milk of its mother's breast. Can we suppose that prayer is the solitary instinct that is without anything to answer to it?

(4) THE POSTURES.—"Pharisee stood." An air of self-satisfaction may be seen in his attitude. "He felt," says Guthrie, "there was nothing in all the azure sky above him more holy than himself." "The Publican stood afar off." Possibly as far as possible from the holy place, to express the sense he had of the distance of his soul from God (Luke xvii. 13; Eph. ii. 13). His downcast eyes were the index of his downcast soul. Note how the Lord Jesus bowed his head when human guilt was laid upon Him (John xix. 30). Since then He has drunk of the brook of the Divine favour, and "therefore shall He lift up his head" (Ps. cx. 7). Though the Publican couldn't look up to the Lord, the Lord looked down upon him (Isa. lxvi. 2). "Smote breast." "So," says one, "he would have smitten his sins could he have got at them."

(5) THE PRAYERS.—The Pharisee used forty-three words, but offered no prayer. "He asked for nothing," says Mr. Moody, "and he got nothing." The Publican's prayer was short, well directed, expressive, and personal. "A sinner." Greek, "the sinner." The Pharisee thanked God he was not as all other men are (see Revised Version). He believed in universal depravity with one exception, and that was himself. While he felt he was better than all other men, the Publican felt he was worse than all other men—he was pre-eminently "the sinner." "Be merciful" might be rendered be propitiated. He doubtless looked towards the sacrifices, and believed that in the suffering of the innocent God provided a way for clearing the guilty (Comp. "He is the propitiation," 1 John ii. 2, and iv. 10).

(6) THE PREFERENCE.—"Rather than the other." The last was first and the first last. To be justified is to be accounted righteous (Rom. iv. 5). The Publican took the blessing home with him ("Went down to his house justified"), and all who will humble themselves as the Publican did may have the same blessing.

MERCHANT SEAMEN.—For the last fourteen years letters written by the late Mrs. Best, and continued by her daughter, Mrs. Jeffery, to merchant seamen, have been issued to the extent of from five to eight thousand monthly. Many letters have been received telling of the usefulness of the work. The end of the year finds Mrs. Jeffery in debt nearly £10. The letters are distributed by chaplains, missionaries, captains of vessels, and friends. Copies are sent by the author to the lighthouses and lightships. But 5500 letters (the number now issued) are very few among the many thousands of sailors. Mrs. Jeffery's address is 15, Lansdowne-avenue, Leamington.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The annual gathering of evangelical ministers, known as the Islington Clerical Meeting, is to be held in the Memorial Hall, Church-street, N., on Tuesday, January 15, 1889.

An effort is to be made at Bideford, in the diocese of Exeter, to reach the working classes by means of services conducted chiefly by one of their own station. A new mission-room has just been opened there, and a working man has been licensed by the Bishop to minister in it.

The Bishop of Qu'Appelle, N.W. America, speaking at Bath the other day, said, that it was to the shame of the Church of England, but to the honour of other religious bodies, that when there are any new districts opened in our colonies, the latter are always in the field first.

An eight-days' mission was concluded on Sunday week at Christ Church, Staleybridge. The parish consists almost entirely of the poorer working classes. The missioner was Rev. Edward Hicks, vicar of St. Stephen's, Sheffield. Signs of an abiding result are thankfully welcomed.

The Archbishop of York has received a gift of £20,000 from Mrs. Charles Turner, of Liverpool, and Ferriby, Yorkshire, for the formation of a fund for pensioning incumbents belonging to his diocese who feel themselves incapacitated from work. A similar gift has been made by Mrs. Turner to the Liverpool diocese.

An interesting service was held at Ravensthorpe, Yorkshire, recently. All those persons who had been seriously ill during the preceding twelve months, and had recovered, assembled to return thanks to God. About thirty were present, together with a number of friends. It is expected the service will become an annual institution.

Dr. Sandford, Bishop of Tasmania, has accepted the post of coadjutor to the Bishop of Durham, and will shortly leave for England. Rev. J. T. Hayes, vicar of St. Margaret's, Leicester, has accepted the bishopric of Trinidad.—Dr. G. H. Sumner, Archdeacon of Winchester, has been appointed Suffragan-Bishop of Guildford, in the diocese of Winchester.

Mission work progresses in the East-end of London. An evangelistic committee under Bishop Billing has been formed in connection with Whitechapel Church, and an officer of the Church Army has been elected the general superintendent. The open-air pulpit of Whitechapel Church will be its centre, and the promoters look forward to an extension of its operations over the whole of the East-end.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The fourth anniversary of Rev. T. Grear's settlement at Bishopsgate Chapel, London, E.C., was celebrated last week. The present membership of the church is 245; 148 members have been added during Mr. Grear's ministry.

Memorial stones have been laid of a lecture-hall and Sunday-school in course of erection by the West Kensington Church. The hall will be capable of seating 500 adults. Rev. Alfred Norris (pastor) states that the lecture-hall will be useful not only for the comparatively private purposes of the church, but also in providing, as he trusts it will do in many ways, for the good of the neighbourhood.

Rev. George Lord completed twenty-five years of pastoral work at Stanley Congregational Church, Liverpool, on Sunday week. During this period Mr. Lord has laboured with great devotion, and has been instrumental in winning many souls for Christ. The present membership of the church is 390; during Mr. Lord's pastorate over nine hundred persons have been received into fellowship. There are many agencies for carrying on Christian work in connection with the church.

BAPTIST.

A series of special devotional and evangelistic services have been held at Burlington Chapel, Ipswich. The services have been felt to be seasons of refreshing from the Lord.

A Stowell-Brown Guild has been formed in connection with Myrtle-street Chapel, Liverpool. The Guild has literary, choral, Biblical, and recreative sections, and one meeting is held each week, promoted in turn by the different sections.

Two generous gifts have lately been made by anonymous friends to the Baptist Missionary Society, one of £1959 to the Zenana Mission, and another of £2297 to the general work. Since the appeal made by the directors for reinforcements for the Congo Mission, a large number of offers of service have been received from earnest young men.

Although many efforts have been put forth, it has not been possible to clear the Chase-road Baptist Chapel, Southgate, N., of the debt encumbering it. As soon as £125 is at hand, the problem will be solved, for Mr. Spurgeon has promised then to give a like sum, and liquidate the debt. A good work seems to be going on under the pastorate of Mr. Wickerson.

"The Closer Fellowship of the Churches" was the subject of a conference held last week, at King-street Chapel, Bristol, in connection with the Ministers' and Deacons' Association of Bristol Baptist Churches. A paper was read by Rev. Dr. Culross. After the discussion there was a communion service. On the previous day the Baptist ministers in the city had exchanged pulpits.

SALVATION ARMY.

A large number came to the penitent form last Sunday evening at Well-street, Hackney, where Major Musai Bhai sang and pleaded pathetically.

Before the prosecutions at Bungay there used to be about fifty or sixty in the marches, now it is not unusual to have hundreds, and on one occasion over a thousand.

At Barnstaple they have had two penitents who, between them, have spent 115 years in wretchedness and sin. West Brighton reports nineteen penitents in a half-week's special services.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The congregational committee of Regent-square Church, London, have recommended the congregation to call Rev. John McNeill, of Edinburgh, to the pastorate of the church.

A ten-days' Gospel mission has been held in connection with the Church at Birmingham. There is reason to believe that the services have been the means of great spiritual blessing to many who have attended them, both old and young.

The Presbyterian Messenger asks why the London Mission Committee should not approach every other branch of the Presbyterian Church and secure a harmonious union in a representative Presbyterian London Mission? Let these churches aid with prayer, means, and men. Such a united effort would tell on London and on the world.

Rev. Z. B. Woffendale has been conducting a fortnight's special evangelistic services at the King's cross Theatre, and in the Somers Town Presbyterian Church, assisted by several office-bearers and ministers. A remarkable wave of blessing has accompanied the whole of the services. At the closing meeting on Wednesday last week forty-seven persons expressed their desire to join other churches, and ninety-three gave in their names as candidates for membership of Somers Town Church.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The labours of Western Yearly Meeting Friends have gathered in 329 Indians among their membership.

Interesting accounts of work in Constantinople, and among the Zulu-Kaffirs of Natal, are published in The Friend.

Dr. Basbara and Maria Feltham have had a most hearty and almost overwhelming welcome home again to their Mount Lebanon work and friends.

Henrietta Deane has reached Antananarivo, and has been gladly welcomed by the missionaries there; more girls come to school than they can accommodate.

William V. Whright and wife, of Canada, have arrived in Tokyo, Japan, and are now with Joseph Cosand, whose missionary labours have been much blessed.

The subject of Foreign Missions is claiming wide attention among the quarterly meetings, as it is felt that annual subscriptions, not only to sustain, but to extend the work, are indispensable.

The Hobart Friends' School, which English Friends have done so much to help, is doing very well, and is exciting the grateful admiration of the Colonists. Samuel Clewes is head master.

The Friends purpose starting a new "High class School" for boys, and towards this object one Friend offers the munificent gift of £5000, on condition that £15,000 more can be raised by donations or shares.

METHODIST.

A valedictory service was held last week at St. John's-square Chapel, Clerkenwell, to bid farewell to Revs. J. Cooling, G. M'Kenzie Cobban, and G. W. Sawday, who are returning to their work in India.

The Primitive Methodist Missionary Committee have invited Rev. H. Buckenham, of Burton-on-Trent, to undertake the leadership of the new mission to the Barotsé country, in Central Africa. Mr. Buckenham has already had two periods of African service.

An all-day convention for the deepening of the spiritual life, under the auspices of the Methodist New Connexion Evangelistic Union, has been held in Newcastle-under-Lyme. At the close of the day, after an address on "The Call to Holiness," many in the audience expressed their desire for full consecration.

The Wesleyan Foreign Mission Committee have issued a circular urging ministers to invite the Methodist people to make special Christmas-day family offerings in aid of the work of God among the heathen. It is desired to raise at least £10,000 by this means. The proposal has been very warmly received.

The services at the Great Bridgewater-street Wesleyan Chapel, Manchester, continue to attract large crowds of people. The new departure is proving a great power for good in the district. Many notorious persons have found the Saviour. Women without bonnets or shawls are frequently found forming part of the congregation.

Rev. Thomas Cook has concluded a mission at Barrow-in-Furness. The chapel has been too small for the crowds attracted by the mission preacher, and again, says The Methodist Times, it has been demonstrated that nothing tends so much to draw people to the house of God as earnest evangelism. On Sunday about fifty adults gave public testimony of their having decided to live the Christian life.

At a Home Mission Conference held in King-street Wesleyan Church, Plymouth, Rev. J. S. Pawlyn said, that while being perfectly loyal to the foreign mission work of the Church, he felt there were supreme reasons why there should be greater activity in the missions to the heathen at home. They have in their very midst, there in the town of Plymouth, ignorance as dense, immorality as shocking, and crime as bad, in proportion, as exists in London, and such as might be found prevailing among the worst of pagan nations.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Society for Providing Nurses for the Sick Poor doing an excellent work in Belfast.

A society has been organised in Belfast for the purpos of sending missionaries to Qua Iboe, South West Cou of Africa; already two missionaries are at work in th field.

Helpful evangelistic meetings were held last week the Presbyterian Church, Banbridge, by Rev. Dr. Stuar of Londonderry; similar meetings were held the pr ceding week in Newry.

Gospel meetings have been held in the Methodi Church, Maryborough, by Rev. James Kirkwood an Rev. F. A. Trotter. Several persons are believed have been led to Christ. Similar meetings were he last week in the Methodist Church, Lisburn, by Rev. C. Johnson.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The annual meeting of the Carnoustie Y.M.C.A. w held on Monday week. The reports submitted showe that the Association is progressing.

Rev. Dr. Ritchie, of East U.P. Church, Duns, Forfa shire, recently celebrated his ministerial jubilee. Speci services were conducted by Principal Cairns.

A largely-attended meeting, on behalf of the McA Mission, was held in Montrose, last week. An auxiliar society has been established here for some years.

Evangelistic meetings have been held in the U. Churches in Hamilton; addressed by the Synod's dep ties; the attendance has been good, and the addresse edifying.

The Y.M.C.A., Pollokshaws, have concluded a week evangelistic meetings in the U.P. Church. The atten ance was not large, but there was manifest blessin every night.

Miss McMinn, of Edinburgh, is conducting evang listic meetings in the Congregational Church, Cambu lang. A deep interest has been shown, and a few hav professed decision for Christ.

The week of prayer for young men in the Glasgo Y.M.C.A. was well attended. There are 9000 young me connected with the Association throughout the city, an nearly 1200 attend the evening classes.

Rev. J. Smith, of Grimsby, has conducted a week evangelistic meetings in Keppach-hill Free Church His powerful addresses were much blessed, and som interesting cases of spiritual decision were met with.

Rev. Wm. Ross, of Glasgow, is engaged on a life the late Dr. MacLachlan Edinburgh. He was lon associated with Dr. MacLachlan in all matters affec ing the work of the Free Church in the Highlands an Islands.

Mr. Oscar Owers has conducted Gospel meetings in th Free Church, Bellshill. The attendance was not ver encouraging, considering the high order of the addresse We believe, however, that permanent good has bee accomplished.

The seventh annual meeting of the Scotch Division the Salvation Army was held on Monday week in th City Hall, Glasgow. There are at present 188 officers Scottish soil. Last year the houses visited by officers Scotland numbered 69,396; this year they numbere 96,121. Those who professed salvation this year nun bered 13,200.

Rev. John McNeill has been refused the further us of Newsome's Circus, Edinburgh, in consequence of sensational paragraph in an evening newspaper dilatin on the probable consequences of a fire taking place the building. The Edinburgh Town Council, has, how ever, most readily granted the use of the Waverl Market for Mr. McNeill's Sunday evening services. Th number present at the first service in the Market Sunday week was estimated at 10,000.

At a missionary service in Auchingramont Establishe Church, Rev. A. Hetherwick, of East Africa, gave a interesting account of the mission work at Blantyre, th place to which Livingstone so often turned, in the la years of his wanderings, as to his home. He remarke that Africa is not to be won by English missionarie but by native missionaries, and a native African Churc

Notices.

Can any of our readers inform us who is the author of the following lines?—

> "Thou high and lofty One, afar
> Beyond creation's fairest star,
> Inhabiting eternity—
> The lofty palace of the sky—
> Oh, am I not too low for Thee
> To visit, and to dwell with me?
> A still small whisper answers, 'No,
> His chosen dwelling is below;
> Within the contrite sinner's breast,
> Mid tears and sighs, He loves to rest.
> And they who tremble at his word
> In supplication shall be heard.'"

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

A great temperance demonstration is to be held in Edinburgh in January.

Kilrush, Ireland, has 4000 inhabitants, and eighty places for the sale of liquor.

Fifty-eight of the 180 resident working-men lodgers in the model lodging-house, Govan, Glasgow, have signed the pledge.

The London City Guardians have decided to give beer money to their abstaining officials, £3 to males, £2 to females, annually.

The papers read at the Church Congress on the subject of the liquor traffic in Africa have been printed in pamphlet form for gratuitous circulation, and can be obtained at 139, Palace-chambers, Bridge-street, Westminster, London, S.W.

A successful mission, conducted by Mr. George Blaiklock, from Hoxton Hall, London, was held in the Tynwald Hall, West Kirby, for five nights. This was Mr. Blaiklock's third visit to West Kirby, and the large and appreciative audiences have been much helped by his good work.

FOREIGN.

Owing to prohibition in Kansas immigrants of a high class are being attracted to that State.

In Russia, on the day on which the soldiers in the reserve have orders to present themselves at the barracks, all drink-places must be closed.

The work of Messrs. Moody and Murphy in Chicago last year resulted in the reclamation and conversion of many men of intemperate habits. A Central Gospel Temperance League was organised, and there are now twenty-eight leagues in Chicago and Cook County, with an estimated membership of five thousand. The basis of their work is the Gospel.

Mrs. Leavitt, the Round the World Missionary of the American W.C.T. Union, judges Ceylon to be the most prosperous mission field she has seen yet, except Japan and the Karen Mission in Burmah. Much more temperance work has been done in Ceylon than in most places in India. Bands of Hope are common, and some total abstinence societies of adult men exist.

FATHERLESS.—The Board of Managers of the ASYLUM for FATHERLESS CHILDREN, Reedham, Purley, Surrey, earnestly APPEAL for HELP to maintain and educate the 300 Children now under their care. These children have been admitted to the Asylum at ages varying from six months to eleven years, and will all be retained and cared for until 15 years of age.

The Institution is entirely Unsectarian, has no endowment, and is, therefore, dependent upon public benevolence for support.

The necessary expenditure averages £8,000 per annum, but the only reliable income—that from Annual Subscriptions—does not provide one-third of that amount, hence the necessity for this Appeal. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS will be most thankfully received. HENRY SPICER, Treasurer.

HOMES of HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE, GRAY'S-INN ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case if it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

The Committee are in very urgent need of £250.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY 12,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity. Hundreds of poor men have been gathered in, and their need supplied, while scores have been turned away, for want of room, in the most destitute condition.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm (not only cut off from the comforts of home, but at two days' distance from medical or surgical aid), may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

NINE Mission Vessels now cruise with the Trawling Fleets, each being at once a CHURCH, DISPENSARY, LIBRARY, and CLUB. Funds are required to provide a Mission Vessel for EVERY FLEET, and for the maintenance of the HOSPITAL MISSION SHIPS Queen Victoria and Albert. The urgent necessity of these floating Hospitals is shown by the fact that during last year nearly 4,000 cases of accident and sickness were successfully treated on board the Dispensary of the Mission Vessels. WHO WILL HELP? Large or small Offerings will be thankfully acknowledged.

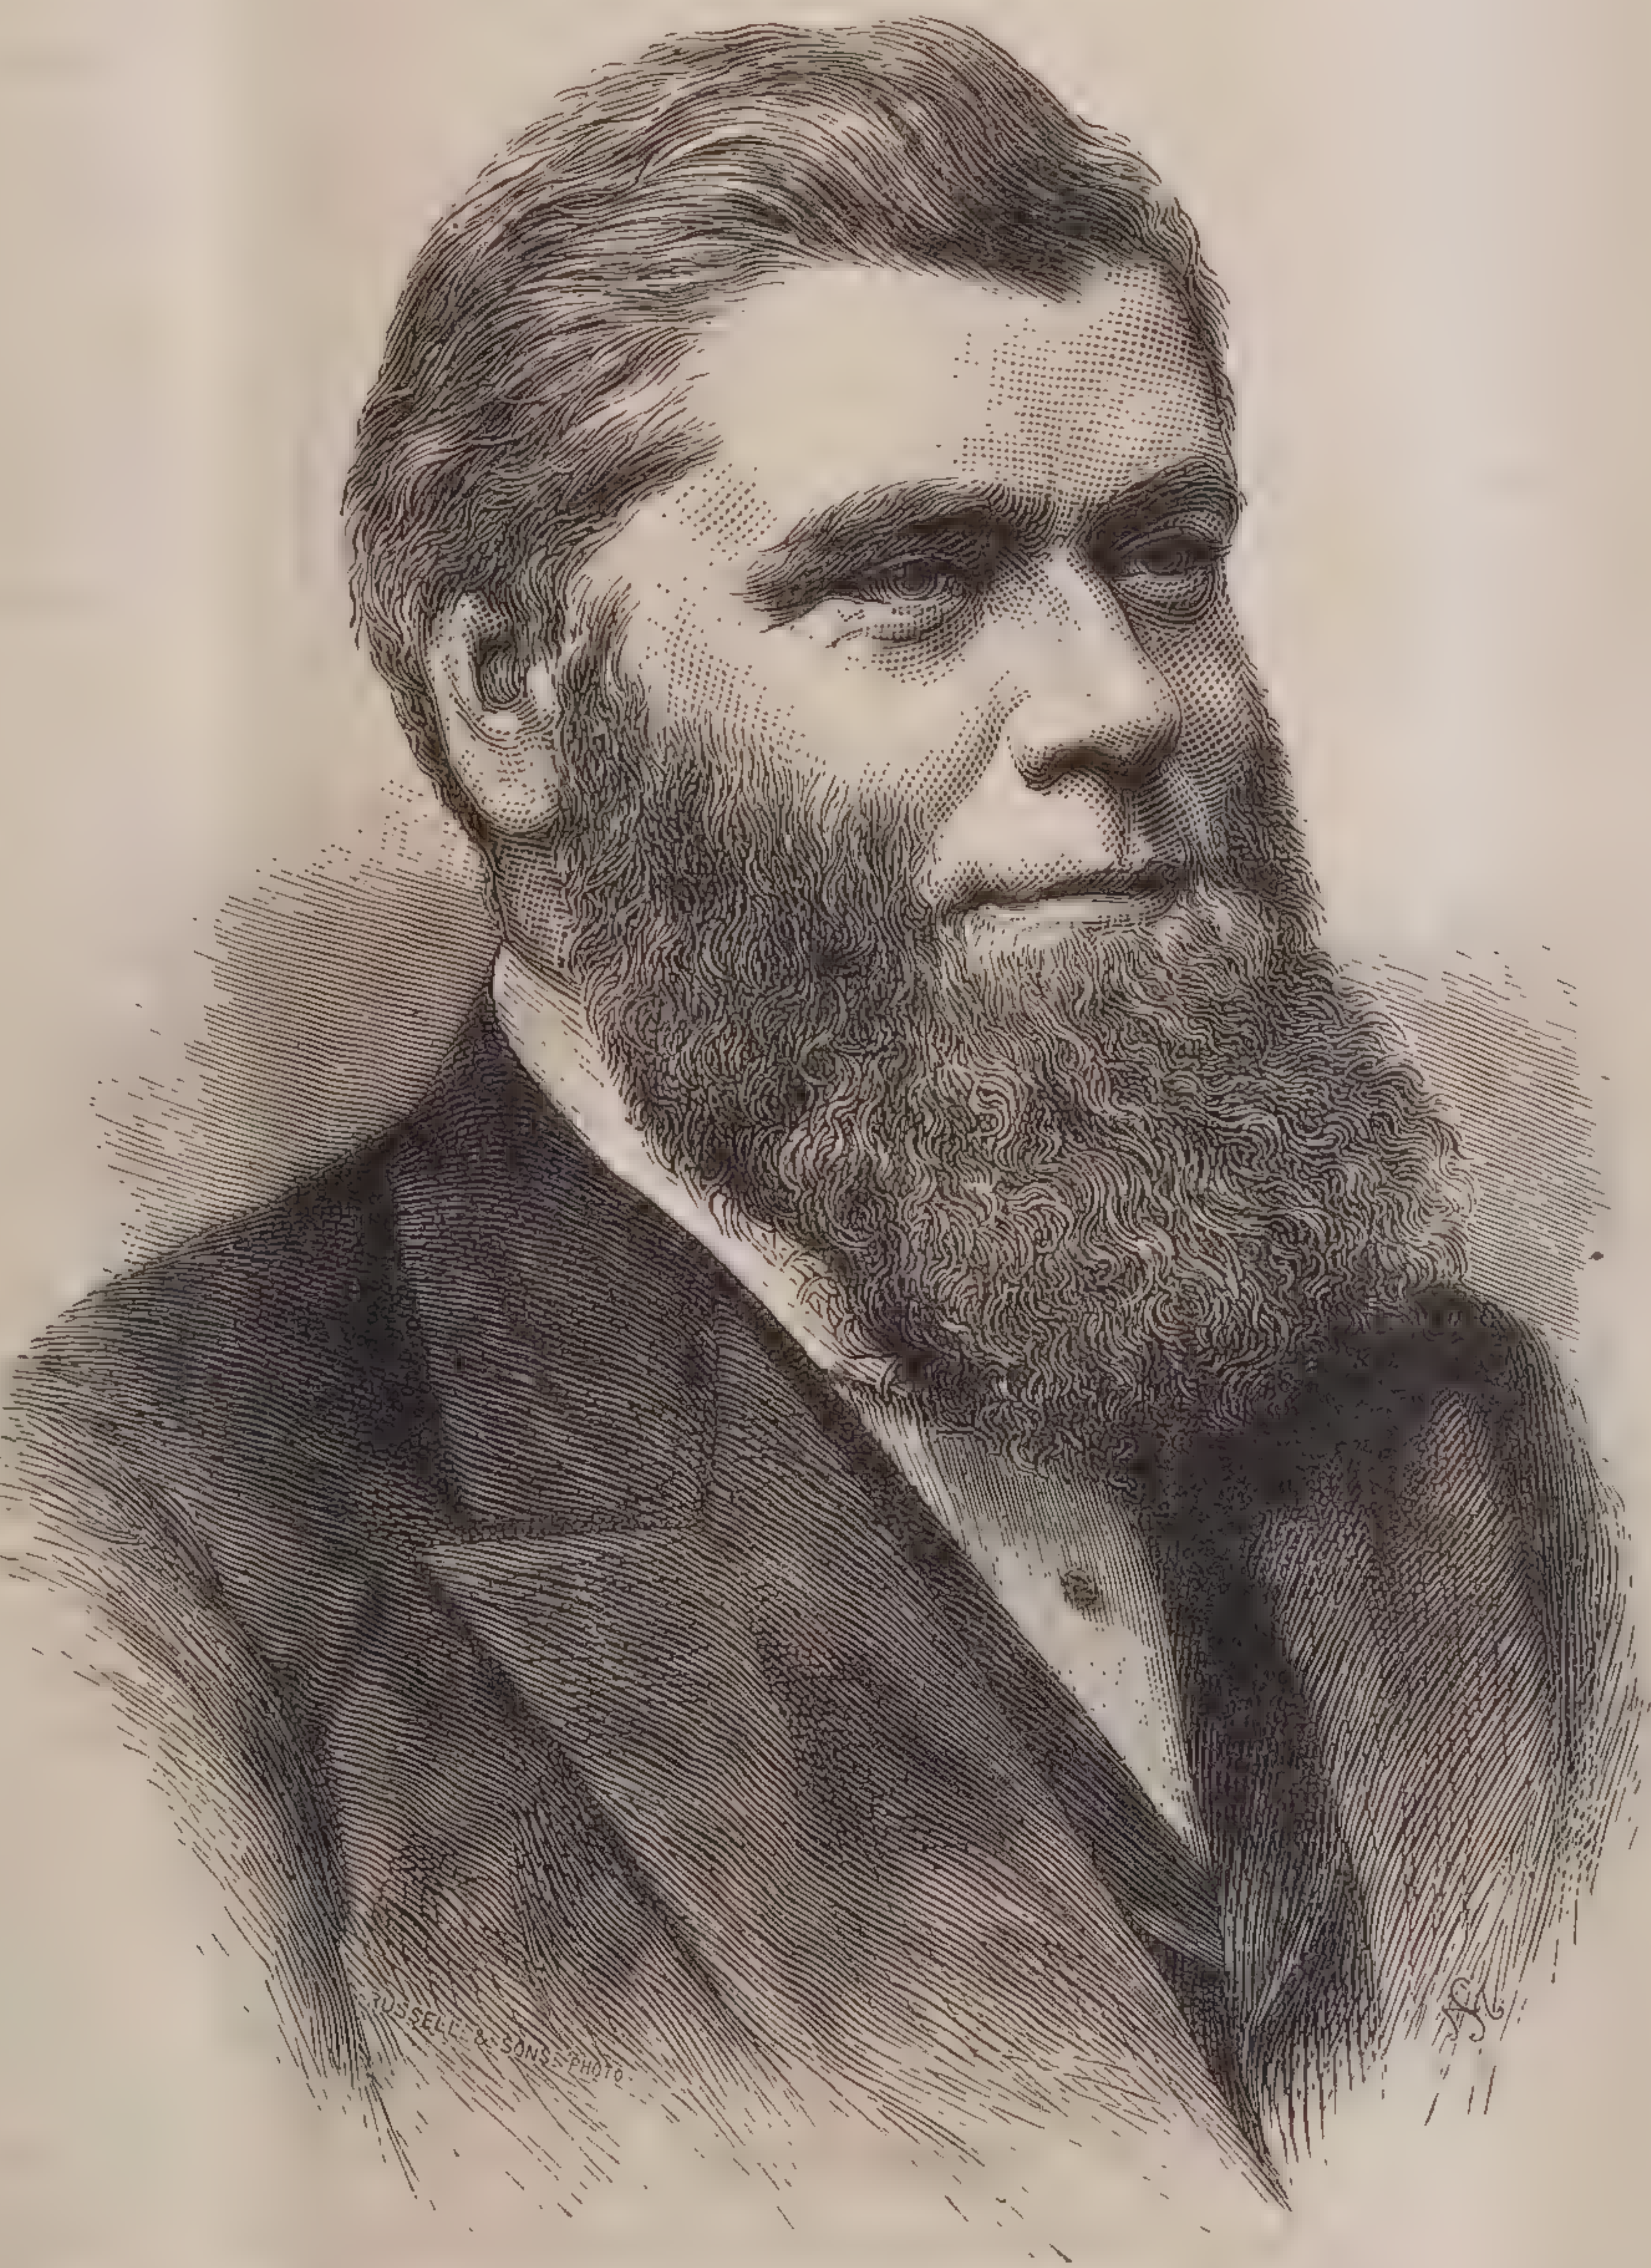
REV. J. MONRO GIBSON, D.D.,

Presbyterian Church, St. John's Wood, London, N.W.

OBJECTIONS have been raised to the length of the scholastic and theological curriculum in vogue among Presbyterians as needlessly barring the way to entrance on the Gospel ministry. Whatever force there may be in the objection as applied to evangelists pure and simple, it cannot be gainsaid that for those who are to fill long-continued pastorates over highly educated congregations the severe college course has undoubted advantages. It induces that solidity and thoroughness of intellectual equipment which are increasingly essential in this doubting and critical age. We could wish for no better specimen of the sort of preachers and pastors that Presbyterianism is fitted to produce, than the subject of this short sketch. Versed in all the learning and wisdom of the schools, Dr. MONRO GIBSON is well qualified to be an expounder of the holy oracles to even the most intelligent and exacting assembly of Christians. Scottish by birth and partly by training, he has that "grip" of fundamental truth which is popularly supposed to thrive on oatmeal and the two Catechisms. With a considerable experience of transatlantic ways and methods, he also possesses the "go" of our American cousins. In brief, he is what may be called, without eulogy or exaggeration, an admirable "all-round" man as a public exponent and exemplar of the Christian faith.



From Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons, London.)

We have stated that Dr. Gibson hails from Scotland, the cradle of modern Presbyterianism; he was born in Wigtonshire in 1838. He had scarcely finished his school-days at Brechin when his father emigrated to Canada as a missionary, settling at Owen Sound, Ontario. A year or two after his transition from the old hemisphere to the new, young Gibson entered Toronto University; he subsequently took up and completed his theological course in the Knox College of that model Canadian city. During his period of study in Knox College he also filled the positionof tutor in Greek.

On emerging from the classroom, he began public work by assisting Dr. Ormiston, of Hamilton (now of New York), who was at that time in somewhat strained health. It was rather a trying ordeal for the young graduate to preach to a congregation so well served, but he seems to have passed through it with credit. Being ordained in 1864, he was appointed colleague and successor to Dr. William Taylor, of Montreal; here he remained for the space of nine years, throwing all his culture and youthful energy into the work of the ministry. A fine new church was built, and the congregation became one of considerable repute for its missionary spirit and liberality to the various schemes of the Church. It is still, we believe, one of the most vigorous congregations in the city. During the term of his pastorate, Mr. Gibson filled for six years the responsible post of lecturer on Greek and Hebrew exegesis in the Montreal Theological College. His services were so highly appreciated that an effort was made to induce him to accept the professorial chair, but he preferred to abide in the ministerial calling he had chosen.

In 1874, Mr. Gibson accepted a hearty invitation to the pastorate of the Second Presbyterian Church in the "Garden City of the West," as Chicago is sometimes called; there he remained till 1880, when he removed to London. In such a go-ahead and wonderful community there was ample scope for all the pastor's gifts and earnest application to Christian work. The congregation over which he presided was an unusually influential one, socially considered—a sphere which has of course its advantages and disadvantages. Happily, Mr. Gibson had very much the same experience there as in Montreal. By God's help he was enabled to foster among his people a spirit of missionary zeal and open-handed support of all good causes.

We cannot in this brief review go into the varied details of the Chicago pastorate, but we must refer to a special and highly interesting feature of his career as a public teacher in that typical American city. He was one of those who cordially joined in the evangelistic endeavours of Mr. Moody in Chicago which are now a matter of world-wide knowledge and import. At the close of the Gospel campaign the evangelist, with his customary farsightedness, suggested to the committee that the movement should be developed into permanency through the institution of Sunday afternoon "Bible Talks," by some qualified and popularly gifted Scripture expositor. Mr. Moody suggested also that Dr. Gibson was a fitting man to undertake the duty. Though a very busy man, he accepted this additional burden imposed upon him, and continued the work for a number of years. The meetings were held in Farwell Hall under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, and were attended by large crowds; the audiences embraced the "classes" as well as the "masses." Many casual visitors to the city from distant places dropped into Farwell Hall, and carried away fresh ideas as to the Old Testament records. Some of these familiar talks on the early Scriptures have since been published in response to many urgent requests, in the volumes entitled, "The Ages before Moses," and "The Mosaic Era." Altogether, Dr. Gibson left a decided impress on the Christian society of Chicago, and many were the sincere regrets when he left it and recrossed the ocean to Old England.

His coming to the British Metropolis was due to an interesting chain of circumstances. He had paid a holiday visit to this country, and chanced, as we would say, to preach on one occasion in Mr. (now Professor) Elmslie's church, at Willesden. Dr. Drummond had vacated the pulpit of the St. John's Wood Church, and returned to Glasgow. Several of the congregation heard Dr. Gibson preach at Willesden, and an invitation was sent to him to become pastor of the church. He did not, however, see his way to accept the call, and went back to his post in Chicago. Quite unexpectedly the call was renewed some time later. The finger of providential circumstances seemed to point that way, and the doctor was induced, though reluctantly, to send an affirmative answer to the reiterated summons. For eight years or more he has ministered with growing acceptance at St. John's Wood, and if the ardent hopes of his flock are realised he will do so for many years to come. The church was filled from the first day of his ministry. The accommodation has been enlarged, and, though a colony has since gone off to form the now flourishing congregation of St. George's, Brondesbury, the sittings are not yet numerous enough to meet the demand. Under his tutelage the work of the church has grown apace in varied and multiplied forms. Special reference must be made to a flourishing mission effort at Kilburn. Before Dr. Drummond's departure this offshoot of the parent church had taken root; under Dr. Gibson's oversight it has become a goodly tree, bearing precious fruit for the healing of the people. We doubt if there is a more flourishing or a more vigorously sustained mission church in the wide sweep of the Metropolis.

Dr. Gibson's services are in constant demand far beyond the bounds of his special parish. He has, for instance, delivered several courses of lectures to the Young Men's Christian Association at Aldersgate-street. One of these courses was on Christian evidences, and the lectures are now to be had in book form, "Rock versus Sand." Another series, which we reported somewhat fully in our columns at the time, was on the Book of Ecclesiastes; these certainly ought also to be published, containing as they do much teaching on a misunderstood book, that is of peculiar value at the present day.

Though the bent of his mind is strongly in that direction, other pressing engagements have prevented Dr. Gibson from attempting any extended literary work. His published volumes are largely the fruit of his lectures. When in America he was one of the counsellors of the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle—an institution that has done much beyond the sea to replace the "dime novel" by works of an instructive and elevating character. The movement has now taken root on English soil, and it is nowhere more sorely needed. It is worthy of note that among his numerous engagements in London, Dr. Gibson has had the inclination, and found the time, to edit and publish in America a selection of Mr. Robert Browning's poems, under the caption of, "Pomegranates from an English Garden." This was done with the consent of the poet, who may consider himself fortunate in having his "obscurities" interpreted so lucidly as they are in the preface to this book; which of course is not procurable on this side of the Atlantic. A city pastor who is faithful to his trust has little time for book-making of any very ambitious sort, but if Dr. Gibson had elected to choose the profession of letters, the literature of the time would certainly have been enriched by his well-stored mind and keen intellect through the medium of his pen. We are glad of the opportunity of illustrating this statement by referring to our review (on a subsequent page) of Dr. Gibson's latest and largest work—"Christianity according to Christ." The reader will there find the result of much fresh and earnest thought on the high subjects with which it deals.

We must not omit to say that he is an ardent supporter of the cause of total abstinence, and was the chosen preacher for the National Temperance League in the Metropolitan Tabernacle at their last spring anniversary. It may seem to some a small matter, but we think it deserving of mention that he is one of the comparatively few preachers who utilise phonography in the pulpit. We are by no means blind advocates of written discourses, but where this aid is deemed necessary, the employment of shorthand shows that its user is well abreast of his age in adopting its time and labour-saving contrivances.

THE GEORGE SMITH OF COALVILLE BAND OF LOVE continues to make satisfactory progress, especially in the Midlands. It is only three and a half years since it was founded, but it already has members representing all classes of the community.

REV. E. VANORDEN writes from Sao Paulo, Oct. 15:—Yesterday we had the privilege of opening a new Sunday-school and Sunday evening services in Rua Santo Amaro, a district mostly inhabited by poor people. I am assisted by a student of the American Mission, and we hope to evangelise this neighbourhood. There are thousands of children and people who have never heard the Gospel. During the week, Mrs. Emerson, a minister's widow, holds a free evening school for women, black or white.

JESUS' HOUR.

"Woman, what to thee and Me? mine hour is not yet come" (John ii. 4). There was nothing harsh in these words; but they expressed the utter discrepancy between the thoughts of Jesus and his mother. She was thinking of the throne and crown of David; He of the cross and the crown of thorns. The Evangelist repeatedly anticipates this hour, until at last it finds himself and Mary beneath the cross, and Simeon's warning to the mother is fulfilled, "Yea, a sword shall pierce through thine own soul also." Then the Son makes bequest to his friend of all He has on earth to leave, saying to his mother, "Woman, behold thy Son!" and to the disciple, "Behold thy mother!" and from that hour the disciple took her unto his own home. There are few studies more touching, few themes of meditation more elevating, though so tender, than the movement of Jesus to his hour (John ii. 4, vii. 30, xii. 27, xiii. 1, xvii. 1, xix. 27).—M.

SPIRIT, AND SOUL, AND BODY.

"And the God of peace Himself sanctify you wholly; and may your spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved entire, without blame, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. v. 23, R.V.). In the one case the Apostle prays that their salvation may be complete as a whole; in the other entire in every part. Sanctification thus rests on these two conditions: that the Holy Spirit shall possess each of the three parts of our nature, and possess them entirely.... The order, moreover, in which the Apostle mentions spirit, soul, and body, seems to point to the work being progressive, as well as an entire work. The Divine Spirit enters and dwells in our spirit first. From thence He gets the mastery over the desires of the mind; and, lastly, over the desires of the flesh. We have reached the state of entire sanctification, the perfection (though never sinless) which is attainable on this side of the grave, when, with the Apostle, we keep our body under and bring it into subjection—deal it blows in the face, as the conquering gladiator did, and grapple it with a hook to drag it off dead from the arena (1 Cor. ix. 27).—Heard's Tripartite Nature of Man.

THE PAINTER'S BRAZIER.

I saw a painter doing up the posts of a gate which led into a gentleman's grounds. The paint was very foul, and so the workmen had a brazier, filled with glowing coals, which he held close to the paint, to burn it off. His aim was to paint the posts, and he began his work by scorching them with hot coals. He was no simpleton, but knew his business well; and he knew that before he could put on fresh paint he must first burn off the old paint, or else the work would be badly done. I said to myself, "That man is doing what the Lord has often done to me;" and what He may be doing to some of you who are now suffering greatly in the process. You have been seeking the Lord, and you had hoped that you would be converted, and enter into peace at once; instead of which, the sermons you have heard have made you feel worse and worse. You are more troubled now than when you began in earnest to seek salvation. It is all right—the old paint is being burned off. Your self-righteousness and self-sufficiency are being destroyed, and you are keenly feeling the fire of the Lord's wrath against sin burning into your very soul. If the old self had been left, the colour of grace could never have soaked into your mind; the old stuff would have kept it out—you would have taken a mere film of grace, and soon the old rubbish of nature would have appeared through the new colour of grace. The more completely the old paint is burned off, the better will the new work stand; and it is for this reason that the Holy Spirit is to you a spirit of judgment and a spirit of burning, before He works for your renewal. See this, and understand the wisdom and lovingkindness of the Lord. —Mr. C. H. Spurgeon.

THE THIRST FOR GOLD.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.*

We have a foe to fight in England to-day mightier than ever was Rome of old. What is the great power of England, the god of this country, enthroned and crowned, and served with an intenser and keener and more exacting service than ever galley-slave or soldier rendered to the Emperor of old? Gold, the thirst for it—cruel and terrible sometimes as the thirst of hell; the means of making it, often knowing no law but success, that sanctifies everything; the ways of spending it or not spending it—these three are the sources of the ills that curse us. And all this Christianity scarcely touches. How is it? Its voice is scarcely lifted against this haste to be rich, to get on in the world, no matter who is driven to the wall.

Has Christianity a message?—has it any remedy for this state of things—this growing poverty of the poor, this growing wealth of the wealthy, and between them a gulf ever deeper and broader, with its awful squalor and wretchedness on one side, and its splendid luxury on the other? Is the Christianity of Christ, which was able to conquer the Cæsars, able to meet these evils? If it cannot, then let the whole thing go—it is dead, bury it. If it can, then, in the name of our God, let it be used, for there is terrible need.

Does somebody object that such Christianity is revolutionary; that it is setting the masses against the classes; that it is Socialism? Well, let us ask ourselves the plain truth about these dreadful words. Is Christianity a conflict with evil only amongst the poor, the weak, those who have little choice between vice and starvation? If evil be rich, and wears a crown and sits on a throne, is Christianity to bow down before it, and call it "law and order"? Let no man pretend that the Christianity of Jesus Christ is that. His Christianity is in conflict with evil everywhere. Within a week of Pentecost the leaders of Christianity were in prison, and refused to give any promise to the authorities that they would recognise any law which was contrary to the commandment of God. Paul and Silas did not scruple to interfere very seriously with some rich men's gains, and got beaten for it and sent to prison; and they praised God when they got there.

Men seem utterly to forget the warnings of God against this feverish rush and haste to be rich. If thought of at all, they are considered to be the wild and somewhat mistaken words of men in an age when they "did not understand business." It is almost impossible for the Gospel voice to make itself heard in this matter, amidst the din and hubbub of life. There are astronomical observations which, I believe, cannot be taken in this country. There is too much vibration, and the skies are too stained with smoke. Alas! there are heavenly signs, and warnings, and entreaties which the Church fails to hear—is too busy, perhaps too greedy. There is the Gospel of contentment, the Gospel which Christ preached in his first sermon, and in the whole sermon of his life. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon"; therefore, let the anxiety for Mammon go, that ye may serve God. Who of the hurried, anxious, eager ones that fill our streets and market-places really believes that? How utterly lost and dead, trampled under foot on the hard pavements of our cities, are such sweet messages as these which God hath sent to us!—"Be ye free from the love of money; content with such things as ye have: for Himself hath said, I will in no wise fail thee, neither will I in any wise forsake thee" (Heb. xiii. 5, R.V.).

Never did words more terribly true come from any lips than those which follow a similar message from St. Paul; as if the Apostle felt how lightly men, greedy for gain, would brush aside the milder utterance. "Godliness with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into the world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content." That is the Gospel of Jesus Christ, in the very teeth of the man-made gospel of this nineteenth century—the gospel of push, of getting on in the world. Then from this clear sky comes the thunderbolt, as if there were no choice between this Divine contentment and this peril: "They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is a root of all kinds of evils: which some reaching after have erred from the faith, and have pierced themselves through with many sorrows. But thou, O man of God, flee these things."

RAILROAD MEN IN AMERICA.

A very interesting article, finely illustrated, descriptive of the every-day life of railroad men in America, appears in Scribner's Magazine for November. The writer says:—"The general moral welfare of railroad men has received much attention in late years, and affords a wide field for work by all who will. Many railroads have co-operated with the Young Men's Christian Association branches, started by a few of the employés, in building and equipping reading-rooms, libraries, &c., and they give many hundred dollars annually toward the support of these resorts, which serve to keep many a young trainman away from loafing places of a questionable character or worse.

"Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, whose millions came largely out of the profits of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, has set a good example to other railroad millionaires in the erection of a building for the employés of that road in New York City, whose luxuriousness is an evidence that he loves his neighbour as himself, even if that neighbour be a plain brakeman, earning but low wages. That the resorts provided for railroad men are appreciated is evidenced by their records. Of the trainmen who regularly come into the Grand Central Station in New York, forty-six per cent. are members of the Association occupying the building given by Mr. Vanderbilt, and sixty-five per cent. make use of the rooms more or less regularly. Rooms in numerous other cities also make encouraging showings."

MISSIONARY FACTS.

By Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

In the course of an interesting article in The Missionary Review of the World, Dr. Pierson says:—There were no miracles in ancient times that in their way demonstrated God's existence, presence and power with his servants, more than what, within the past seventy-five years, has been taking place in the fields of missionary labour. If disciples would exchange trashy novels for the biographies of saintly workers, they would find facts more fascinating than fiction, and more readable than romance. The story of William Johnson in Sierra Leone, of Charles Wheeler on the Euphrates, of Robert Morrison in China, of Thomas Powell in Nanumaga, of John Williams at Erromanga, of William Duncan in Colombia, of Adoniram Judson in Burmah, of Fidelia Fiske in Persia, of Robert Moffat in Africa; the rapid opening of doors in Japan, Turkey, China, India, Korea, Africa; the wonders wrought in the Pacific Archipelago, in Madagascar, in Southern India, in Greenland, in France, and Italy; the heroism of the Moravians, the consecration of native converts and evangelists, the radical and revolutionary changes that have turned brutal cannibals into gentle disciples, and reared churches over cannibal ovens; that have made holy men and women out of human beings who had lost almost the idea of God and the image of man: these, and the thousand other facts that are the staple of missionary argument and appeal, should be persistently kept before, as well as put before, the members of our churches.

And no book is, on the whole, so effective for this purpose as the living voice. If the Baptist brethren of the United States would make Dr. and Mrs. Gordon [of Boston] missionary bishops at large, and send them itinerating through the land to hold popular meetings and bring these appeals for missions into close contact with the popular heart, there would be a revival of missions, or rather a new epoch of missionary interest. We must not only strike when the iron is hot, but make the iron hot by continued, rapid striking, blow on blow, till the very force of the impact creates heat. This conviction alone led me to turn aside to our late mission tour, and no work I ever did seemed to repay the expenditure with such ample compensation. The great evil of our day is the lack of response to the providence of God. But disciples will not respond to any voice they do not hear, or any hand they do not see. Let us familiarise ourselves with the facts, and then put them before the people.

SAILORS AND SOLDIERS IN MALTA.—A Home for Sailors and Soldiers in Valetta, Malta, has been opened to supply a long-felt need. Board and lodging are provided at moderate charges. There is a cheerful reading-room and mission-room, and a warm welcome is given to all. Magazines or daily papers will be most thankfully received by Mr. E. O. Webber, 59, Strada San Paolo, Valetta, Malta.

CHELSEA PREVENTIVE AND RESCUE HOME.—During the past year a helping hand has, by means of this institution, been stretched out to a considerable number of young women. Of 159 cases in which assistance was rendered, 65 were preventive cases, in which girls from fourteen to twenty years of age, for the most part without money or friends, were cared for in very critical circumstances. Forty of the young women who have been thus protected are now doing fairly well in situations, as also are over thirty of ninety-four rescue cases received into the Home. Communications respecting the work should be addressed to Mrs. J. Lawson Forster, 12, Carlyle-square, S.W.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

IV.—DRIFTING.

Hebrews ii.

Salvation is a great word; and it is one of the keywords of this Epistle. Heirs of salvation (i. 14); Captain of salvation (ii. 10); eternal salvation (v. 9); things which accompany salvation (vi. 9); salvation to the uttermost (vii. 25); and his appearance the second time without sin unto salvation (ix. 28).

Sometimes it is salvation from the penalty of sin that is spoken of. The past tense is then used of that final and blessed act by which, through faith in the blood of Jesus, we are for ever placed beyond fear of judgment and punishment, so that we are to the windward of the storm, which spent itself on the head of our Substitute and Representative on Calvary, and can therefore never break on us. "By grace have ye been saved through faith" (Eph. ii. 8).

Sometimes it is salvation from the power of sin. The present tense is then employed, of the long and gradual process by which we are set free from evil, which has worked itself so deeply into our system. "Unto us which are being saved the word of the cross is the power of God" (1 Cor. i. 18). Sometimes salvation from all physical and other evils. The future tense is then summoned into requisition, painting its splendid frescoes on the mists that hang so densely before our view, and telling us of resurrection in our Saviour's likeness and presentation in his home, faultless, with exceeding joy. "Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent; the day is at hand" (Rom. xiii. 11).

Here the word salvation includes the entire process, from its beginning to its end; though perhaps it is especially tinctured with the first thought mentioned above. And if we follow out the figure suggested by the rendering of the first verse as given in the revised version, we may compare salvation to a great harbour, past which we are in danger of drifting through culpable neglect. "We ought to give more earnest heed to the things that were heard, lest haply we drift away from them." "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"

(1) Consider God's Scheme of Salvation as a Great Harbour.—After a wild night, we have gone down to the harbour, over whose arms the angry waves have been dashing with boom of thunder and in clouds of spray. Outside the sea has been tossing and churning; cloudwrack driving hurriedly across the sky; the winds howling like the furies of olden fable. But within those glorious walls, the barks which had put in during the night were riding in safety; the sailors resting, or repairing rents in sail and tackle, whilst the waters were unstirred by the storm raging without. Such a refuge or harbour is a fit emblem of salvation, where tempest-driven souls find shelter and peace.

It is great in its sweep.—Sufficient to embrace a ruined world. Room in it for whole navies of souls to ride at anchor. Space enough for every ship of Adam's race launched from the shores of time. "He is the propitiation for the whole world." "Whosoever will." Already it is becoming filled. There a vessel, once manned by seven devils, a pirate ship, but captured by our Emmanuel, and at her stern the name, Mary of Magdala. And here one dismasted, and almost shattered, rescued from the fury of the Maëlstrom at the last hour; on her stern the words, The Dying Thief. And there another, long employed in efforts to sap the very walls of the harbour, and now flying a pennon from the masthead, Chief of Sinners and Least of Saints. And all around a forest of masts, "a multitude which no man can number, of every nation, and kindred, and people, and tongue."

It is great in its foundations.—The chief requisite in constructing a sea-wall is to get a foundation which can stand unmoved amid the heaviest seas. The shifting sand must be pierced down to the granite rock. But this harbour has foundations mighty enough to inspire strong consolation in those who have fled to it for refuge (Heb. vi. 18). The promise, and as if that were not enough, the oath of God. Hark! how the storm of judgment is rising out there at sea! If the foundations be destroyed, what shall the righteous do? Fear not, there is no room for alarm. The waves may scrape off some mussel-shells, or tear away the green sea-lichen which has encrusted the mouldings on the walls; but it would be easier to dig out the everlasting hills from their base, than make one stone in those foundations start.

It was great in its cost.—By the tubular bridge on the Menai Straits stands a column, which records the names of those who perished during the construction of that great triumph of engineering skill. Nothing is said of the money spent, only of the lives sacrificed. And so, beside the harbour of our salvation, near to its mouth, so as to be read by every ship entering its enclosure, rises another column, with this as its inscription: "Sacred to the memory of the Son of God, who gave his life a sacrifice for the sin of the world." It seems an easy thing to be saved: "Look unto Me, and be ye saved." But we do not always remember how much happened before it became so easy; the agony and bloody sweat: the cross and passion; the precious death and burial.

It has been great in its announcement.—The Jews thought much of their law, because of the majesty of its proclamation. Spoken from the inaccessible cliffs of Sinai, with its beetling crags, its red sandstone peaks bathed in fire; while thunders and lightning, thick clouds and trumpet-notes were the sublime accessories of the scene. It was the authorised belief also that the law was given through angels (Deut. xxxiii. 2; Acts vii. 53; Gal. iii. 19). And the thought that these strong and sinless beings were the medium of the Almighty's will served to enhance its sanctity and glory in the eyes of all devout Hebrews.

Compared with this, how simple the accessories of the words of Jesus. Spoken in sweet and gentle tones, falling as the soft showers on the tender grass, and distilling quietly as the dew, not frightening the most sinful, nor startling little babes, they stole as the melody from silver bells, borne on a summer wind, into the ears of men. The boat or hill-slope his pulpit; the poor his audience; the common incidents of nature or life his text.

But in reality there was a vast difference. The announcement of the law was by angels. The announcement of the Gospel was by the Son. If the one were august, what must not the other have been? If the one were made sure by the most tremendous sanctions, what should not be said of the other? Proclaimed by the Lord; confirmed by Apostles and eye-witnesses; testified to by the Almighty Himself, in signs and wonders, and gifts of the Holy Ghost. How dare we treat it with contumely or neglect? Or, if we do, shall not our penalty be in proportion to the magnitude of our offence? "If the word spoken through angels was stedfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompence of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things that were heard, lest haply we drift away from them."

It will be great in its penalties.—The tendency of our age is to minimise God's righteous judgment on sin. It seems to be prevalently thought that, because our dispensation is one of love and mercy, therefore there is the less need to dread the results of sin. But the inspired writer here argues in precisely a contrary sense. Just because this age is one of such tender mercy, therefore sins against its King are more deadly, and the penalties heavier. In the old days no transgression, positive, and no disobedience, negative, escaped its just recompence of reward; and in these days there is even less likelihood. The word spoken by the Son is even more stedfast (i.e., effective to secure the infliction of the punishment it announces) than the word of angels. My readers, beware! "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses; of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God?"

(2) The Danger to which we are most exposed.—"Lest we should drift away from them." For everyone that definitely turns his back on Christ, there are hundreds who drift from Him. Life's ocean is full of currents, any one of which will sweep us past the harbour mouth even when we seem nearest to it, and carry us far out to sea.

It is the drift that ruins men.—The drift of the religious world. The drift of old habits and associations, which, in the case of these Hebrew Christians, was setting so strongly towards Judaism, bearing them back to the religious system from which they had come out. The drift of one's own evil nature, always chafing to bear us from God to that which is earthly and sensuous. The drift of the pressure of temptation.

The young man coming from a pious home does not distinctly and deliberately say, "I renounce my father's God." But he finds himself in a set of business associates who have no care for religion; and, after a brief struggle, he relaxes his efforts and begins to drift, until the coastline of heaven recedes so far into the dim distance that he is doubtful if he ever really saw it.

The business man, who now shamelessly follows the lowest maxims of his trade, was once upright and high-minded. He would have blushed to think it possible for such things to be done by him. But he began by yielding in very trivial points to the strong pressure of competition; and when once he had allowed himself to be caught by the tide, it bore him far beyond his first intention.

The professing Christian, who now scarcely pretends to open the Bible or pray, came to so terrible a position, not at a single leap, but by yielding to the pressure of the constant waywardness of the old nature, and thus drifted into an Arctic Region, where he is likely to perish, benumbed and frozen, unless rescued, and launched on the warm Gulf-stream of the love of God.

It is so easy, and so much pleasanter to drift. Just to lie back, and renounce effort, and let yourself go whither the waters will, as they break musically on the sides of the rocking boat. But, ah, how ineffable the remorse, how disastrous the result!

Are you drifting? You can easily tell. Are you conscious of effort, of daily, hourly resistance to the stream around you, and within? Do the things of God and heaven loom more clearly on your vision? Do the waters foam angrily at your prow as you force your way through them? If so, rejoice; but remember that only Divine strength can suffice to maintain the conflict, and keep the boat's head against the stream. If not, you are drifting. Hail the strong Son of God. Ask Him to come on board, and stay you, and bring you into port.

(3) An Unanswerable Question. — "How shall we escape, if we neglect?" The sailor, who refuses lifeboat and harbour, does not escape. The self-murderer, who tears the bandages from his wounds, does not escape. The physician, who ridicules ordinary precautions against plague, does not escape. "How, then, shall we escape?"

Did the Israelite escape who refused to sprinkle the blood upon the doorposts of his house? Did the man who gathered sticks on the Sabbath day escape, although he might have pleaded that it was the first offence? Did the prince who had taken the Moabitess to wife escape, though he bore a high rank? Did Moses and Aaron escape, though they were the leaders of the people? No. None of these escaped. "Every transgression and disobedience received its just recompence of reward." "How, then, shall we escape?"

Is it likely that we should escape? We have neglected the only name given under heaven among men by which we can be saved. We have added contumely to neglect in refusing that which it has cost God so much to give. We have flouted his only Son, our Lord, and our disrespect to Him cannot be a small crime in the eye of the Infinite Father. "How shall we escape?"

No, if you neglect (and notice that to neglect is to reject), there is no escape. You shall not escape the storms of sorrow, of temptation, or of the righteous judgment of God. You shall not escape the deserved and necessary punishment of your sins. You shall not escape the worm which never dies, nor the fire which is never quenched. Out there, shelterless amid the rage of the sea; or yonder, driven to pieces on the rocks, you shall be wrecked, and go down with all hands on board, never sighted by the heavenly watchers, nor welcomed into the harbour of the saints' everlasting rest.

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.—Mr. J. R. Mackenzie, secretary of this society, has visited Perth. At a workers' meeting in connection with "the Perth City Mission," he told how the Lord was blessing the truth, as scattered in the Society's tracts and leaflets in various parts of the country.

VIGILANCE LAW.—A case was recently dealt with by the magistrate at Clerkenwell Police Court which will unpleasantly open the eyes of those owners of house property who wilfully or carelessly let their houses for immoral uses. The defendant had been repeatedly told by inhabitants of the neighbourhood that his premises were the resort of bad characters, but, professing to disbelieve the report, he apparently trusted that he could not be proved "wilfully a party" to the offence against public morality. A fine of £20 and costs was imposed, a result which strongly emphasises the responsibility of landlords as to the use to which their property is put. The proceedings were taken at the instance of the Finsbury-road branch of the National Vigilance Association, the funds of which are, we understand, now a good deal in arrears. Particulars as to the operations of the branch may be had from Mr. S. Pewtress, 41, Penn-road-villas, Finsbury-park, N.

XXXIII.—THE TORN BOOK.

"Do you think a person can give his will to God?" inquired a lady.

I answered, "Yes, as surely as he can give anything else."

"Well, I find it very difficult; I cannot do it."

I said, "It is as easy as giving your heart to God, and you have done that, have you not?"

"Y-e-s," she drawled out, as if hesitating and undecided. "I have done that, and I mean it; but it does not go. Sometimes I think it has gone, and then I find that it has not."

I said, "You are like a person looking two ways. You should remember that when you give a thing it is not yours any more. Suppose you give me a book, then it is mine; you cannot give it again."

"Yes, that is very clear; but giving my heart to God does not seem quite like that."

"When you give your heart you should let it go, and, regarding it as gone, apply yourself to and for the object to which you have given it. You will soon find out that it has gone, as you call it, and sometimes beyond recovery."

"I wish mine would go like that, I am sure," she said, thoughtfully.

"Worldly people," I continued, "give their hearts to pleasure, and see how they are taken up with it; so much so that they are miserable without a constant whirl of gaiety. We were not made for this world, but for God, and only the things of God can satisfy the soul."

"I agree with you," said the lady; "there are times when I am so taken up with the Lord Jesus that I wonder how I could ever think of anything else. But ——"

There she paused. I said, "You must continue to look at a thing if you desire a continuance of its effect upon you. Think of the Lord Jesus, read about Him, speak to Him, and you will soon find that He can possess your soul. Believe more in his taking than in your giving, and you will then feel and know that your heart is not your own."

"I am sure you are right," she said, "for I have felt like that more than once."

"Feeling," I replied, "is a result produced by a cause. If I touch a thing, I feel it; but if I cease to touch, I cease to feel. While you believe, you feel; when you cease to believe, you cease to feel."

"Yes, that seems clear enough, and I wish it were always as clear as that with me."

I said, "Now you can understand why you find it so hard to give your will to God. The heart and the will act and react upon one another. When you give your heart to God, and let your will go after something else, it drags the heart back; whereas, if you let your will go after the Lord, to whom you have given your heart, you will find that they help one another greatly."

"Thank you very much," said the lady, cheerfully; "you make me laugh, it all seems so clear; but at times it is very dark for all that! You are like a conjuror."

"Excuse me," I said, "you are like a shuttlecock, driven hither and thither. You should be more like the weather-cock, which is always steady and true to the wind."

"I can see what you mean," she said, "how people are driven hither and thither, if they have not Christ to guide them."

"Yes," I said, "it is very sad to see believers thinking and acting every one according to his or her own conscience, instead of according to the will of God. What is a man's conscience but his own will?"

"I see that," she said; "and that is why I wish to give up my will to follow the Lord fully."

"Thank God for that," I replied; "but mark, being willing to do a thing is not doing it. The Prodigal Son was willing to arise and go to his father; but for all that he remained where he was. While he was willing and resolving, he had no deliverance; but when he actually arose to go, then his father ran to meet him. Wishing to give your will up to God is good; but giving it up outright is far better."

"Oh, I wish I could remember this," said the lady, "it sounds so true while you are speaking it; but, alas! I fear that it will all pass away again."

I replied, "That is because you are trying to remember it, instead of acting upon it. Act upon it at once, strike while the iron is hot."

"I will," she said, emphatically. "I do; Lord, help me."

"Amen," I said. "Now, believe it is done, and act accordingly."

After prayer, she went away to pray and read by herself. The following morning I saw her again. No one could be happier. She said she had been singing—

> Jehovah has triumphed, his people are free.

The happiness of those who give their wills to God is deeper and more abiding than that of those who only give their hearts to Him. We must not suppose, however, that this happiness is one which is exempt from changes or trials.

My happy young friend came to me again at another time, looking very miserable again, and ready to cry.

"What is the matter now?" I inquired.

"Oh," she said, with a sigh, "I do not think my will is gone, after all!"

"What makes you think that?" I asked.

"Why, I find myself wishing and longing for things I know I ought not to desire; but still I cannot help wishing for them."

I said, "Such trials are permitted to test our sincerity and faith. Let me tell you a story, which may help you."

"When my children were young, a friend gave them a book of Æsop's fables, with beautiful woodcuts. They played with the book, and delighted in pointing out the animals and birds pictured in it. With constant use the book was sadly torn, and many of the leaves were wanting. Another friend, who was collecting woodcuts, said, 'Give me that torn book, and I will give the children an indestructible one in its place, printed on calico.' I agreed with thanks, and gave him the book. The cover was complete, but the inside was not.

"This gentleman believed in my giving him the book, and took it away. For weeks after this we were continually finding stray leaves belonging to the same book, some on a shelf, and some in drawers and other places. I did not cry at the discovery of these stray leaves, or wish to give the book to my friend again, or suppose I had not given it. The sight of the torn leaves rather reminded me that the book had been given, and therefore I put the leaves which belonged to it aside for their rightful owner."

"I like that story," said the lady, "and I think it will help me to remember what you tell me."

I said, "God permits us to be tried, to prove what is in our hearts; whether we will continue in the act of surrender we have made, or nullify that and make another. If you do this you will never get on, any more than a man building a house could get on if he pulled up the foundation every time he comes to a difficulty. Having once laid the foundation, he goes on through every discouragement, and so the building advances.

"Do likewise, and you will find that it is not necessary to give your heart or will again and again. The Lord would not ask for your heart if He did not intend to take it; or bid you follow Him, if He did not desire to be your Guide all the way from earth to heaven."

The Turning of the Tide, 1688.

A TRUE TALE OF THE COVENANTERS.

Being Extracts, hitherto unpublished, from personal narratives of James and Elizabeth Nimmo.

(Communicated by R. SCOTT MONCRIEFF, one of their Descendants.)

V.

JAMES NIMMO speaks of himself, at a later date, as one of the intercommuned, but without stating when his name was put upon the black list. There can be no doubt, however, that this must have been done immediately after the battle of Bothwell Bridge. If so, it is very significant of the personal regard felt for himself, and of the sympathy entertained for the cause for which he suffered, that he should have remained for more than a year after the battle in hiding, if not actually in his father's house, yet so near as to be able to direct the servants in their work, as we have seen, when his father was from home, without being betrayed to the authorities. But in August 1680, as he cannot remain there longer in safety, he decides upon fleeing to Holland, as so many of his fellow-sufferers had done, and secures passage in a vessel to sail from the neighbouring little port of Bo'ness, and goes down one night to go on board, but has to return on finding the vessel windbound, and is greatly perplexed as to the course he should now take for his safety. On the following day he goes to confer with an outed minister, in hiding in the neighbourhood, and is unexpectedly introduced to the laird of Park, a gentleman having a large property in Morayshire, who asks Nimmo to go there as chamberlain (or agent) for the estate; "As to which," Nimmo observes, "I said I was content to go and do what service I could, for a time, because I was not known in that place—led by an unseen hand."

Leaving Edinburgh on horseback for the North, he spends the Sabbath at Kirkcaldy, in Fife, "and there," he tells us, "I was unexpectedly trysted with a sermon by Mr. John Moncrieff, (an outed minister) in a barn, on Obadiah, wherein I got much satisfaction. After sermon I retired to the fields where the Lord helped me to pour out my heart before Him, with weeping and supplication, for many things both in behalf of myself, the church, my parents, and other friends left behind me, and to plead as to my guiding and assistance where I was going, and I hope He who gave me a heart to plead with Him at that time also heard my request."

He mentions having been present at the baptizing of a child by Mr. Moncrieff, a ceremony which could not have been performed except in secret, and with much risk to all concerned. Leaving Kirkcaldy on Sept. 4, on the 8th he "came to Inshork, Park's house in Moray."

Though not exposed to such fightings without as he had passed through, ELIZABETH BRODIE was no stranger, as we have seen, to "fears within," and the entries in her diary, from June, 1679, until August, 1680, are but a record of further alternations between spiritual sunshine and spiritual shadow, such as have been already noticed. On the Sabbath day, which James Nimmo spent in Kirkcaldy in the manner narrated above, Elizabeth Brodie has the following entry in her diary:—

"The next Sabbath day, being August 28, Mr. D.—— preached on these words, 'I will betroth thee unto Me for ever; yea, I will betroth thee in righteousness, in judgment, in lovingkindness, and in mercy' (Hosea ii. 19). My soul was much refreshed with his opening of the word." After giving some particulars of what seems to have been a very powerful address, she continues, "He said there was an earnest desire in Christ's heart to be in a marriage connection with his people. Here he reproved two sorts of folk. First, they that were not seeking to be in that relation to Christ. Second, they that thought they might justly reason themselves out of Christ because of failings on their part; he said such stood in the way of their own mercy. I have set down my exercise as above to keep in mind the tossings which I have had, and the Lord's goodness to me under them."

And yet, though proving from day to day what a broken reed to lean upon her feelings were, she is still found looking to them, too often, for satisfaction, instead of to the finished work of Christ for her, and she mourns and wonders that she finds no outgate!

"September 29, 1680.—The Lord removed my father by death at 11 at night." Thus does Elizabeth Brodie record in her diary an event which was to have more important consequences for herself than she could have suspected at the time. She proceeds to give an account of it as follows:—

"The night before we had been at Elgin, it being the time of a market. My father was taken up with his market affairs through the day. In the evening there came a weight on my spirit, so that I could be no company to any person. At length I went to prayer, under a great pressure of spirit, and in prayer I was often made to cry that the Lord would save me from wrong thoughts of Him, by reason of any lot He would measure out for me in the world; and I was put to say, let Him take his own way, only give me grace to construct aright of Him, and give clearer views of Himself to my soul. After prayer, I was much troubled about my father's being out in the night air, for he had been kept long by helping some friends to buy cattle. So when he came in from the market, I went to him and told him I was afraid he would be the worse of the night air. He said he would go into the house for a little to take some refreshment, as he had got nothing through the day. Sometime after, my eldest brother, he, and I, took horse (for my mother was to stay in Elgin that night with a friend who was not well), but when a little off he missed his servant, who was not come forward, therefore he desired my brother and me to go on, and he would ride back, which he did, and we moved very slowly on till he overtook us. When he came, we fell into very edifying converse the whole way; when we came home, supper being on the table, he was not well, and would go to bed; but my brother and I pressed him to stay supper, which he did, but ate none. After that he went to prayer in the family, and was most serious, for no person would have thought by hearing him that he was under any distemper, and all that saw him that day said they had never seen him look better, and more fresh in colour. When prayer was done, he went to bed, and each of us to our own rooms. When coming home I had resolved to spend part of that night in prayer, but after I went upstairs I could win at nothing, neither read nor pray, from an indisposition both of body and spirit, and so was forced to give it over. I came down stairs again a very little after he had gone to bed, and he, knowing my foot on the stair, called me and desired me to cast more clothes on him, which I did without speaking more, because I thought him sleepy, and being cold I went to the hall fire to warm myself, none being there but my sister Barbara. As soon as I sat down I heard him give a heavy draught with his breath. I ran to get a candle lighted, and ere I entered his room he gave another. I found him lying in a cold sweat, and lifted him up, and when I found him continue in the faint, as I thought, I laid him on his back, but finding him no better, I lifted him up again. When rubbing vinegar upon him he gave a great draught, this made me hope he was recovering, but presently his head fell down on my neck; then I put my hand to his pulses, but they were all gone, and when I put my hand to his heart I found no motion there. I was stupid, like a beast, and could not pray a word. I called for help, but no physician could be of use. Then my mother being from home, and the surprise she would meet with, was very heavy to me, for there was great affection betwixt them, and she was somewhat of a passionate temper. So we sent for her two brothers who were to go to Elgin and tell her first, but a foolish servant without orders went to her before them, and told her rashly, saying if she came not quickly she would never see him in life. But there was much of the Lord's goodness to be seen in supporting her, and in meeking her spirit. To my great surprise, when I went to meet her she was coming betwixt her two brothers, with a very pleasant countenance, and asked me with a smile if the Lord's work was perfected. I told her it was. She only said, "Well, He can do nothing wrong who has done it." And when she entered the room where he lay, she fell down on her knees at "the bedside, and blessed God for three things: (first) That she had such a yoke-fellow; (second) That she had him so long; (third) That He had now taken him in mercy. This was a most pleasant disappointment."

Some months before this Elizabeth had recorded in her diary the keen distress which it had given her, on returning home on one occasion, after a brief absence from it, to find that her father had refused the offer of an outed minister to preach in his house; and we have seen how great his displeasure had been, at an earlier date, to learn that she had been visiting the Covenanters in prison, in Elgin; but, though he had no sympathy with them, apparently, he seems to have been a God-fearing man. We continue to quote from her diary:—

"November 11, 1680.—There are several things exercising to me this day: First, many of the godly are to appear this day before the Council of Scotland, some of them my own relations; my prayer shall be that they may all be carried through, with the Lord's approbation. My second ground of prayer is that the Lord would bring light out of that dark providence which my father's family has been trysted with. A third ground is that the Lord would clear me as to a particular that is exercising me. As to the first, I see that my relations will not escape sin, or suffering, and I think some of them will suffer. Then, as to my own case, I got that answer, 'Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.'

"November 17, 1680.—I got the last of Matthew for my comfort, where the woman met with the disappointment of a risen Christ and an empty grave. Oh, this was another thing than to have got his dead body dressed with spices. Oh, it was a blessed disappointment. In this I saw that ofttimes, when the Lord withholds one comfort, He designs a greater mercy. Then, secondly, I saw that one providence will bring comfort and consolation to the godly, but fear and trembling to the wicked, as in this passage (Matt. xxviii.). Thirdly, it will not be long ere Christ give serious seekers a token of his coming, as in this, 'Fear not, ye seek Jesus.' Fourthly, it will not be long till He back the commission, as here He confirms the words of the angel. And, fifthly, that He passeth by the infirmities of the women who sought the living among the dead.

"December 28, 1680.—This day I resolved to take a little more time in secret than ordinary, to entreat the Lord that He would rebuke the devil, who still vexes me with anxious thoughts as to my lot in the world, because the Lord has taken away the probable means of my comfortable living. For my father died without making any testament, and by this means four of us were left unprovided; and my mother has been most severe upon me for several years, because I had many offers of marriage which looked well to the eyes of the world, but I had not freedom to comply with. And now, my father being dead, I had fear of harsh treatment from a great part of my relations, who were incensed against me on that account.

"August 17, 1681.—I was this day seeking of the Lord that He would be good to my brother John. I got much freedom in prayer, the Lord persuading me that He would grant me the desire of my heart. The last Sabbath of December, in prayer, coming over that word in Exodus, 'I beseech thee show me thy glory,' the first of Revelation was brought to my mind: 'I heard behind me a great voice as of a trumpet, saying, I am Alpha and Omega.' I saw in that a great change in our Lord's speaking to John, for in his humanity He used to converse with him like one of the sons of men, but now He comes to John in a glorious and majestic form; which when John heard and saw he fell at his feet as one dead, and then the Lord is pleased to lay his right hand on him, saying, 'Fear not, I am He that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore.' How comfortable were these words to John, and, oh, I saw much of heaven in that word, 'Fear not'! Here I had a clearer sight of his manhood glorified than ever I had seen formerly.

"January 17, 1682.—These several days past I have been finding the idol of Self, which I thought was mortified, still living, and that with much strength and vigour, only it is not so easy to me to combat it as some time formerly. Being much troubled with it, I knew not what to do, at last I was blessing the Lord there were some in whom He had slain that sad idol, and I was blessing Him for their mercy when that word came with much sweetness, 'As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly' (1 Cor. xv. 49). By this did the Lord persuade my soul that He would show me mercy in this particular."

Some three weeks before this, her cousin, the Laird of Lethen,* had brought to the house a friend of his, whom he had invited to stay with him, in order to help him in the management of his property. This was a young man from the South, a comparative stranger in Morayshire, whom he must have known to be suspected of having borne a part in the rising of the West. Is it unreasonable to suppose that Elizabeth Brodie had heard him spoken of, amongst the godly of her acquaintance, as undoubtedly one of the persecuted for righteousness' sake, and that now she would learn from his own lips how he was indeed one of the intercommuned, having followed the ark of God into the fields, and ventured his all at Bothwell Bridge, under the banner emblazoned "For Christ's Crown and Covenant"? In such a case it is not surprising if she found her sympathies going out toward this young Covenanter with a warmth causing her some alarm and perplexity, and if, in blessing God for some in whom she had seen the idol self slain, she was thinking of James Nimmo.

* Since publishing the first of these papers, the writer has learned that Elizabeth Brodie was a daughter of Brodie of Windyhills, not of Lethen. His father was a son of Brodie of Brodie, the head of an old, a numerous, and a very influential family in Morayshire. The property of Windyhills (the name of which was changed many years ago to Milton) has continued in the possession of the descendants of Elizabeth Brodie's father to the present time.

CRUELTY TO CHILDREN. — The London Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is promoting a short but very important bill, which it is hoped may become law this session, and the effects of which will emancipate numbers of helpless little child-victims from the vilest influences and most degrading thraldom. All lovers of little children should pray for the complete success of the bill.—Night and Day.

GLASGOW YOUNG MEN.—One Sunday in October a census was taken of the attendance of young men at public worship in Glasgow, and over half the total number, 111,000, could not be traced in connection with any kind of religious worship. This and other facts of interest were reported at a recent meeting of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A., the membership of which now numbers 9446. Rev. John McNeill, of Edinburgh, delivered an earnest address on the occasion, expressing a hope that the young men as a body would not lay themselves open to the sneering and sarcastic things that are said about some of them, but, stripping off all veneer, show themselves out and out for Christ.

A GIRL'S QUESTION,

AND HOW IT WAS ANSWERED.

Some time ago I received a letter from a young girl, in which the principal question was:—

"WHAT IS CONSECRATION?"

I knew this girl to be a sincere follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, one who referred every matter to Him, as it arose, in earnest prayer, and so I was impelled to send her, as answer to her question, another, to which I was directed by the Spirit of God: "And who then is willing to consecrate his service (marg. fill his hand) this day unto the Lord?" (1 Chron. xxix. 5). I told my young friend that these words, illuminated at her desire, by the Holy Spirit, would tell her all she wanted to know. And they did. Some little while after she wrote to me again: "I think I have found out the meaning of the word consecration, and while I believe in the fact and act more than ever, I shall be very sparing of its use as a mere word. To fill one's hands for God is to dedicate them to Him: to give them to God, so that the common things grow sacred; for all that we do, and all that we are, will be of and for the Lord."

Yes, for with hands filled for God, there will be no room in those hands for anything else; it is only when hands and heart are idle that Satan can find room in them to fill them with mischief. Let me tell you of Grace, who is nearly blind. She is very poor, though she occupies a good social position, and yet she is enabled to fill her hands for God in a way that surprises many of her friends.

"Mother," she said one day, "I will go without sugar in my tea and coffee, and without butter on my bread, if you do not mind, so that I may be able to give something to the poor for Jesus' sake."

The price of the butter and sugar was found to be one shilling and three pence a week, so that Grace has five shillings a month, and over three pounds a year to spend out of her self-denial for God. Then she writes to some drapery firm for a parcel of remnants and oddments, suitable for winter use; with these she makes jackets, frocks, knickerbockers, and many useful things, though she has to trust to feeling for every stitch she puts in the garments. You can understand how, with the blessing of God, the clothes and the money (which finds its way as soup and comforts to the poor) grow into gracious proportions, and how Grace finds a full winter's work in the distribution of what a little self-sacrifice has enabled her to "set apart" in his name. This is consecration.

Then there is Alice: she has very delicate health, in fact, she suffers from spinal disease. But she is quite an artist, and it is her great joy to sit in her father's grounds, sketching, or painting flowers, or designing cards for family anniversaries, which she sells among her friends. This she can readily do, as her work is fully worthy its object—the glory of God, Alice having perfected her talent for his sake. With the money so earned, not begged from others, she supports an orphan in a well-known orphanage. This is consecration.

I had a letter from Mr. Kirk, of the Ragged School Union, the other day, in which he tells me how two girls at school, reading of the Holiday Homes for poor sickly little London children, determined that when they went home they would "follow Jesus" by seeking to do all in their power for some of these poor little ones. "Instead of making antimacassars, or dolls' clothes," said they, "let us work for the children."

You have heard it said that where there is a will there is a way; and love, guided by a compassionate Saviour, and his grace in their hearts, soon found out that way. "There is the coachman's cottage at the end of the copse—it is not now used," they argued, "we will ask papa to give us the use of it, and then we can have a small party of poor children down for a holiday." Their father gave them permission, and for days there was fine planning, working, and stitching away. Then came the responsibilities of house-keeping, when the cottage was finished and furnished, and the six little guests arrived. But who was to look after them? With the help of a maid, the two girls attended to and entertained them, and every morning at breakfast-time the programme for the day was made out. Two weeks went joyfully by; then the six children, with bodies refreshed, minds enlarged, and souls that had drunk in of the Saviour's love, returned home, and six more took their place.

Do you think our young friends spent a dull holiday? Do you think they counted anything a loss that would bring glory to God, and put his love into the lives of the loveless? No, they counted it "all joy," for had not they given themselves to the Lord, and was not He using them in just the way that pleased Him best? Their hands, their hearts were "filled" for Him. This is consecration.

You who have given yourself to God, consider for a moment, what that really means. "Myself?" you say; "that means hands, feet, eyes, ears, voice, tongue, talents, all dedicated to whatever my Lord shall choose to fill my hands with, for his sake." Yes, it means that, and a great deal more in the way of joy, hope, peace, love, than you can comprehend all at once. If you have but one talent, "take it to the Lord in prayer," and He will fill your hands for Himself, and will hold and guide them in loving consecration.

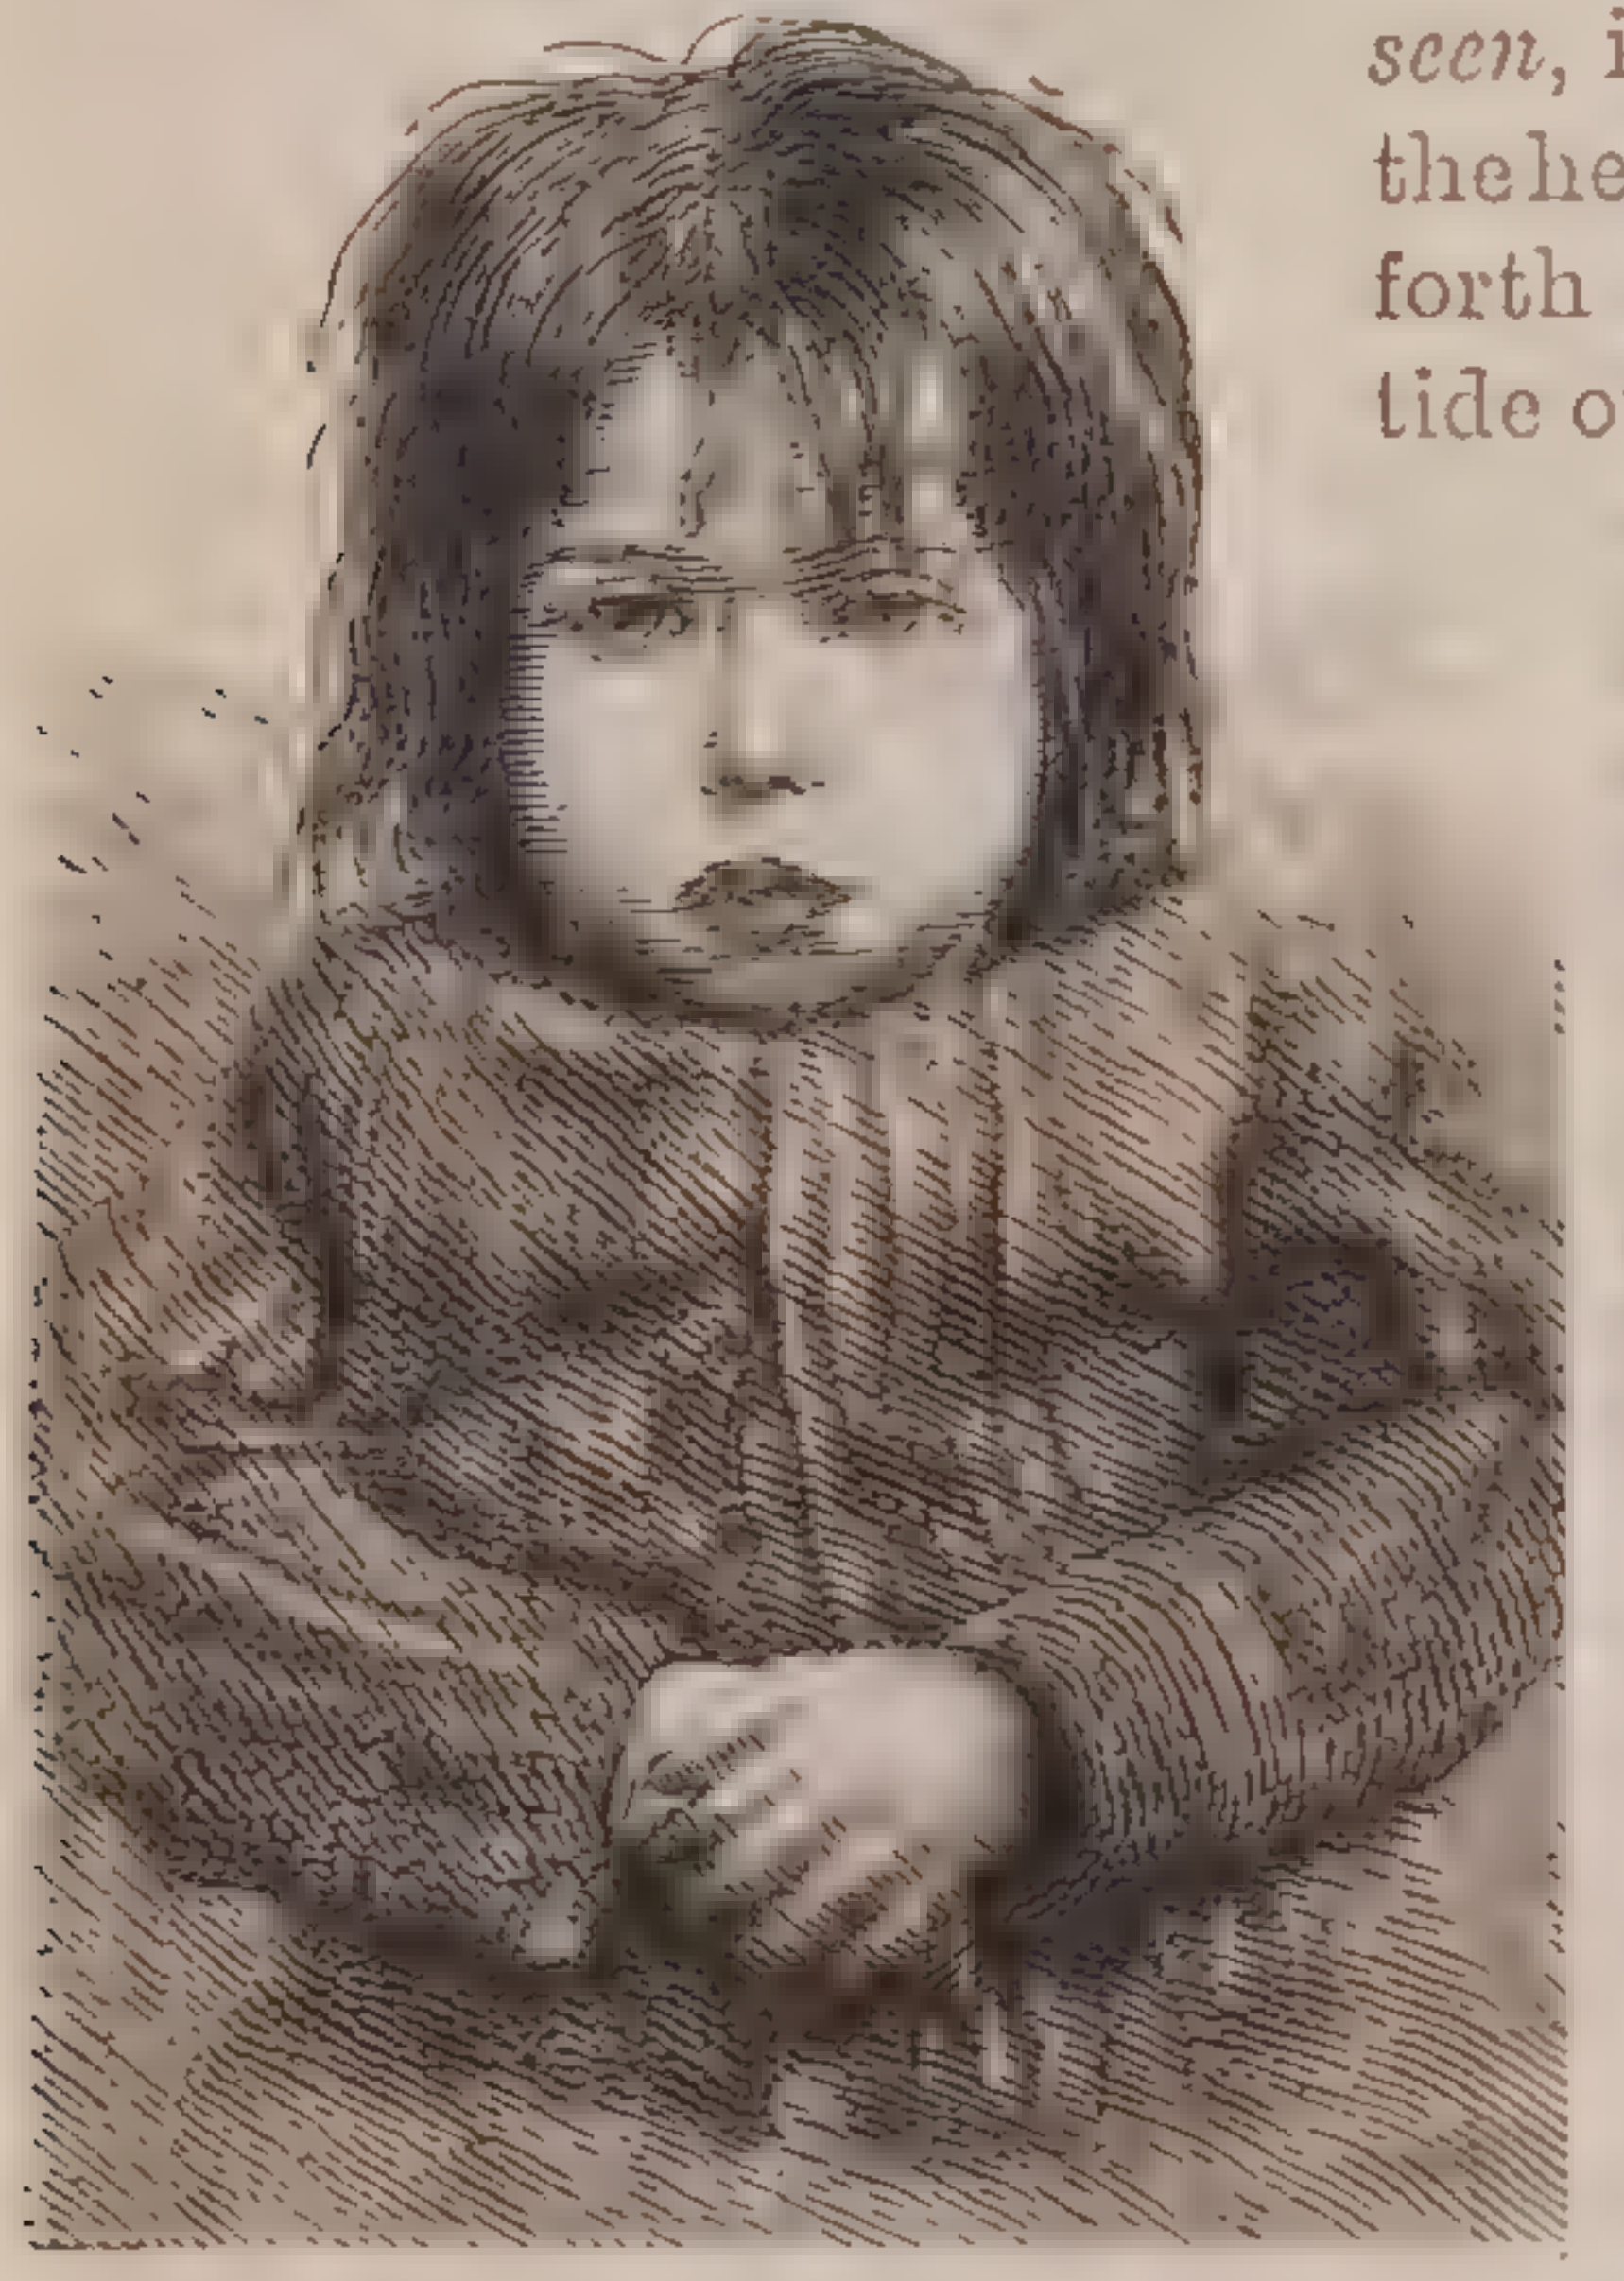
CHRISTMAS LETTER MISSION.

The postal deliveries of the Christmas Letter Mission are in full preparation. If our readers will apply for a report to the hon. secretary, Miss E. S. Elliot, 66, Mildmay-park, N., or to the printers, Messrs. Hazell, Watson & Viney, 6, Kirby-street, Hatton-garden, E.C., they will find a record of organised Christmas distributions, which will probably prompt them to desire a share in the business. The report tells of the sending forth last year of at least 600,000 letters (accompanied by Gospel cards) in the English language alone, making a total of about four millions in the sixteen years of steadily increasing effort.

The work year by year enlarges its borders. Besides the ordinary letters for sick, aged, young, mothers, Bible-classes, &c., and many others for "general use," suitable letters for postmen, railway-men, &c., have been added to this year's catalogue, and also a letter specially intended for the ignorant and neglected, who may feel themselves to be "outside Christmas." Help is needed by the secretaries in the supply of the Christmas letters and cards for the workhouses and infirmaries of London and many of the Northern counties. Several of these are in need of letter-givers. The earnestness of desire on the part of the poor inmates for their "one letter in the year" is often pathetically expressed. The tramcar and omnibus men warmly welcome the Christmas letter; but from various changes the staff of helpers in this department has been so seriously diminished that urgent need of reinforcement is experienced. Throughout the kingdom, especially in London, Liverpool, Derby, and large towns in Lancashire and the North, helpers are required. Children even will be gladly welcomed in sending out the illustrated anecdotal letters to other children less certain than themselves of the greetings of Christmastide, and who receive no other letter in the year. The whole organisation is now so complete that in any part of the kingdom co-operation is a matter of the greatest simplicity.

CHILD WANDERERS.

By Dr. T. J. BARNARDO.



Some of us can regard with comparative calm sufferings which we have not ourselves witnessed. Misery and distress must, however, be seen, in order that the heart may flow forth in the full tide of pity. Even a glance at the result of a single night's labours in the London slums would I am sure be enough to move the coldest.

But, oh, how can Christians suffer it all to go on unredressed?

Night by night there pace our streets, within sight and sound of our dwellings of ease in this million-peopled city, not merely that "black army" of women which late events have compelled us to weep over with special pity, or men whose lives have become (largely by their own misconduct) a hopeless conflict, but helpless and hapless Little Children, boys, and especially girls of tender years, who have actually no shelter for their heads; whose rags fail to be a protection from the searching winter; who are, alas! only too familiar with chronic famine, and whose unspoken appeals should go straight to the heart of every beholder. How can we lie down to sleep in our own comfortable beds, or "eat of the fat and drink of the wines" of life, and yet know of a truth that these things are so? Would to God that all Christ's servants could for once see and realise for themselves the misery of these, HIS Little Ones, and understand what it means and to what it all too surely leads!

We are at present but on the threshold of the winter; yet I have no words to describe the results of our night searches made during the past week along the stony streets. Ah, one needs to see the child wanderers of London's highways and byways, to view them not only with Christian eyes, but through the very eyes of the loving Christ Himself; and then to ask Cain's question in the Master's spirit, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Let me narrate one incident only, not of far away, nor of "once upon a time," but of just one week ago, and of streets almost under the shadow of St. Paul's; a story without an end, indeed, for it is taken from that book of "lamentation and mourning and woe," every page of which is blotted and blurred with the tears of hapless little children.

On a recent midnight one of my co-workers, out searching for the destitute, discovered Mary and Margaret Baptiste, aged nine and seven, wandering with their mother in C——-street. The three were soaked to the skin with the rain which had fallen the previous day, though the night itself was dry. The children, crying with cold, weariness and hunger, clung to their mother, who was herself sick and weak from starvation. The poor woman was wan-faced and hollow-cheeked with exhaustion and despair. Her history, I found, was by no means an uncommon one, which, indeed, is my chief reason for recounting it.

She had been respectably married to a working man, who at the beginning was kind, but took to drink shortly after his marriage, and then went down the slope, till, first neglect, and then ill-treatment, became his wife's daily portion. Six months ago he sold up all the household effects, and deserted his family, leaving no trace of his whereabouts, but not until he had made the name of "father" a symbol of cruelty and terror to the little girls.

The poor home—poor, as every drunkard's is—was soon broken up, and mother and children went into the Wandsworth Union. This meant constant companionship with paupers, and, what was far more keenly felt, separation of the mother from her little Mary and Margaret. For some time she endured this; but finally she took her discharge, and went to live in Spitalfields, at the only place open to such poor creatures—a common lodging-house.

Then began the life of shifts and privations. Occasionally in the day she got a little work at cleaning, being employed by poor folks, who paid her a few coppers. The money chiefly went for the children's lodging. Frequently, when she could not secure lodging-money for herself and the little ones, the poor soul gave up her own chances of a bed for their sakes. They slept warm, while their mother wandered the streets, or dozed fitfully in a sheltered corner. The girls thus for many a night stayed in a house in Wentworth-street, which I know well, and where nearly all of the female habituées are of the baser sort. Latterly the repute of this veritable harlots' den became so abominable that Mrs. Baptiste, poor and destitute as she was, resolved that nothing would induce her to suffer the children to sleep apart from her care. So the wretched mother and her little daughters went upon the tramp again all through the dreary London nights. They walked, in hunger and cold and weariness, the streets of the sleeping city, snatching a brief doze on doorsteps, occasionally in the public offices, sometimes, by rare opportunity, in the passages of houses, the hall doors of which had been left ajar. Days of starvation were thus, not once or twice, but again and again, and yet again—for times were dull—followed by long hours of nightly wandering.

One dark evening, after a round of wretched tramping, the mother's hopelessness reached the point of desperation. Such a life had no gleam of happiness in it: was it worth living? London Bridge was near: the parapet was low, and the dark waters tempting. Could rest be found there for the weary ones? But the mother's heart resumed its sway at the terrified cry of the youngest girl, and, beating back the awful temptation, the poor woman hurried the children off, never resting until they were far away from the region of the river.

The next night she broke her old resolution, and took shelter in the Poplar Union, and she once or twice subsequently housed in the Refuge in Mile End-road. When my agent met her, she was at her very last resource—footsore, starving, wet and desperate—and, after resting till morning in our All Night Shelter, she gladly surrendered her girls to my care and keeping. There, thank God, they are safe from perils of hunger, from perils of the river, from the greater nameless perils of vicious influence and companionship, and their history is finally, I hope, entered upon a brighter chapter.

The foregoing may appear to some very commonplace. That is the pathos and the pity of it. But surely these broken lives are a trumpet-call to action for each one of us.

Every night this winter I or my co-workers purpose (D.V.) with tender violence to bring in these little pilgrims of the night. These searchings of our stony highways and hedges will, I trust, yield to us a goodly harvest of rescued lives. But, in addition to this, I am looking forward with rising hope to the opening of two Special Lodging Houses which I have obtained in notoriously bad districts, and which, I trust, will be licensed under the Act, and set apart for the exclusive benefit of children, boys and girls. I may say that one of these Houses is no other than No. 34, Flower-and-Dean-street, the very house in which the unhappy woman Elizabeth Stride lodged, and in the kitchen of which I encountered her a few nights before she perished by the hand of the murderer. These Houses will be a friendly trap for many little feet, and I hope and believe that they will be the means, not merely of averting incalculable suffering, but of delivering hundreds of "Waifs and Strays" from the nameless pollutions of nightly association with criminal men and degraded women. To this work I have put forth my hand, with the determined purpose, if it please God, not to cease until in some degree the evils described are abated.

To fit up, to furnish, and to meet the incidental expenses connected with the opening of these two Lodging-houses, a sum of about £1200 is urgently and immediately required. I cannot believe that the want of this money will long prove a serious obstacle to the accomplishment of so wise and necessary an undertaking. Even as I write these concluding words, the need of such an undertaking as I have here indicated is accentuated by the terrible tidings which are just made public, that yet another awful tragedy, making the seventh in grim succession, has been perpetrated in Dorset-street, E., scarce more than a stone's throw from the house I have acquired in Flower-and-Dean-street. The victim is again a member of that unhappy class from which the others had been drawn, and here too the circumstances exhibit daily lives of the darkest shades and of the vilest influences.

And such are the surroundings from which I am seeking to save the unfortunate children of these very Lodging Houses! Surely there are many of the Lord's stewards among the readers of The Christian who will uphold my hands in this endeavour to snatch from present misery and the prospect of lifelong degradation the helpless Little Waifs and Strays of our streets.

WOMEN AND TEMPERANCE.

The annual Conference of the Yorkshire Women's Christian Temperance Union was held at Doncaster, November 6 and 7, and attended by delegates from most of its branches. The reports showed how great and varied is the Gospel temperance work carried on by the Union. Miss Millington, of York, who does an excellent work among showmen, would be glad to receive the dates of fairs in all parts of the country, with a view to its extension. In connection with hiring fairs a good work had been done in one or two towns by ladies opening attractive rooms for shelter and refreshment. Another prominent feature is the workhouse Bands of Hope. Four temperance missionaries are doing good work in the town, especially in connection with the police-courts. In some places special work has been undertaken in connection with the Young Women's Christian Association, or for young women in shops; in others, local exhibitions proved a valuable attraction. A specially interesting work is carried on in the Yorkshire Women's Home for Inebriates, at High Flats, where patients are received from all parts of the country.

The meeting on Wednesday afternoon was devoted to an able paper by Mrs. Doncaster, on the African Liquor Trade, and to two eloquent addresses by the Misses Leitch, of the American Board, on the Liquor Traffic in India and Ceylon. In the evenings public meetings were addressed by Dr. Lees on "Science and Common Sense in respect to the use of Alcoholic Drinks," and by Mrs. Ormiston Chant, whose thrilling address was illustrated by touching incidents in the course of her recent travels in America.

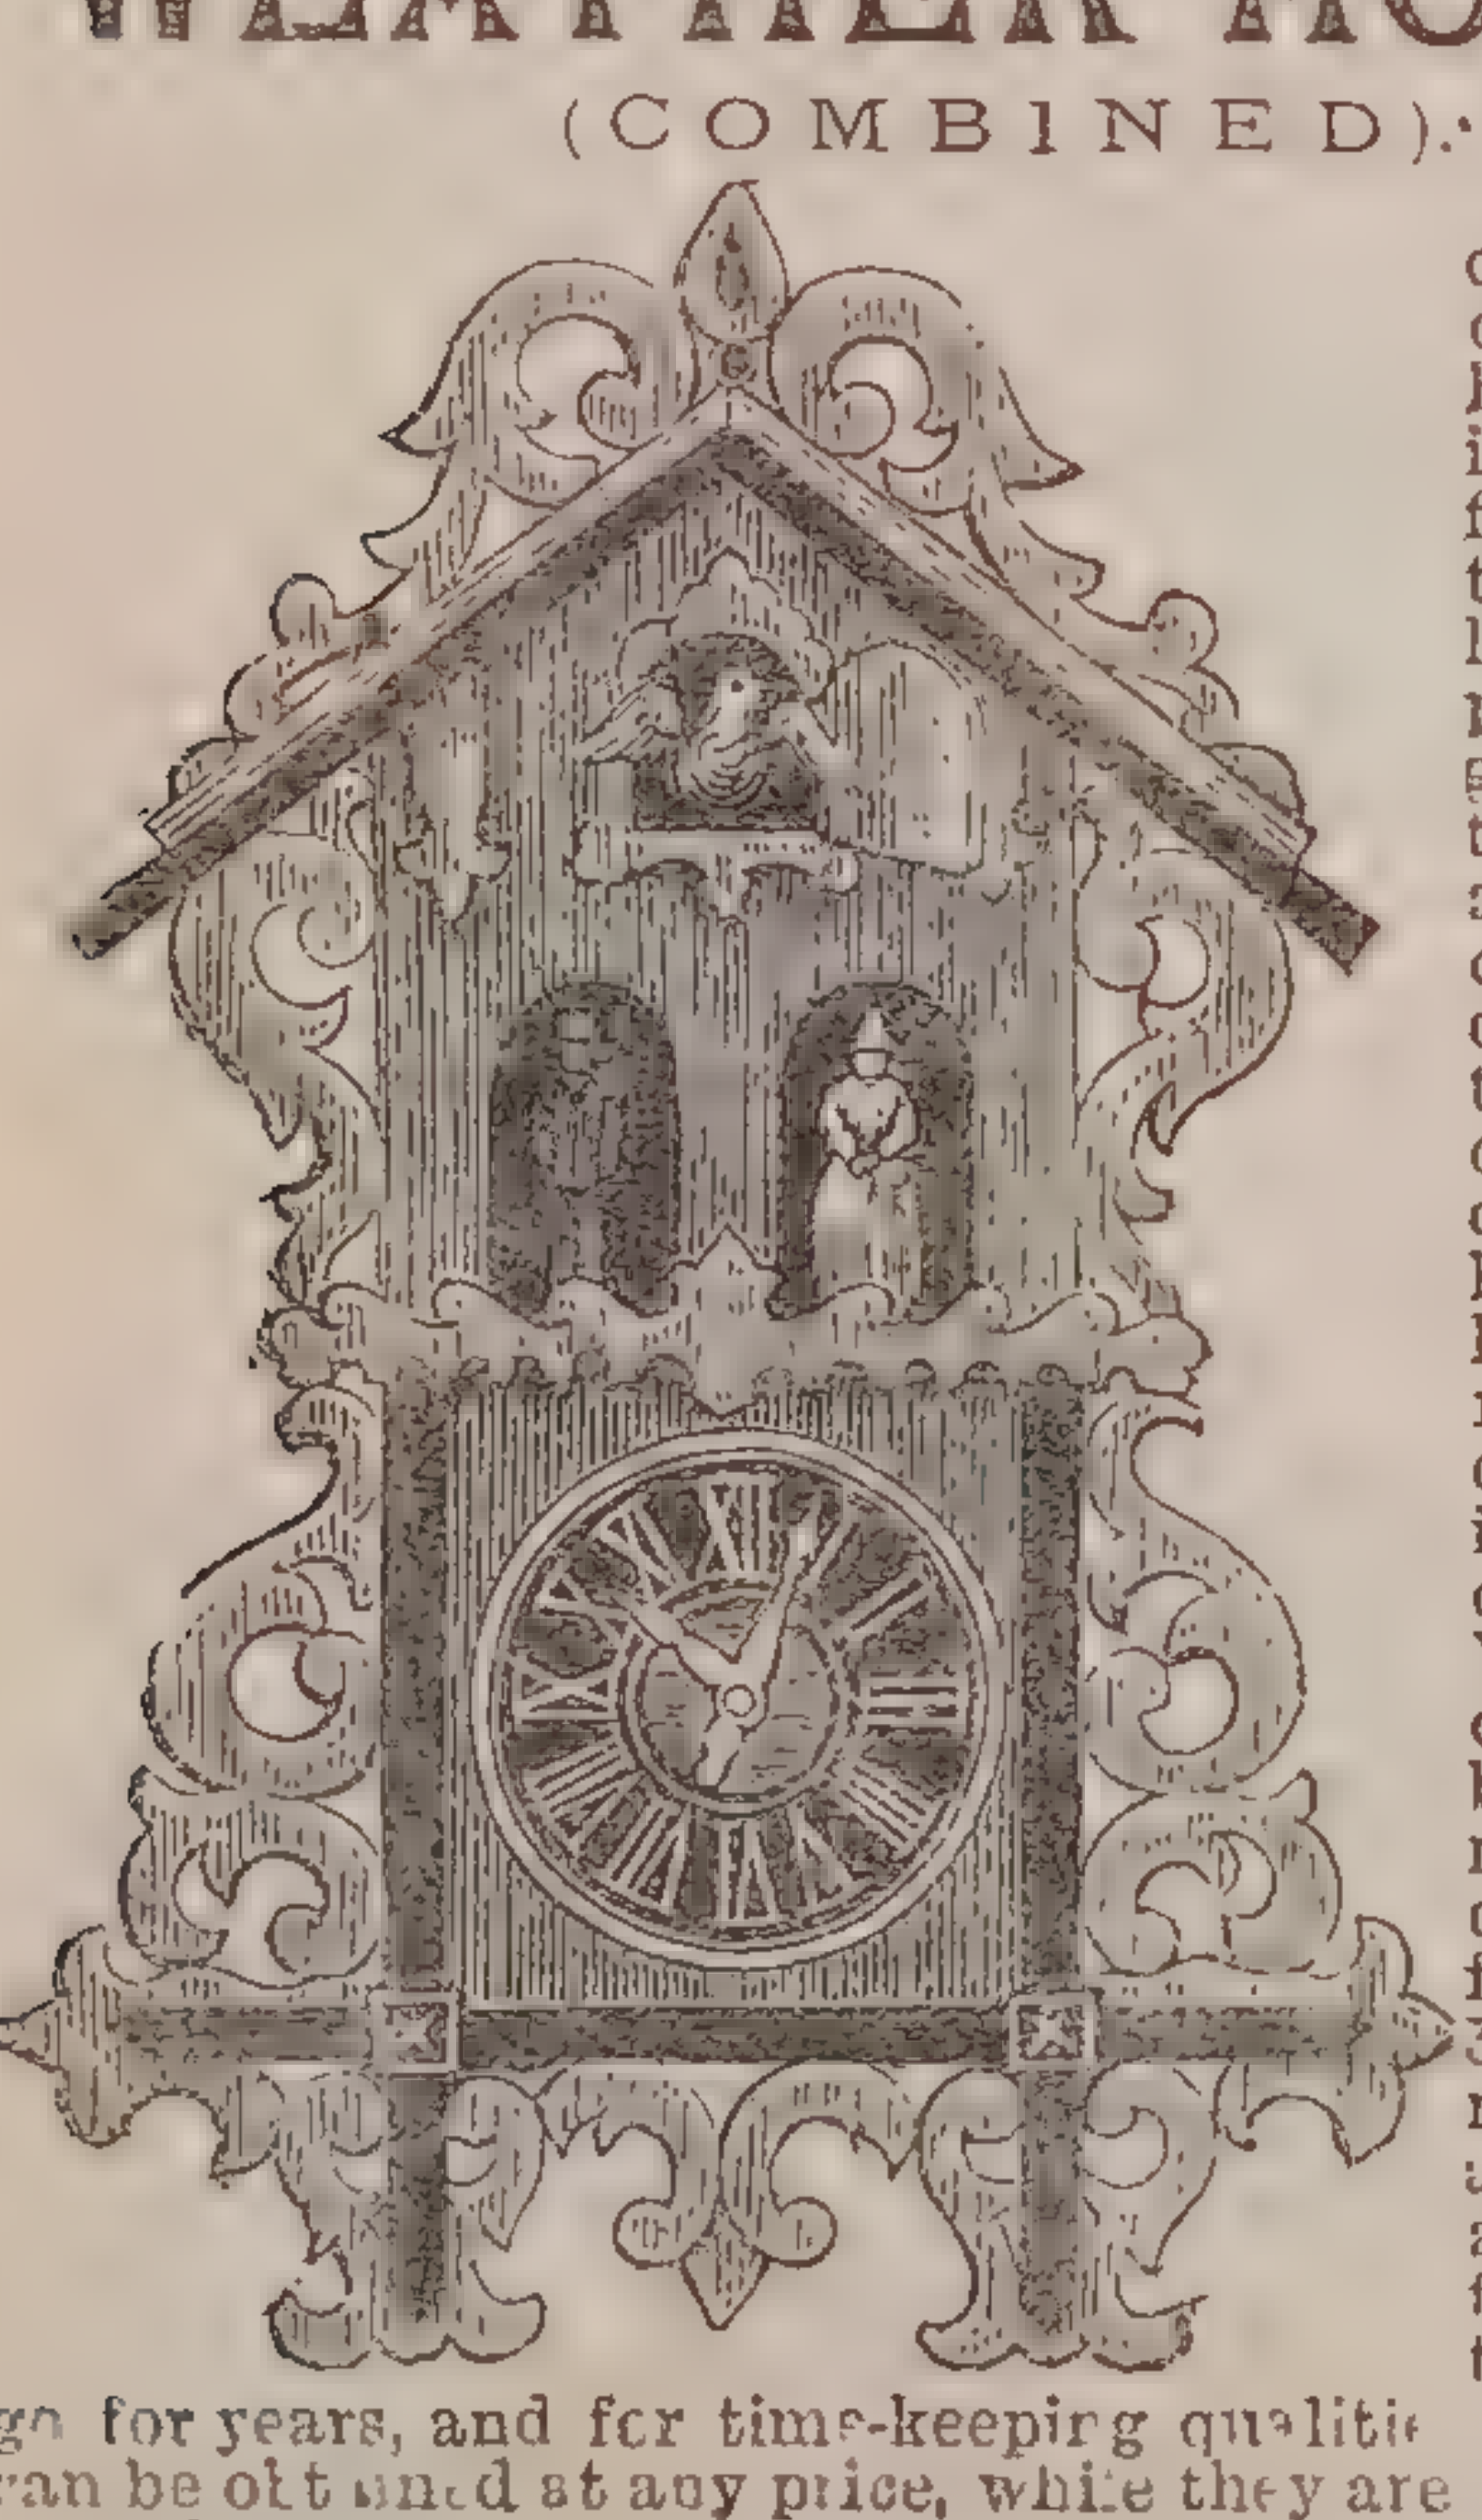
CUCKOO CLOCK and WEATHER HOUSE

(COMBINED).



A handsomely carved wood clock, 22in in height, with ivory hands and figures, strikes the hours and half hours on a powerful wire gong. Each time the clock strikes a charming little cuckoo pushes open a door at top of clock, and comes out, and cuckoos the hours and half hours, then retires, and the door closes after it. Above the clock is the Weather House, containing beautifully modelled figures of male and female peasants, 3in. high. The man comes out if about to be wet, and woman if fine. We warrant these clocks to go for years, and for time-keeping qualities no better clock can be obtained at any price, while they are ornamental and fit to decorate a palace.

A NEWSBOY HERO.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL teacher writes to The Thames Valley Times:—

"Thames Valley Times! Thames Valley Times!!" Such was the cry ringing out on the clear frosty air during the winter of 1886-87. There was nothing unusual about the cry, but the voice that uttered it had a charm for one household at least. There was a flutter in the kitchen as the cry drew nearer and nearer, for that little newsboy was a scholar in the Sunday-school where they went. He was also fatherless, had a bad cough, and supplemented the little store in the home by his newsvending. The cup of hot tea or cocoatina was always ready when he arrived at the door, but such was his desire to "sell out," that no temptation of fire or tea on the bitterest night would induce him to sit down; so, after standing and drinking the tea, with a slice of cake in his hand, away he would go with his "Thames Valley Times! Thames Valley Times!!" until his voice died away in the distance. Around the fire the cheery little "halfpenny" would be read, while the heads of the household would try and inculcate gratitude on those present by contrasting the little newsboy's trials with their own. Then spring and summer came, and went, and with it health and all the help from the quires of newspapers sold by the lad.

Another scene. Time, October, 1888. Place, a little room, neatly, but sparingly, and cleanly furnished, in one of the by-roads in Richmond, 'where the poor most do congregate.' And in the corner, in a little cot, lay our hero, for hero he was in the best sense. Conscious he was of the determination of the guardians to withhold help from his widowed mother, which she had received since the death of his father, unless she parted with him and other members of the family, and equally determined he had been that such should not be the case. So, giving up his boyish play after school (his attendance was compulsory), all efforts were directed to keep the home going. He succeeded, but now his rapid respiration, short, dry cough, and difficult expectoration told of early dissolution, and his anxious, wan, little face concern for his mother.

There was an anxiety to know how far Sunday-school training and Godly example had prepared him for the change that evidently awaited him. Naturally reticent, it was difficult to extract much from his lips, but there was no hesitation in his avowal to the writer that the fifty-first Psalm was his favourite, and on being pressed as to the special portion of that Psalm that suited him, he replied that "like David he prayed." The visitor bowed the knee and asked our heavenly Father for that precious grace which he said he needed, viz., "Patience to bear pain." The influence has been justly described as

Hushing every muttered murmur,
Makes our fortitude the firmer,
  And girds our soul with strength.
While no treason near her lurking,
"Patience" in her perfect working
  Remains queen at length.

This visit was but a fortnight before his decease. About four days after that visit, when grapes and beef-tea, &c., were all eschewed, a water bed provided, and weakness correspondingly increased, he had by his side his Bible and a hymn book containing one thousand hymns, mostly written by Puritans, and out of the mass he had selected Cowper's "There is a fountain filled with blood" as the one he liked best. A few days later, with a full knowledge of his approaching decease, he called his younger brother (aged eleven), who had undertaken his news rounds, and his mother to his bedside, settled up his worldly affairs, which consisted of dictating a list of those who had paid, and those who had not, and on the following morn went to be "for ever with the Lord."

On Thursday, October 25 last, he was laid by the side of his sister, who had been buried a short time previous, only a year older than himself, 15. His fellow scholars sang a hymn over his grave with the refrain "A hope beyond the grave." The minister spoke of the "good hope," and the grave-digger thought he "must have been a good sort of a boy to have all that preaching over him," and the scene closed. This little episode in a short life teaches us that the most common-place calling may be honoured; the most suffering and humble home cheered and helped, and Sunday-school teachers encouraged by the life and death of a newsboy.

[Very willingly do we give publicity to this pathetic little story. At the same time we think our correspondent must be at fault in some of his particulars respecting the guardians. The name of the poor lad may be obtained on application.—ED. Thames Valley Times.]

"TRADING."

In some families the children are encouraged to economise by putting the money given to them into money-boxes: a good plan, if it does not lead to covetousness. An American pastor has sought to encourage thrift and generosity. On New Year's Day he got two hundred new pennies from the Bank, and after explaining the parable of the talents to some children, gave each a penny, on the understanding that they would trade with it for the benefit of missionary work. The following Christmas Day the children, with the exception of five or six, presented the results of their labour and ingenuity, which amounted to about £12.

The methods adopted may be gathered from one or two specimens. One girl bought a pennyworth of wool, with which she knitted a pair of garters, and sold them for sixpence; with this she bought perforated card and silk, and made one or two little objects, which were sold for 2s.; and so on until she gained about 6s. A boy purchased some radish seed and sold his radishes for 1s. Another boy made a pen-wiper with some small pieces of cloth, sold it, and bought more cloth.

The products of their labour and ingenuity taught these children the pleasure of giving. Many English children do the same; but could not more begin to give of that which costs them some little self-denial?

SERVICES FOR CHILDREN.

A fortnight's services have been conducted by Mr. Josiah Spiers in the Lecture Hall, Dorking. Mr. Spiers' former visit to the town seven years ago resulted in great spiritual blessing. Notwithstanding the unfavourable weather, both afternoon and evening meetings were well attended; parties of children came in from the many villages round. On Sunday afternoon, at a united meeting of several of the Sunday-schools, 950 were present. Mr. Spiers, with his striking anecdotes and true narratives, has again won the love of the children. Many young hearts have been yielded to the Master's service. Teachers and scholars are rejoicing together.

Mr. Herbert W. Pewtress has concluded a nine days' mission at the Centenary Memorial School, Kennington. The effort has been most encouraging in point of numbers, and it has been crowned with God's blessing resting upon the labours of his servant. Many young hearts were drawn to Christ. Amongst the workers of this year were some of the senior scholars who were brought to Christ at a previous mission.

"TOO LATE NOW."

"It is too late now: I can truly say no man has cared for my soul." *

IT is too late now, though with face aglow,
  And with earnest interceding,
You tell the love of the Christ above;
  My heart is dead to pleading.

Full well I ween that it might have been,
  If someone before had spoken;
Ere my chains grew strong, ere they bound me long,
  They might have been burst and broken.

Had I heard in youth of the way of truth,
  My heart had been set a burning;
But I've trod too long in the paths of wrong,
  And now I am past returning.

Though they knew it well, none paused to tell
  That Jesus had died to save me;
On the husks I fed, but the living bread
  Not one of his people gave me.

At times we met where the feast was set,
  In some scene which the worldling pleases;
They spake of this earth, of its songs and mirth,
  But never a word of Jesus.

It is too late now, for my blood runs slow,
  And I'm nearing death's dark river;
On its wild waves hurled, to another world
  It will bear me away for ever.

BERACHAH MISSION, NEW YORK.

"HELL'S KITCHEN" is the name by which the neighbourhood surrounding this Mission is known; it will indicate the kind of people we are called to labour amongst. The Mission district covers ground between Thirtieth and Fourtieth-street, on the west side of the city, on the north river front, and contains a large number of the most desperate specimens of fallen humanity. Amongst these we have had very many blessed proofs of the wonderful saving and keeping power of Divine grace. The premises occupied by the Mission were erected by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Naylor. We make special efforts to reach the railroad-men, street car men, police officers, seamen, firemen, and others. Besides the Gospel services we have a free medical mission and industrial schools which have also been attended with very blessed success.

Amongst the branches of work are those in connection with the seamen, both in dealing with them personally and the holding of services on board while the ships lie in port. Although great blessing has attended these efforts, we are not satisfied, and desire to do more. The managers of the Mission are anxious to start a library for the use and benefit of the sailors. Up to the present, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Naylor have generously met all the expenses attached to the working of the Mission, and propose to continue to do so. But it is felt that many others would rejoice to help in this special effort. We can commence a suitable library for circulation amongst seamen for about 200 dollars.

WHEN YOU HEAR EVIL of anyone, suspend judgment. Do not decide till you have heard the man's defence. Do not run out to meet every heated whelp of malice that runs with its head down and its tongue out. The probability is that it is mad and will only bite those who attempt to entertain it.—Dr. Talmage.

Dr. Saphir on the Bible.—2.

Dr. Saphir's second address on the Bible, at St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington, on Thursday morning, last week, was listened to by a large and delighted audience. In the course of the devotional exercises, the first ten verses of 1 Cor. ii. were read, special attention being directed to the words of the Apostle to the effect that what man's genius or imagination could not discover as to the Divine ways and purposes "God hath revealed unto us by his Spirit."

The aspect of the subject now dealt with was that embodied in the proposition: The Bible is the Word of God. At the outset the speaker maintained that a book revelation is not unworthy of God. Indeed, it is according to the Divine wisdom and love that God, who revealed Himself in acts and in words unto the fathers, by prophets and apostles, should cause the entire revelation to be committed to writing in order that future generations might possess it in a form at once secure, complete, correct, and easy of access. Many great men have esteemed the Bible highly, as some men looked upon Christ from the outside and greatly admired Him. As, however, Christ's disciples were, on higher grounds, satisfied that He was the Son of God, and the Saviour of the world, so the friends of the Bible, enlightened from above, bear testimony that it is, indeed, the Word of God. Moreover, it was pointed out that, as Christ was rejected because He, "being a man, made Himself equal with God," so some reject the Bible because, though like other books, it yet claims to be divine.

Proceeding, Dr. Saphir showed that literature in general is ephemeral, books addressing themselves to limited sections of mankind. The Bible, however, is inexhaustible, and speaks to all. Books in general contain error, and, being imperfect, have to be supplemented; but the Bible is like gold tried in the fire, and not only is it free from error, but it contains the rectifying fire by which all other error as it arises may be discerned.

Man in his wisdom cannot find out God. Reason is not light creative, but light receptive. Learning, tradition, genius, will not discover what God has "prepared for those who love Him," but "God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." Of the things thus revealed, Dr. Saphir proceeded to single out six, of which the first was God. In its ignorance and its wisdom, in its sinfulness and its virtue, the world does not know God. Nature too does not reveal Him; when it pleases God to speak through nature, his existence, power, goodness, and wisdom are revealed, but not God Himself. All, however, who have drunk from the well of Scripture are convinced that God has revealed Himself to them. The Infinite and Incomprehensible One, dwelling in light that is unapproachable, condescends to make Himself known unto the children of men, even unto babes. The Eternal and Omnipresent One lives with us from day to day, and is the dwelling-place, home, and sanctuary of his people in all generations. The Holy One, who even charges his angels with folly, is yet the Redeemer and Saviour of sinners; though Just, He is nevertheless the justifier of the guilty. Terrible in his majesty and judgments, He is also tender and compassionate, merciful, patient, and long-suffering. Other attributes of the Almighty having been in like manner contrasted, attention was drawn to the fact that God is in the Bible spoken of as seeing, hearing, stretching out hands of help, rejoicing, and is otherwise brought to man's view in a way which the simplest may understand. Neither man or angel can comprehend God, or possess an intellectual knowledge of Him. God reveals Himself, not to the intellect, but to the whole man, to the heart, where mind and will meet in central unity. Scripture tells us nothing of the idea of God, the substance of God; none of these high-flown metaphysical notions. On the contrary, it speaks of the living face of God, and that is just what we want. The Bible, moreover, tells us of Jehovah—God in his aspects towards us. The speaker further pointed out, in an interesting manner, that the emphatic "I" and "I am the Lord" of the Old Testament appears in the New Testament in the form, "It is I," "I am He," and "I, Jesus."

The second great fact about which the Scriptures speaks is Man. Dwelling on this, Dr. Saphir pointed out that apart from revelation man does not know that the world was created by God. The Bible not only tells us that man was made in the image of God, but it records his fall and sinfulness. It shows man his sin without degrading him; his misery without driving him to despair; his exaltation, and all the while ascribes the glory and the honour to God. And, instead of dwelling on pre-Adamite and post-Adamite man, concerning whom some are given to speaking, it tells us of the deutero-Adamites, of the glorious future of humanity, when Christ "shall appear," and his people shall be "manifested with Him in glory," and be "made like Him," who is the Second Adam.

The third thing of which Scripture speaks is Grace, which is an attribute of God manifesting itself in righteousness, and based upon atonement or substitution. Grace is a golden thread running through Scripture, as atonement is a scarlet one. Here is the great difference between the Bible and all the religions of the world; whereas man tries to make himself more and more worthy before the Deity, the Bible declares that we begin with perfection—with the best robe given to us through the love of the Father by Jesus Christ.

The fourth fact touched upon was Incarnation. After some words of explanation, it was shown that just as truly as He lived here, and died upon the cross, so is the Son of Man now attending at the right hand of the Majesty on high as a mediator—rooted, so to speak, in the very centre of humanity, and also in the very centre of the Godhead—God and man being united in one person for all eternity. The speaker also pointed out that the Old Testament, equally with the New, exhibits the Messiah—the Angel of the Covenant, and the glory of the Lord.

Dr. Saphir then referred to the fifth fact, Communion with God. Having pointed out, with regard to the conduct of life, that morality and ethics are but other words for custom, he said that the Bible tells us that Enoch "walked with God," and that God told Abraham to "walk before Him." The ten commandments had for their object the guiding of men in walking with God, having communion with Him; the Sermon on the Mount, also, was spoken that we might be "perfect, as our Father in heaven is perfect."

Lastly, the Bible gives me a revelation of God's kingdom, which is not an abstraction, but a real purpose. The glories of the world's hope were mentioned under this head. Satan shall yet be bound, and God's will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. For God has revealed it in the Book, wherein his counsel is set forth to mankind. In conclusion, Dr. Saphir beautifully emphasised the fact that the things of which he had spoken could not have been known unless God had seen well to reveal them by his Spirit.

HARVEST THANKSGIVING SERVICES have been held at the Field-lane Refuges and Ragged Schools. The children and teachers of the Bible Ragged Schools brought their offerings of fruit and flowers, which were sent to the patients of the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's Inn-road. On the second day, the mothers and the ladies conducting the Mothers' Meeting presented their thankofferings, which were divided amongst the Holborn and St. Pancras Infirmaries and the Royal Free Hospital.

ROMANISM IN CANADA.

The Protestants of Canada are waking up to the dangers to which their country is exposed through the rapid progress of Romanism in the province of Quebec. The subject was discussed last month at a meeting of a Christian Conference in connection with the Evangelical Alliance held in Montreal. Principal Barbour, of the Congregational College, in the course of a brief address, remarked upon the worldly ways of Rome, and said that in Montreal, where Roman Catholics are four times as numerous as Protestants, if anyone tries to put a man on the right road, he is more hated than one who tries to lead his neighbour astray.

Principal MacVicar, of the Montreal Presbyterian College, read an exhaustive paper on the subject. Throughout the Dominion, with the exception of the Province of Quebec, all religious denominations enjoy much the same legal status. In Quebec, however, the Church of Rome has a conspicuous advantage, being distinctly established by law. This position was acquired by stages, and the clergy are now fully empowered to collect tithes and levy taxes as they may deem necessary for Church purposes. As it seems that any legislation that may be desired may be now procured by the Church in the Provincial Parliament, it is feared that the liberties of the people will in the future be still more seriously encroached upon.

The speaker went on to give some idea of the immense sum raised in taxes in the province, computed at eight million dollars per annum; and to speak of Church possessions in lands, churches, and other institutions, amounting to over sixty million dollars. The figures are taken from Roman Catholic sources, and admittedly they understate, by a great deal, the actual facts. Some of the ecclesiastical orders are also known to be very wealthy; the Sulpicians, for example, are said to be richer than the Bank of Montreal. Some towns and villages are, to a large extent, ecclesiastical property, and are accordingly exempt from municipal taxation. The speaker also pointed out that in raising money, the Romish Church systematically uses lotteries, wheels of fortune, and other methods thoroughly corrupting to the hearts and consciences of the people.

He went on to allude to the poverty and stagnation produced by the exactions and teachings of the Church of Rome demand the attention of all true patriots. It is obvious that no people, however industrious and frugal, can prosper under such grinding impositions. The Church has breathed the spirit of stagnation into her votaries in Quebec, and some of the parishes are now very much what they were a century ago. In educational matters, also, the Romish ascendancy makes itself felt, and among other ominous indications is the activity of the Jesuits, who have actually received a large grant from the public funds in respect of estates which were confiscated when the order was suppressed at the end of the last century. In conclusion, the speaker gave some advice as to means whereby the stagnation may be broken and the intrigues defeated.

Among other speakers was Rev. Dr. King, of New York, who remarked that the Pope has a hand stretched across the sea wherewith to take America by the throat. The land which God long kept veiled, in order that all the down-trodden of the earth, all the outcasts, all the victims of monarchical and other tyrannies might find a refuge in it—that land is coveted by the Pope. Americans must, however, see that their free institutions are not linked with the system which the Pope of Rome represents.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN BELFAST.—Notwithstanding that the mission has been in progress for six weeks, the evangelist continues to preach the Gospel with marvellous power, and to secure the attention of the vast congregations which throng to hear his words.

Rest for Wearied Workers.

Whatever may be the peculiar attributes of the present age, laziness is not one of them. Competition is writ large everywhere, and in its best sense it is by no means wanting in the wide field of Christian effort. There is to-day a holy rivalry among the servants of the Great Master in spending and being spent for the good of their fellows. But men and women are not machines, and the disciples need more than ever to hear the voice of their Lord, "Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile." Many of those who have no well-appointed homes of their own are enabled to obey the call through Miss Mason's Houses of Rest at Kilburn and Eastbourne. In the words of one of its beneficiaries, the Mission is a long-felt "missing link."

Quite a number of those who have shared in the benefits of the Houses gathered in Exeter Hall on Tuesday evening, last week, for the annual meeting, over which the Hon. Henry Noel, a tried friend of the work, presided.

Miss Mason began her statement with the balance sheet, which was applicable to the year ending March 31. It showed a balance to the good of nearly £800, reckoning for a special donation of £1400, and a payment of £750 for the freehold of the Eastbourne House. Speaking of the "majority fund," which was projected last year, Miss Mason told how, in answer to definite prayer last March, the money needed for the purchase of the freehold came in the very nick of time. A little has also been done in the way of providing for aged and incapacitated workers. The needs of these are a heavy burden on Miss Mason's mind, and she made a touching appeal that they should not be forgotten. Passing from the money question, it was stated that during the year about six hundred weary workers had passed through the two Houses of Rest, besides many casual visitors. As to testimony with respect to the usefulness of the Homes, there were plenty, she said, who would gladly render it if the opportunity were given.

Some exceedingly helpful words then came from Rev. F. B. Meyer. He said that two words casually used by Miss Mason, "prayer and perseverance," were the keynote and the secret of the success of her work. In the harvest field there are not only the reapers and gleaners, but those who carry refreshment to the workers; and this is the blessed mission that Miss Mason's Houses so delicately fulfil. The Master does not wish that any of his servants should be overstrained or neglected, and this institution is one of his messengers of mercy. In the days of his flesh He invited his tired disciples to "Come and dine" after a long night of toil; in the Houses of Rest He is but repeating these acts of tender care and thoughtfulness. Addressing the workers, Mr. Meyer said, when God gives them a good time of this sort, let them make the most of it. They need not be afraid of his taking them behind the door afterwards and giving them a little private chastisement for being too happy. Workers sometimes complain, on the other hand, that they have lost their joy in their work; let them go on, even if it be "in the dark," and not think too much of their personal joy, which of itself is no test of being right with God. The great thing is to know that we are doing God's will, whatever may be the evident success. If we would win power in service, it can only be done as we are co-workers with and under Christ. We want to be where He is working, and to know, not that He is helping us, but that we are helping Him. After all, God Himself is the great dwelling-place and resting-place for the weary worker; let us abide in Him, amid all the chafe and fret of this busy life.

After the collection, the Chairman called for testimonies from the body of the meeting. A gentleman was the first to respond, and he said the kindness he received at Eastbourne, whither he went jaded and worn, overwhelmed him, and he returned to his work "wound up" in body and mind, and better equipped for service. A lady followed suit, and spoke most warmly of the way in which she was nursed through an illness at Kilburn, and directed to a new and happy sphere of work. She thanked God she was not one of the workers who lacked joy in service. Another brother, a colporteur, said he never had such a time all the holidays he ever had as when he went to Eastbourne. God's presence pervaded the House, and since then he had much more power and happiness in his work than before. During his stay he never heard a cross word or saw a frown. Before that he was so greatly broken down and discouraged that he thought of retiring, but now he had wonderful joy in his work. The balance was kept even by further testimony from a lady in the gallery, as to spiritual as well as physical blessing received. There were still other "testifiers," and this was a singularly interesting part of the evening's programme. "It's so nice," said one, "to feel you have got nothing to do; that you can just lie down and rest as long as you need to." This good friend had a word of praise, too, for the Kilburn doctor, and she was specially thankful for the absence of the alcohol. From these testimonies, it will be seen, that the advantages of the Houses are open to both sexes.

Pleasant and encouraging words followed from Rev. J. S. Russell, D.D., who aptly compared the Houses to John Bunyan's "House Beautiful." He told a striking story of one who, when a poor Bible-woman, had the chance of having a fortune of £80,000 if she would become a Roman Catholic. She kept a good conscience, and lost her fortune; but she is happy in her work as a Bible-woman still, and has been greatly blessed in being one of Miss Mason's guests. Mr. T. A. Denny wound up the speechifying in his peculiarly genial and mirth-provoking vein, and everybody went away, if appearances may be trusted, as happy as if they had received that fortune of £80,000, without the unpleasant proviso.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

This estimable organisation continues to carry on good work in many needy centres in the Metropolis. Over a hundred active members attended a meeting held a few days ago at Bethnal Green, to review operations, and see what other means of Christian labour could be devised. The open-air services of the past season were reported to have been much blessed, the converts including a notorious infidel who had for years opposed Gospel preaching, but has now become a helper in the very work which, in ignorance, he formerly endeavoured to destroy.

Two mission-halls in the East of London, one at Blackwall and the other at Canning Town, have recently been taken over by the Society, These are the centres of many good agencies, and it is hoped that, with God's blessing, they will prove increasingly useful in neglected localities.

Since October last the mission-hall in Thrawl-street, Spitalfields, has been opened nightly for the reception of those having nowhere to sleep. Most of the poor men seeking this refuge are comparatively young, many of them strong and able to work. They all tell the same tale of inability to get anything to do, and their wretched condition is pitiable in the extreme. After the night's rest they are supplied with breakfast, and then they all stay during a Gospel service. Further details of these good operations may be had from the secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 28, Enfield-road, Kingsland, N.

WORK AMONG FRENCH WOMEN.

By Mrs. HENRY FOWLER.

It may interest some of your readers to hear of a quiet work of evangelisation that has been greatly blessed to many poor families in Paris and elsewhere, and which at the present time is restricted in its operations for want of help.

At the time of the Franco-German war, a gentleman residing in Paris sent his wife to England for safety. She came under the notice of some members of the Society of Friends, one of whom was a native of the South of France, and always retained an ardent longing for the spiritual good of her "pauvres compatriotes," as she called them. During the time of retreat from the horrors of war, Mdme. Dalencourt, the lady referred to, occupied herself in studying philanthropic work in England conducted by ladies. Mothers' meetings engaged her special attention, and she believed that, should she be restored to her country and her home, it would become a duty, to which she was called by God, to devote herself to the elevation of her poorer neighbours by this means.

When peace was made, she returned to Paris, to find that many Communists had been arrested, and their families were left destitute. She made a beginning amongst these, and they responded to her invitation. Whilst they worked with their needles on materials provided at cost price, she read and explained the Bible to them, comforting them with motherly assiduity, so that, when their husbands were released at the end of their term of imprisonment, they found their homes and families so improved that it had a marked effect for good on these misguided men.

I cannot do more than touch briefly on the results of Mdme. Dalencourt's able management of the work which she carries on under the sanction of a committee of ladies in London; as far as they can, they assist her by means and advice. As the work has grown under her hands, Mdme. Dalencourt has availed herself of the progress in Christian knowledge and conduct of some of the women to make use of them among their own class. At the present time she has three whom she is training to visit the sick as Bible-women, hoping that they may advance to be Bible-nurses.

In the provinces sewing meetings have been opened one after another by Protestant French ladies, more or less in connection with those in Paris. In several places lending libraries, classes for girls, savings banks, clothing clubs, &c., have sprung up. All these necessitate expenditure, which, though carried on with strict economy, outstrips the rate at which means come into the hands of the committee. Help will be thankfully received by myself, or by Mrs. Braithwaite, 312, Camden-road, N.; and the last report will be gladly sent to anyone desiring to know more of the work now being carried on in seventeen different places.

Woodford, Essex.

HEREFORDSHIRE.—Mr. Leonard Weaver is spending some time in the villages of this county, visiting the homes of the people during the day, and holding services in the evening. His address is South-villa, Leominster.

MR. ARTHUR H. DE ROUGEMONT, from Switzerland, who has for several years been connected with Mr. McAll's Mission in France, is now in England, on behalf of the Parisian Committee of the French Home Mission, known as the "Œuvre Nationale des Conférences." This Mission has for its object the promotion and revival of spiritual life in the country, and, taking advantage of the liberty guaranteed by the new French constitution, it has sent pioneers into some sixty Departments of the Empire. A few days ago M. Rougemont addressed a meeting at Basingstoke, on the urgent needs of France and the greatness of the present opportunity for evangelisation. He would be glad to plead the same cause in other centres, and communications may be addressed to him, care of Mr. Percy Crosse, Northumberland-chambers, Charing-cross, W.C.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Dr. Bickersteth, Bishop of Exeter.

The fresh murder-and-mutilation horror in the East-end of London suggests many saddening reflections as to the depths of human depravity. Several correspondents suggest that there should be earnest and united prayer to God for the discovery of the assassin. The Times, in a leading article, well says that, instead of undeserved criticism of the police, there should be

> Deep searching of heart, humiliation of spirit, and sorrowful reflection over the causes which make these unspeakable atrocities possible.

It is one comforting thought amid the gloom, that many Christian ladies are bestirring themselves to consider the case of those unhappy sisters from whose ranks all the victims have been taken.

> DEMORALISING PUBLICATIONS.
>
> Mr. Jennings asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Government would take into consideration the necessity for adopting more stringent measures for the suppression of the thieves' literature and other demoralising and indecent publications which are now so extensively circulated among the young, and which led to the Tunbridge Wells murder and so many other crimes.
>
> Mr. Matthews: The Government are as anxious as my hon. friend to suppress demoralising and indecent publications, and the recent prosecution of the publisher of M. Zola's works by the direction of the Attorney-General is an instance of their action in this direction. It must be borne in mind that prosecutions sometimes do more harm than good, by making obscure publications more widely known; and that it is desirable not to prosecute unless it is tolerably certain that a jury will convict. Subject to these considerations, the Government are prepared to take all the measures that the law permits.

In Gil Blas, a French paper which the editor of Le Christianisme au XIXième Siècle calls "despicable," a writer, in connection with some remarks on a new book, "Le Fin du Monde," says:—

> We have no longer any chapel in which to kneel, no faith to cling to, no God to pray to. Our heart is empty, our soul is widowed of the ideal and of hope. Ah, sir, you who have the happiness of believing in a Sovereign Master, beseech Him to reveal Himself to us! Time is drawing to a close (les temps sont accomplis). We stretch out our hands in despair towards the inexorable heavens. Oh! that a Messiah would come down and restore to us hope and love; listening to his Divine word we would follow Him to the conquest of a new world, for we hunger to suffer and to die for a faith and an idea.

Is not this heart-breaking? says the editor of Le Christianisme—this cry of distress, sincere or not (and why should it not be sincere?). Is it not the Christian who should respond to the appeal?

"A Mother" writes that a family of seven, during the recent "week of self-denial," saved £1 6s. in quality rather than in quantity, and by foregoing extras and luxuries. She adds that in many households a much larger sum might be saved, "if we mothers and mistresses, aided by our Christian servants, prayed over and planned a real week of self-denial for Christ's sake, and tried to make it so pleasant that a second week would not be dreaded." To which it may be added that the terms of our discipleship are, "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me."

Last week we expressed a hope that the recent sentence upon a publisher of impure books would be impartially applied to other booksellers. We are glad to know that in Liverpool, at any rate, the authorities are sensible of their responsibilities in the matter; a bookseller has been charged with selling a copy of one of these vile publications. With anything like zeal on the part of the police, the traffic might soon be reduced to a comparatively trifling minimum; we trust that those of our readers who are interested in the purity of our youth will not fail to direct the attention of the local police to places where the books are being sold.

We may say that our remark of last week as to the continued public exposure in London of this literary filth still holds good. Sir Charles Warren, we observe, has resigned his post; but we would draw the attention of Dr. Anderson, chief of the Criminal Investigation Department, to the fact we have stated.

Those who have enjoyed Richard Jefferies' many charming papers and books on country life and surroundings, will be glad to learn from Mr. Walter Besant's "Eulogy," recently published, that for a considerable period before his death, the dying author's time was spent in the study of the Gospel according to Luke, and in prayer with his wife.

The official statement recently made by Lord Salisbury with regard to the East African slave trade justifies the hope of a more effective blow being struck at this accursed traffic than has so far been possible. Hitherto a fatal obstacle in the way of its suppression has been that it was carried on with impunity under the French flag, and no vessel running under such colours could be searched. France having now conceded the right of search, which Lord Salisbury termed "of priceless value," the contemplated joint blockade of this very difficult coast will, it is trusted, have the result not only of rendering this trade impossible, but also of stopping the importation of arms and powder. But why should not England, France, Germany, and Portugal hold a conference, and join heart and soul in some well-considered scheme for completing the work which Livingstone and Gordon so nobly began? In the words of a correspondent of The Times:—

> Have our Christianity and civilisation done so little for us that the very idea of getting Englishmen, Frenchmen, and Germans round another table to talk this question out must be sneered at as the dream of an enthusiast, or the mischief of a busybody?

We trust there is no truth in the growing rumour that the Government intend to oppose some of the clauses of the Bill for extending to the five large towns the Irish Sunday Closing Act, and that they will propose an amendment, under which the hours of trading in these places on Sunday would simply be cut short by two hours. Such a step would be a blow at the best interests of the Irish people, the better portion of whom will hail with satisfaction any legislation reducing the terrible temptations of the Saturday night, as well as of the Lord's Day.

Just and most needed were the words lately uttered by the Earl of Lichfield, at a meeting of the Y.M.C.A., Stafford:—

> They knew what pain and trouble it was to themselves to see the Book upon which they depended for everything pulled to pieces right and left by people who seemed to vie with each other to see how much they could take out of it, and how little they could leave in it.

Referring to the recent Church Congress, the Earl went on to say:—

> He did not know what young people were to think of the discussions which took place on the subject of Bible criticism. He wished the Bishops and Deans and Doctors of Divinity and Church authorities generally would conduct some of their discussions in private, until they had agreed among themselves as to what they could remove from the Bible with satisfaction to themselves, and then let the public know the result.

This recommendation does not mean that doctors of divinity should hold esoteric doctrines, but that they should refrain from unsettling the mind of the people on points on which there is no common agreement. This is but to do what is done by all true scientists. A new speculation of an eminent man of science is first discussed by the Fellows of the learned Society to which he belongs. Maybe it is exploded, and the public hear no more of it. It would seem, however, to be thought right that every new notion of what is called the "higher criticism" should be at once paraded before the world. A very heavy responsibility rests on those who attend congresses and conferences to air their rationalistic speculations, and weaken faith in the claims and authority of Scripture.

Whatever these ecclesiastical speculators may think, many devout and simple-minded believers are feeling much indignation on this matter. Congregations hear pulpit discussions on inspiration, while Oxford professors come and tell them that parts of the Old Testament history are no more veritable than Greek mythologies. Those who know that such teaching is opening the floodgates of profligacy demand that the teachers of this destructive criticism shall be agreed among themselves (which they are very far from being) before they disturb other minds with their immature theories and hasty conclusions. Attacks from infidels may be borne, but surely professed Christian teachers ought to be sure of their ground before they adopt such a rôle.

No work can be more Christian than to wait at the prison gates in order to divert the criminal stream into another and wholesome channel. This good work, in which the St. Giles' Mission and Mrs. Meredith's Mission to Women are prominent agencies, is not in vain. There is a manifest diminution in the returns of criminals to prison. In 1878 the average number of prisoners was 21,000. For the year ending March last the number was reduced to 14,500. Female prisoners show a still more gratifying rate of decrease, and these are specially the objects of Christian effort. It is true these returns are not exclusively for Metropolitan prisons, but the decrease is in the scenes where the Prison Missions are at work, and no efforts are better entitled to prayer and support.

In a paper on Socialism at the recent Leeds Church Conference, the Earl of Meath said that there could be no alliance between Christians and advocates of murder and robbery, and urged that Churchmen should not allow feelings of ignorance and bigotry to prevent them from joining hands with the Christian Socialists in supporting some of the reforms advocated by the latter. The Bishop of Ripon, in closing the discussion, pleaded that although advantages might accrue from the promotion of a large social spirit, yet the power of individualism ought to be maintained.

These words of the Bishop seem to denote at once the weak point in Socialism, as generally understood, and that which differentiates it from Christianity. The tendency of Socialistic theories hitherto has been towards State control, compulsion, and provision, the inevitable result of which would be to weaken personal Christian responsibility. It is not by experiments upon society at large that the individual can be improved; the process must be reversed. The first step must be the regeneration of the individual; there can be no true social reform, no effectual remedy for the present abuses of property and glaring anomalies, which does not run upon the lines of Christianity as laid down eighteen hundred years ago in the Sermon on the Mount.

BRISTOL Y.M.C.A.

The attendance of Mr. Sankey gave peculiar interest to the thirty-eighth annual meeting of the Bristol Y.M.C.A., which was held a few days ago. The Association is the centre of many intellectual and social agencies, which are to be increasingly appreciated in the city, and it is gratifying to note that the more definite Christian effort is leaving its impression upon the community.

Last year closed with a membership of 618, showing a steady increase. The Bible-classes are well attended, and the department in which younger members are specially looked after, is one of the most interesting details of the Association's work. General Christian work in the city and neighbourhood has been greatly helped by members and officers of the Association, upon whom calls are more frequently made as time goes by.

Rev. Talbot Greaves delivered a vigorous address on "The Word of God." He urged the young men to stand up in defence of the Bible. Apostles of doubt would liberate us from what they are pleased to call bibliolatry, and it needs a vast deal of moral courage for a young man to profess the old-fashioned belief in the inspiration of the Word of God. Not to be ashamed of the unpopular side was the point specially emphasised, and the address was highly appreciated.

A NEW MISSION HALL has been erected in Oak-road, Church-road, Willesden, and was recently opened. The new building is the outcome of a work commencing in two rooms of a small cottage some eighteen months ago. The various meetings are well attended by the people in the district. The hall accommodates about 150 persons, and has been built largely at the expense of Mr. John Willey.

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME has been greatly moved by a mission which Rev. Thomas Cook has held there. Most of the churches have partaken of the fruits of the revival. One very pleasing feature of the mission was seen in a general awakening among the workpeople employed in a local factory. About one hundred persons engaged at these works have professed conversion, and that circumstance has naturally attracted very great attention. The Roman Catholic priest of the town, having heard of this remarkable revival in a business house, called upon the proprietor with a view to investigate the matter. This gentleman, being an earnest Christian, seized the opportunity to instruct the priest in the vital doctrine of justification by faith, and the interview between the layman and the priest did not terminate until a two-hours' conversation had taken place between them.

THE FOREIGN FIELD.

YOUNG MEN AND MISSIONS.

Members of the Y.M.C.A. in various parts of the country really mean to help the cause of foreign missions. This was made clear on Thursday evening, last week, at the fifth annual meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association Foreign Mission Society, held at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. Mr. George Williams presided, and there was a large muster of young men. The report, read by Mr. J. H. Putterill, showed that during last year eighteen associations united themselves to the Society, while several others still have the matter under consideration. The Society assists students in securing training before leaving for work abroad, and this is regarded as one of the most interesting features of its work.

The need for earnest testimony for Christ abroad was remarked upon by the Chairman in some stirring words. He hoped that means would be devised whereby business young men may go abroad and support themselves while preaching the Gospel, or whereby Christian workers desiring to be self-supporting may be assisted. Mr. Williams called for hearty praise to God for open doors all over the world.

Rev. T. W. Drury, Principal of the Church Missionary College, delivered an address, in which he commended the activity of the young men in the matter of missions, and spoke of the prerequisites to testimony for Christ in a foreign land. He showed the importance of all-round preliminary training, as nothing comes amiss to the missionary. Therefore, at the college over which he presides, the educational curriculum is accompanied by technical and practical instruction, so that workers may turn their hand, among other things, to carpentry, printing, and even giving medical advice and assistance to the sick and needy.

After expressing pleasure at finding the young men earnest on this subject, Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Foreign Secretary of the London Missionary Society, addressed himself to answering the question, "Are Missions a Failure?" He maintained that, if all that had been said about the failure of missions were true, it would yet remain that Christ lives and is supreme; that He is the Saviour of the world, and that, wherever his name is known, men turn from darkness to light.

Brief addresses were delivered by Messrs. Thomas Macoun (of the Pastors' College), H. N. Lachlan (of the Chancery Bar), Edward Hunt (also a member of the legal profession), and Thomas Selkirk (a bright young man of good business experience), all of whom are about to leave for spheres of labour in connection with the China Inland Mission. All were members of the Y.M.C.A. Their words were listened to with much pleasure, and prayer was offered to God that their testimony for Christ may be crowned with abundant blessing.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

On Monday evening General Booth presided over a large and enthusiastic missionary demonstration in Exeter Hall for the farewell of about fifty officers leaving for various countries. The party included a captain and officers for Germany, workers for Holland and Sweden, nine English officers for Canada, and twenty-six for India. Of these last six were returned coloured warriors, and twenty were whites, all Canadians, selected from no fewer than 300 volunteers from the Dominion.

Having pledged their fidelity to God and the Salvation Army, the men for Holland left the meeting to take ship without delay. Other parties were described, and details given of the progress of the Army work in the countries to which they are designated. The officers seemed, as a whole, to be men of superior parts, but the bravest of the brave were the Indian contingent. One of them, named Gough, announced as a relative of the renowned temperance orator, made a very able address. Among the other speakers were Major Musa Bhai, and Lieuts. Aorotulo and Mahkaberer. The first of these Tamil gentlemen has developed much power in English speech, with which the last, a Cinghalese lady, is also quite at home. All the addresses had the right ring about them, and the devotional exercises were characterised, as usual, by much fervour. The meeting voted a message of sympathy with "the prisoner of Chillon," great indignation being expressed at the action of the Swiss authorities in hindering the work of Captain Stirling in Canton Vaud.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

While the Salvation Army were demonstrating in the hall above, many friends of the China Inland Mission gathered in the Lower Exeter Hall, on Monday evening, to say good-bye to fifteen friends soon to proceed to China. A special interest attached to the meeting from the fact that seven of the band were Y.M.C.A. men. In presiding, Mr. George Williams touchingly alluded to this gratifying circumstance, and said he hoped many more would proceed to the foreign field in connection with the Associations. In the course of the evening all these friends told something of how they had been led out into this service and asked to be borne up in prayer by the stay-at-homes. Very interesting addresses were given by Rev. W. Cooper and Dr. Randle, both of whom are returning to China. Mrs. Randle, Mrs. Cooper, Miss H. Mackenzie, and Miss Grabham also spoke some suitable words in turn. At the close of the proceedings a party of American missionaries were greeted; some are going to Burmah to enter on work, others are returning from Persia on furlough.

A deep note of sorrow and sadness was struck by Mr. Broomhall in announcing the news, just received, of the death of Mr. H. L. Norris, teacher in the school at Chefoo, and also of Mr. A. C. Dorward. The former succumbed to hydrophobia, caused by the bite of a dog; the details of the latter's death have not yet come to hand. Mr. Broomhall stated that with the parties who have already left from England and America, and those about to sail, fifty-five new missionaries would have been sent out this year.

LADY MISSIONARIES FOR INDIA.

On Saturday afternoon a large company of friends assembled in the Morley Hall, Regent-street, W., by invitation of the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, to bid "God-speed" to seven lady missionaries, three returning to their posts, and four going out for the first time to labour in India. Lord Kinnaird presided. Mr. W. T. Paton and Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke addressed the missionaries, two of whom have been members of Mr. Sherbrooke's church (Portman Chapel, Baker-street, W.), whilst a third is to be entirely supported by his congregation. Rev. F. B. Meyer and five of the ladies also spoke, and prayer was offered commending the missionaries to God in their future work.

CHELSTON, TORQUAY.—Mr. Henry Bray, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a mission in Chelston Mission Hall. The preaching of the Word has been much blessed. This mission is carried on under the superintendency of the Dowager Countess of Castlestuart.

THE BIBLE IN THE GLASGOW EXHIBITION.—At a meeting of the Directors of the National Bible Society of Scotland, it was stated that thousands visited the stall daily, inspecting with interest the Scriptures, in two hundred different languages and dialects. Upwards of 21,000 copies have been sold, a large proportion to the working classes.

MR. J. C. RAINEY has been having a good work amongst the red-coats at Miss Daniell's Soldiers' Home, Aldershot. Besides evangelistic services for the rank and file, drawing-room meetings for officers and their families have been held, as well as afternoon meetings for soldiers' wives, and all of these have been attended with most encouraging results.

Times of Refreshing in India.

During the Daschra Festival among the Hindus, when the deeds of "gods which are no gods" are rehearsed all over the North-West Provinces and Oudh, the missionaries are unable to do much in the way of aggressive Christian work. For some years past, therefore, missionaries of all denominations in the region have assembled at this period of the year for spiritual refreshment, and prayer to God for increased power for service. The meetings have always been held at Lucknow, which, being a central point, has also the advantage of a large and influential European and Native Christian Church, the members of which, with the visitors, are accordingly brought under the influences of this "Christian Dasehra."

The session this year extended from October 10th to 14th, and the proceedings were reported at length in The Bombay Guardian of October 20. At one of the meetings, Rev. Dr. Johnson, presiding elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church, alluded to the fact that there are at present some thousands of Hindus all over the country who are intellectually convinced of the truth. Having, however, to face casting out from home in the event of their confessing Christ, they hesitate to give proof of their faith. Missionaries are being asked how they would provide for such converts if they should become Christians? In answer, he pointed out that Christ had the same difficulty to face. It will be remembered, moreover, that He had nothing to give his converts, and though He told them that He "had not where to lay his head," thousands followed Him. Dr. Johnson maintained that the problem will be solved by the power of Christ resting upon every Christian worker in India; then thousands of the people will be found willing to give up all for Him.

In an exhaustive address on "The Fulness of the Spirit," Rev. J. N. Forman said: Every Christian, weak or strong, has the Holy Spirit. That is the one great difference between a moral Mohammedan or Hindu and a Christian; one has, and the other has not, the Holy Spirit. But the command is, "Be filled with the Spirit." This fulness of the Spirit is wanted for active service. It gives wisdom, holiness, courage, and power. The knowledge of God is by the Holy Ghost. "They that know the Lord shall do exploits."

Dr. McCoy, of The Indian Witness, spoke on "Walking with God." This is not a temporary experience, by fits and starts, but the current of the life. There are some people who, in momentary ecstasies, seem to go into the third heaven, but the current of their life is earthly, sensual, devilish. Walking with God is the source of power. Many speakers followed on the same subject, most of them dwelling upon the necessity of a childlike trustfulness.

Rev. W. H. Hollister spoke on the admonition: "Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another." Man's way of saying things is, "Confess one another's faults, and pray for yourself," but God's command was to confess one's own faults and pray for others. When the speaker had sat down, many others spoke briefly, and amongst them a clergyman, who thanked God that he had been present, and asked the prayers of everyone, as he intended, by God's grace, to go home and confess his bad temper to his heathen native servants.

In the course of a powerful address, Rev. F. W. Warne pointed out that the way to get at the Rajah is to convert the coolie; when the Rajah is in spiritual want, he will seek for the spiritual peace he has seen in the coolie. The early Church was built upon this principle. The first that were converted were slaves, and people of the lower classes, in greater and greater multitudes, until the whole of society was permeated. The Reformation started on this same basis, and every revival since. God is always getting his choicest workers out of the most unexpected places. He chooses the weak things of the earth to confound the mighty.

At the several meetings many signified their desire for abounding spiritual life, and not a few persons confessed Christ for the first time. Among the latter was a Jew, and among the former a lady reputed to belong to the Roman Catholic communion. Many natives also testified their faith, and among the children there were some who stood up and blessed the name of Jesus.

THE SCRIPTURES IN RUSSIA.

From private letters, addressed to Rev. J. Wilkinson by Mr. J. A. Adler, we learn that the work of distributing the Hebrew New Testament among the Jews in various towns, though attended by many difficulties, is yet full of great interest and encouragement, many hopeful cases of conversion being the result. Being a native of Russia, Mr. Adler gains a more ready ear than would a foreigner, amongst his countrymen, which, of course, is an important factor in the success of his work.

Minsk has proved a most inviting field for labour. The streets are crowded with Jews, who are not mere visitors, as is the case to a large extent in St. Petersburg, but are settled—at least so far as a Jew can settle in such a country as Russia—and, not being so deeply absorbed in money-making, as in some places, they are of a more religious tendency, and also have more leisure to study the Scriptures.

A Bible depôt has been established here, and in a few days no less than 2000 Testaments were distributed to eager applicants. Nor were these merely accepted with a view to their destruction, as was proved by the many earnest questions asked of the missionary, and the conversations which he held with the inquirers. As Mr. Adler says:—

"Every Jew is possessed by a legion of questions which torment him, and with which he torments the poor missionary...The excitement was more than I can describe; hundreds and hundreds streamed to us to receive the books, and, on the other hand, numbers of fanatics opposed them, trying to prevent them by force. You might see in the streets large groups of Jews around one book, reading and discussing it together."

Again, on returning to this town after a brief absence:—

"No sooner had we arrived than the Jews began to flock to us in very large numbers. The excitement was increased by the accidental conflagration of a Talmudical College. Some fanatics ascribed it to our work, declaring it to be a punishment of God upon the Jews of Minsk for accepting the books."

Subsequently it transpired that "a fanatical Jew was going to burn one of the Hebrew New Testaments (in the College), and whilst he was doing that some of the sparks fell, and in a moment the College was in flames. That made a deep impression upon the Jews. They are now reading the New Testament very much. But it created a great stir for many miles round. Two ministers of the Greek Church travelled a long way to see the Jewish missionaries, and to get New Testaments for the Jews in their respective neighbourhoods."

At Kieff the work was not so easy. First, there was a difficulty in getting the Governor's permission, the fact that Nihilism is strong here making the authorities suspicious and cautious. Then two other obstacles had to be overcome; the Jews are scattered and hard to find, owing to the hostile outbreaks made by the inhabitants against them about four years ago, the bitter feeling still prevailing. Consequently the work could not be rapidly made known among them; and the visit was paid at a time when they are more fanatical than at any other time of the year. But a private gentleman rendered happy service by himself distributing a large number of Testaments, and making known the work as widely as possible.

In this and other towns very welcome help has been received from the Lutheran pastors, who have interested themselves in the work, and distributed copies of the Scriptures. They are rewarded with the joy of receiving converts into their churches.

From Wilna, Mr. Adler writes:—

"Just on the eve of the great Day of Atonement a rich Jew here made a present to our depôt of a splendid bookcase with glass doors, large enough to hold nearly 1500 of the Hebrew New Testaments. This is, as far as I know, the first Jewish contribution towards the New Testament movement. It is a beautiful piece of furniture, and I was glad to see it, especially coming from an unbaptized Jew. But the words the giver uttered filled my heart with joy: 'I received very much blessing by the reading of the New Testament. To-day being the eve of the Great Day of Atonement, I should like to express my gratitude by some gift, and I do not know a more appropriate one than a bookcase for these very precious books.' He is a wealthy Jew, as well as a great Talmudist. He makes no secret of his faith in Christ, and distributes New Testaments as much as possible.

"On the Great Day of Atonement our depôt, which is close to a large synagogue, was full of Jews who came to ask for New Testaments and concerning the way of salvation. Several had their Jewish prayer-books in their hands, and some expressed their faith in our Lord. In the evening our room was full of Jews listening to the truth. One poor man said, 'I trust that next year at this time I shall have more certainty about the forgiveness of my sins than I have to-day, although I have fasted for more than twenty-six hours.' Another said, 'I can assure you I believe with all my heart in our blessed Messiah, Jesus of Nazareth; I am willing to confess my faith in Him to-day and die to-morrow.'

"Two days after, a Jew walked nineteen English miles to get a Hebrew New Testament. He saw a friend reading one in his native place and desired to have a copy. One evening we received a Hebrew letter from a Jew in a distant town, expressing his faith in the Messiahship of our Lord, having been brought to it by reading the New Testament. He wishes to be baptized and asks for advice.

"In Dubblen a Jew sold a copy of the New Testament to a co-religionist for five roubles (about eleven shillings), the latter being so anxious to possess it."

In a later letter, Mr. Adler says that the work has got known widely enough now in Kieff, for a friend there writes to him saying that the Jews "have already got to know that the New Testaments are to be got of him, and they literally besieged his house. One day the number of Jews was so large that they broke down the fence around his house, but he restored it in the night. In ten days he distributed nearly 500 copies, and is asking for more."

It is very interesting to note that here and there Mr. Adler's letters are suddenly interrupted by a knock at the door, announcing that a Jewish caller is there desiring to speak with him. Truly God has not forsaken his ancient people, and many are now looking on Him whom they pierced.

WEST BRIGHTON.—On Sunday afternoon, November 4, after the usual Bible-reading, a very handsome Dresden clock and candelabra were presented to the president and hon. secretary (Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Congreve), by Rev. David Davies, on behalf of the members of the Young Women's Christian Institute. An accompanying testimonial said: "We know that God has blessed and is blessing your labours here, and we pray that you may both be spared to us for many years to carry on the good work." The lecture hall and the entrance hall of the Institute were packed to overflowing. The class now numbers 315.

MISSION WORK IN BELGIUM.

Paifve is a village of four hundred inhabitants, prettily situated at about two hours' walk from Liège. Being neglected by the priests, the people sought out an evangelical preacher, and in June last prevailed upon the pastor of the Missionary Church at Liège to visit them. In an interesting communication describing the work which followed, Pastor Charles Merle d'Aubigné, of La Rouvière, Belgium, writes:—

"The pastor did not expect so warm a reception as he had on the first Sunday evening. As he came in sight of the village, he was met by a crowd of men and women, some bearing flags, and was triumphantly escorted to the place of meeting. There he began to preach in the open air to an attentive audience composed of the whole village, young and old: eight gendarmes stood there to insure quietness if it had been necessary. But then! hardly had the preacher said Amen, when all the young people rushed off to their accustomed games, and the pastor left, accompanied by the firing off of gunpowder. Notwithstanding all this, 102 New Testaments were asked for, and handed over to the people on that day.

"Now was the time to begin work, by careful and persistent nursing, feeding these babes with the milk of the word, explaining to them the real nature of the Gospel, and driving away the evil spirit from their midst. This was entrusted to the care of a thoroughly earnest Bible reader from our station of Lizè-Seraing. He has spent, during the summer, several days in each week going from house to house visiting the people, explaining to them the word of God, answering their questions on evangelical doctrine, showing them how to pray, and teaching the children hymns. Besides that, meetings continued to be held on the village green every Lord's Day with large audiences. Now for the results: all the families of the village, except three or four, have forsaken the Church of Rome, and have declared themselves willing to receive the Gospel. Mass is now, of course, since the arrival of the heretics, celebrated every Sunday, but the people will not go back to it; and the priest has a meagre audience of fifteen persons; the worldly amusements have been given up.

"'How things have changed!'" said an old man to the Bible-reader. "The children used to fight coming home from school; now they sing hymns!' 'There are here,' says Pastor Gagnebin in his report, 'souls who are truly converted to the Lord; I have found in my visits Lydias whose hearts have been opened, so that they have received the word; fathers also who rejoice now with all their family because they have believed in God.'

"A chapel is now being built, and it is hoped that this will be a centre of light for all the surrounding villages, many of whose inhabitants already come to the meetings."

PRAYER FOR FRANCE.—The Committee of the Paris City Mission request that prayer may be made on the tenth day of each month for God's blessing on the various Paris missions, in respect of the united efforts that are to be made in the coming Paris Exhibition of 1819, by the sale and distribution of Bibles, portions of Gospels, religious tracts, preaching in Gospel halls, &c. The Exhibition is fixed to open on May 1, 1889.

FEASTING THE POOR.—On Friday last, while the Lord Mayor's dinner was in progress at the Guildhall, some three thousand persons, of the poor and wretched classes, were given a bountiful meal in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. Hundreds of "stewards" rallied round Mr. F. N. Charrington, and those who looked on enjoyed the proceedings as much as did the most needy of the guests. Admission was by tickets, which had been distributed to dock labourers, overworked factory girls, the old and infirm, and others included in the great "all sorts and conditions" denomination. Singing was engaged in, to the delight of all, and the promoters found much cause for satisfaction in the success of their noble efforts.

PRACTICABLE SOCIALISM.*

At the present time, when social questions are forcing themselves upon public attention, a volume which is dated from a Whitechapel rectory, and which represents the combined experience and wisdom of two such workers as Rev. S. A. Barnett and his wife must necessarily possess great interest. Although in the thirteen admirable papers which form the book now before us there is much from which we are forced strongly to dissent, there is much more with which every Christian man and woman must be in thorough agreement. The authors claim for their book that it is to some extent "the voice of the dumb poor." As it is written, not from any high theoretical standpoint, but from that of sympathy and knowledge, the claim is by no means a groundless one. Written with the object of bringing the rich and the poor together, the socialism of the volume is of that kind which is in accordance with the teachings of Jesus, and it is advocated on the basis that "the social reformer must go alongside the Christian missionary, if he be not himself the Christian missionary."

What is true of the East-end of London is applicable, to a greater or lesser degree, to the poor districts of each of our large towns; and such suggestions as the authors are well qualified to make in regard to the terrible problem of the poverty of the poor, are doubly valuable to-day, when overcrowding and its consequent evils in all our large centres are occupying the thoughtful attention of many of those who sincerely desire to see the boundaries of the Lord's kingdom widened.

Many of Mr. and Mrs. Barnett's suggestions would bring about a better and holier condition of things, and would retard, if not prevent altogether, the coming of a disastrous time, which at present seems to be rapidly advancing. No nation can afford to neglect its poor, for most poverty may be regarded as the result of unrighteousness in one direction or another, and it is beyond contradiction that "if the rich were as generous and as just as Christ, if the poor were as honest and as brave as Christ, there would not be much left which socialism could add to the world's comfort." To do good, however, it is not essential that one should be rich, and if this timely volume is full of valuable suggestions for those who have means, it is equally full of advice and warning for those men and women who have nothing but time to give to God's service.

* Practicable Socialism: Essays in Social Reform. By Rev. and Mrs. Samuel A. Barnett. 2s 6d. Longmans, Green & Co.

MR. H. T. LODGE has held a successful nine days' mission at the Palmer-place Mission-hall, in Holloway-road. The meetings were well attended throughout.

ALTRINCHAM.—A successful three weeks' mission has been held in the Baptist Tabernacle by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh. Sinners have professed conversion, and believers have been quickened.

WORK AT NIGHT.—A lady working at the East-end writes:—Our lady workers have been out on the streets for several nights the past week, and have proved the power of God with them. It is more Christian effort that is needed: more prayer, more power of the Holy Spirit, and then effectually dealing with the young girls in a common sense way. Some were taken to Miss Steer's Home at once. One in a fit of self-will had left her home a month ago, and was only too glad to escape from such a life.

"SWEATING" IN IRELAND. — If Lady Aberdeen be well informed, the deepest depth of the sweating system seems to be touched by the Donegal worker. Her Ladyship avers that the knitters of Donegal are paid from three halfpence to twopence a pair for long socks. It take a whole day to knit a pair of these socks. Three halfpence, or twopence at the outside, for a day's work! Fourteenpence, if we include Sunday as a working day, for a whole week's toil! Is Lady Aberdeen quite sure of her figures?—The Echo.

MILDMAY HOSPITAL AT JAFFA.

Many will be interested to hear that Miss Newton, and the fellow-worker who sailed with her in the ill-fated Nepaul (wrecked at Marseilles), reached Jaffa in safety, after their marvellous escape; and that both the hospital and the general mission work are now again in full activity. Many patients were anxiously waiting for admission, and the forty beds were soon filled, the medical mission being also attended by increasing numbers.

One morning lately Miss Newton was about to give the usual Arabic address to the out-patients when her attention was called to a poor man who crawled in, evidently at the last extremity. An artery in his leg had given way, and only her instant summons to the doctor and the prompt measures taken saved his life. It was afterwards ascertained that he had fallen into a lime-kiln five days before, and had been severely burnt about the legs and feet. This happened at a village many miles away, and he had lain in helpless suffering till some-one gave him a lift on a camel to Jaffa. The effort of crawling on hands and knees up the little hill to the hospital had ruptured a large artery in one of the injured limbs; but there is now hope of his recovery, though the case will be a tedious one. Will readers pray that his prolonged sojourn in the hospital may be blessed to both soul and body?

This incident illustrates vividly the great need of the merciful work carried on in the Jaffa hospital, comprising not only the constant care of from thirty to forty in-patients, but the relief of large numbers of out-patients. Sometimes one hundred and twenty attend on a single morning, to all of whom, Moslems, Jews, and Christians alike, the Gospel is faithfully and lovingly spoken. The work of the deaconesses is now so well known all over the country that they meet with a ready welcome in the large Moslem villages for many miles round. Some of these number thousands of inhabitants, who are willing to hear the message of salvation from the lips of the sisters.

Prayer is asked for these devoted workers, and also liberal help. They are spending life and means ungrudgingly in this good work. Is it too much to ask friends at home to share the burden of expense? With the utmost economy, a hospital with forty beds and hundreds of out-patients weekly must require solid and substantial support.

MESSRS. HARMER AND PARKER have concluded a successful eight-days' mission at Queensbury, Yorkshire. Large numbers of young people entered the inquiry rooms each night. Denholm is now receiving a like blessing. The intended mission tour of the evangelists in India is postponed until next season.

MR. EDWARD HURDITCH. — Mr. James Scroggie writes from Dulverton that they have had a visit from Mr. E. Hurditch, with the Bible carriage. All classes have gathered round him, and have been held in rapt attention while he proclaimed the Gospel message with wonderful effect. His son accompanies him, and sings, and plays the harmonium.

KNOTTINGLY, YORKS.—A successful mission was held here in the Churches of S. Botolph and Christ Church, by Rev. A. R. D'Arcy and Rev. J. Stephens. A very marked work of the Holy Spirit was manifested in awakening sinners, and leading them to Christ. The place was thoroughly stirred, and the mission left many rejoicing in the full salvation of the Gospel.

WINTER IN EAST LONDON.—Sir,—Black winter is settling down upon East London. My missionaries give a deplorable account of the distress. Many of the people are foodless and fireless. A great number have the poorest apologies for boots and clothing. We actually hear of respectable people going without food for two days together! If friends care to help, it shall be turned to good account.—Yours faithfully,

W. Evan Hurndall.

MR. IRA D. SANKEY.

On Monday last week Mr. Sankey visited Bath, which city had not been included in either of the campaigns held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey in this country.

The invitation issued from the Young Men's Christian Association, of which Mr. George E. Thomas is the president, and the large Assembly Rooms were engaged for the meetings, which were held in the afternoon and evening. On both occasions the hall was filled to overflowing, a large number failing to obtain admission.

The singing was led by a large choir associated with the work of Rev. E. L. Hamilton (who for the last three years has preached the Gospel in the same hall on Sunday evenings with many tokens of blessing). Mr. Hamilton related in the afternoon how he had been converted during the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Liverpool in 1875, and followed with an earnest Gospel appeal. He purposes going to Tangier in connection with the North Africa Mission. Mr. Sankey introduced a number of the new hymns which were taken up with great heartiness by the audiences, and sang several solos, relating the circumstances under which some of them were written. Especially solemn was the description of the sad railway disaster by which Mr. and Mrs. P. P. Bliss met their death; following this Mr. Sankey sang "Eternity," which was the last hymn that Mr. Bliss set to music.

Mr. Sankey received the support and assistance in the meetings of the following local clergymen: Rev. F. M. Roden, Rev. W. H. Etches, Rev. E. Murphy, and Rev. H. T. Gower (Baptist minister), it being his desire to work in harmony with those who carry on regular work for God in the places which he visits. Mr. Sankey has since received an urgent request to conduct a protracted mission in this city, but other calls render it doubtful if he will be able to do so, at any rate during his present stay in this country.

On the following day, Wednesday, Weston-super-Mare accorded the evangelist a hearty welcome in the Victoria Hall and the Assembly Rooms, the latter being secured for an overflow meeting. Here again the Y.M.C.A was to the front, aided by Rev. Colin Campbell, vicar of Christ Church, Rev. J. Finch (Bible Christian), and Captain West, of Bristol, all of whom took part in the meetings. Here there was no organised choir; but, with the assistance of a few friends who accompanied Mr. Sankey from Bristol, those present lost very little time in mastering several of the beautiful sacred songs. In the evening Mr. Sankey first of all addressed the gathering in the Victoria Hall, and then left it in charge of Captain West, while he adjourned to the overflow meeting in the Assembly Rooms, where the Spirit of God was present in power, a large number expressing anxiety for their eternal salvation.

From Weston Mr. Sankey returned to Bristol, to be present at the anniversary of the Y.M.C.A., as that institution owes its existence to the energy of Messrs. Moody and Sankey while conducting a mission in Bristol four years ago.

On Sunday Mr. Sankey conducted Gospel services at Torquay, in connection with the People's Mission. The songs charmed assemblages of two thousand persons on each occasion. An esteemed correspondent writes: "Such a blessed season has not been experienced by us since the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in 1882." Mr. Sankey is expected to conduct services in Plymouth on Sunday next.

MR. D. L. MOODY, who is accompanied by Mr. G. B. Studd, has been conducting Gospel services at Victoria, British Columbia, a district of country which he has visited for the first time. There have been overflowing meetings and many anxious inquirers after salvation.

THE WHITECHAPEL TRAGEDIES.

Dear Sir,—Poor, distracted women are rushing up to us from Whitechapel, to find refuge in the Prison Mission. Their claim is legitimate, for most of them are known to us as those who refused our offers of help at the prison gate. Their terror at the fate of their companions is creating great excitement among them. Let us hope that they may become truly penitent, and that many may be led to the "refuge provided on Calvary's hill."

We want to find work for this crowd of suppliants for aid. Already our hands are full, and much success has attended the efforts to help this class of women. Letters come to us from the very ends of the earth, telling the news of the salvation of some whom we have sent abroad to lead a new life, who are now, indeed, following the commandments of God, and glorifying his name. There are scenes here that touch our hearts, and from which we cannot turn away.

Will your readers help us to bring these wanderers to the fold of the Good Shepherd? Some poor women have lost their reason; others in their agony of despair threaten to take their own lives. Our work is to bring them to the Saviour, and we do so in faith that many will find rest unto their souls. Sympathy, prayer, and true hand-to-hand fellowship should now be manifested. Few can join us in personal service, but all can unite with us in earnest supplication that the present distress may issue in a grand delivery of Satan's captives, and a glorious trophy for the Saviour of the lost.

The visits of friends to our works are welcome. Clapham-road is accessible from all parts by tramcar and train. The Conference Hall is well known and easily reached, not far from what was formerly Kennington Gate. I will be very glad to see any who will come over and help us.—Yours in Christian bonds, (Mrs.) S. Meredith.

LADIES IN CONFERENCE.

The Autumnal Conference of Ladies in the interests of the young, held on Wednesday, last week, in Exeter Hall, was more numerously attended than either of the preceding gatherings. Mrs. F. A. Bevan and her friends so far relaxed the rule of confining the attendance, as to ask Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe to open the afternoon meeting with prayer and a brief address. He spoke on the need of patient, long enduring love on the part of those who would engage in the work of rescue and reclamation with any hope of success.

During the afternoon the evils connected with baby farming came under review. Miss Heath, Miss Stroud, Miss McPherson, and other friends detailed their experience of work amongst factory girls and other classes, both of the fallen and the destitute.

Mr. E. W. Thomas, who opened the evening conference, referred to the great changes which have taken place in recent years in the opinion and attitude of Christian people in reference to the "friendless and fallen." A paper was read by Mrs. Gunster, in which the descriptions given of the language and behaviour of the women frequenting the common lodging houses of the East-end were revolting in the extreme.

Mrs. F. A. Bevan's paper opened with a reference to the atrocities in the East-end, which have aroused horror and indignation amongst all classes of society. But these crimes did not stand alone; they were but illustrations of the cruelty of wickedness in the dark places. A very important division of the paper referred to the need of a higher standard of capability, fitness, and efficiency amongst female workers generally, and matrons of Homes especially. Mrs. Bevan further dwelt upon the importance of gaining the confidence of young women, and gave some needed cautions in reference to the subject of marriage.

In the course of the evening it was suggested that much good might be anticipated from the visits of Christian women to the common lodging-houses at the East-end and other parts

NIGHT SHELTERS.

Mr. Philip Gough, one of the foremost workers at the Gray's-yard Mission, has had it much upon his heart lately to establish in London night shelters for the relief of the utterly destitute. His desire is to open one immediately for women, and, if possible, another afterwards for men, say 150 of each. He is encouraged by the promised hearty support and co-operation of Mr. Geo. Holland (George-yard), Mr. Charrington (Great Assembly Hall), Dr. Harry Guinness (Harley-house), Mr. C. S. Thorpe (Rescue Society), and other servants of God.

His idea is to rent a suitable building, roughly fit it up with "plank bed," &c., and open it every night to destitute women. He does not even propose that bread should be given at the beginning, seeing that this would considerably increase the expenses. He would himself cheerfully undertake the superintendence of the fitting up, and the overlooking of the work, should funds be supplied for it. But after all, the chief aim would be to reach the souls of the outcasts, through texts of Scripture on the walls, by distributing tracts, and by reading the Scriptures, Gospel addresses, &c.

A SPHERE IN SOUTH INDIA.

The pressing need of the hilly district of Travancore, known as Pir Merde, has been brought under our notice by an esteemed correspondent, who writes:—

For many years the residents in this locality had no church, and no religious services, except when a missionary might visit it for health's sake, until Rev. Henry Baker, of the Church Missionary Society, settled there, taking a coffee plantation on his own account. He was instrumental in erecting a small church, where he frequently officiated, but since his death, several years ago, the people, English and native, have been almost abandoned.

Recently the Roman Catholics have been very active in the region, which is within the Church Missionary diocese of Travancore. The Bishop writes: "The Church Missionary Society sends out its missionaries for work among natives, and not for European communities. But the native population far outnumbers the European, and no doubt Roman Catholic zeal will accomplish the work which Protestants seem too feeble to attempt. Meanwhile English children are growing up accustomed to no worship but such as they see the Roman Catholics practise."

The C.M.S. doubtless are willing to supply the need, for one of their secretaries writes: "If a medical missionary were to present himself to us, who seemed suitable, we would consider the question of his being sent to Pir Merde, but no one has offered himself. Of course, unless a medical missionary were an ordained clergyman, we could not do what the residents at Pir Merde desire and need." Surely some suitable candidate will offer himself as soon as this need is known. The cultivation of tea is fast superseding that of coffee on these hills; and, as the late Mr. Baker was permitted to maintain a thriving coffee plantation, the like indulgence could not becomingly be denied a medical missionary if he possessed a small capital.

REV. W. HASLAM will conduct a ten-days' mission at St. James's, Plumstead, Kent, commencing November 17.

TWO CASES at CHUDLEIGH, DEVON.

"Both I and one of my brothers have been fully restored from dangerous illness through your advice and medicines." So writes Miss H. LARKING, of CHUDLEIGH BRIDGE FARM.

Two years ago Miss H. L. was suffering with severe dyspnœa, and had troublesome cough, with alarming expectoration of blood, continuing in the mornings. There was also acute pain in the chest, and other symptoms.

"In a very short time (she writes) my cough was much relieved, and after perseverance with your remedies, I became quite restored." Ever since then, she states that she has found an occasional dose of the medicine a preventive against cold.

"Also ONE OF MY BROTHERS (she writes in letter dated Sept. 4 of this year), who was pronounced consumptive—one doctor saying he would always be delicate)—was quite cured by your medicine, and is now very strong. He used to have much-dreaded attacks of bronchitis every winter before then."

"I have just heard that a man here has quite recovered from a serious illness by means of your medicine."

"Our family feel most grateful to you. We advise all our friends to try your treatment. I hope you may be able to use my letter."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

A Story of the Soudan War.

Blue Lights; or, Hot Work in the Soudan. By R. M. Ballantyne. 5s. Nisbet & Co. This is a high-toned, skilfully constructed, and thrilling story. We trust it will excite interest in the beneficent work of Miss Sarah Robinson among our soldiers, the great value of which is shown throughout the book. "Blue Lights," it may be mentioned, is a nickname applied to the religious and temperance men of the army, of whom there are not a few, largely as a result of the labours of "the Soldiers' Friend" and her helpers on their behalf.

Dr. Monro Gibson's New Book.

Christianity according to Christ. By John Monro Gibson, D.D. 6s. James Nisbet & Co. The chapters composing this work do not constitute a treatise, but have each a separate completeness of their own. Nevertheless, there is a bond of union between them, as they more or less tend to unfold the author's dominant conception of the form which Apologetics should take. Dr. Gibson contends that the personal Christ should Himself occupy the foreground of Christian Evidences; and insists that it was thus the Apostles dealt with doubters and doubt. Their anxiety was to make the Light of the World directly play upon the scene. Dr. Gibson is a master in reasoning, and solidly supports his main thesis. We have been much edified by the perusal of several of the chapters in this work, particularly the fourth, which is on "God known in Christ." In this and some other papers will be found rich spiritual morsels—views which reveal a fresh glory in Christ and endear Him the more to the heart. Dr. Gibson is profound enough to be simple, and that is saying a great deal; the more that chapter five on "The Trinity" was the one which to us most of all evinced it. Chapter nine on "The Indwelling Spirit" is a particularly fresh exposition, and will be deemed a valuable contribution to a theme that is far from being generally understood. We warmly commend the work as equally fitted to help the doubter and to edify the believer.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

From the annual volume of Young England the youth of either sex can gather endless amusement and a good deal of useful instruction. (5s. Sunday School Union.)

St. Nicholas. Volume xv. of this well-known serial makes a grand book for young folks. The illustrations are artistic, and the letterpress has literary merit. Moreover, with entertainment there is much that is very instructive. (8s. T. Fisher Unwin.)

The Sunday at Home volume for 1888 (7s. and upwards) contains choice reading matter in great variety, for old and young, profusely illustrated by coloured and wood engravings. The biographical and historical chapters are a welcome and specially instructive feature. (Religious Tract Society.)

The Leisure Hour annual volume (Religious Tract Society) is also replete with interesting and useful matter. The stories are of a high class, and the other illustrated papers very attractive. "The Queen's Homes" is the title of an excellent series of sketches. (7s., 8s. 6d., and 10s. 6d.)

The Century. The fourteenth volume of the new series of this popular illustrated monthly includes the issues from May to October, 1888. The pages are full of pleasant and instructive reading. Many of the topics are distinctly out of the ordinary; and the engravings are of the attractive character which has made this American serial so popular with a large class of English readers. (10s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.)

BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

MESSRS. S. W. PARTRIDGE AND CO.

Vashti Savage, by Sarah Tytler (3s. 6d.), tells, in a life-like manner, of the reclamation, by kindness and love, of a poor, abandoned gipsy girl, and of her being the ultimate means of saving her earthly saviour.—More Precious than Gold, by Jennie Chappell (3s. 6d.), is a very improbable story. Had the authoress placed her characters in the light of every-day circumstances, instead of surrounding them with romantic episodes at every turn, her well-written narrative would have accomplished greater things than it is likely to do.—Robert Aske, by E. F. Pollard (3s. 6d.), is a beautiful and touching tale of the days of Tyndale and Coverdale. The illustrations and general get-up of all these volumes are excellent.

Dora Coyne, by Jessie M. E. Saxby (1s. 6d.), is a most refreshing story of noble self-sacrifice.—Fisher Reuel, by Maggie Lymington (1s.), will charm with its homely simplicity and earnest teaching.—The Man of the Family, by Jennie Chappell (1s.), contains lessons of humility and courage, and the reward that follows right doing.

MR. T. WOOLMER.

John Marriot's Idol, by Mary Russell Day (1s. 6d.), is a strange and unpleasant story of wrong-doing on the part of an aged man; side by side with this runs the tale of the heroism and holiness of Jane Harding; the book ends with justice being meted out to all.—Our Martha, by Edith Greeves (1s. 6d.), is excellent as a gift-book for servants. Martha is a sweet and beautiful character, and her unselfish life meets with a blessed reward.—My Brother Jack, by Emily Searchfield (1s.), is a story possessing true literary merit; but, better still, it has "heart" in it. Joan and Jack will do good to all who make their acquaintance.—Matthew Windrod, by James W. Dove (1s.), is an out-and-out Methodist story, full of warmth, and plenty of common sense.—The Story of Christian, by Samuel Gregory (1s. 6d.), is useful and helpful, as giving the main outlines of the beautiful allegory of Bunyan in simple form.—Love and Victory. Edited by Oliver Pacis. 1s. 6d. These twenty-five temperance dialogues may be found useful for Bands of Hope and temperance gatherings. They are arranged for from two to five characters.—The Ruby Necklet, by Beth Richardson (1s.), is a child's book, telling a story of sin, discovery, repentance, and forgiveness. —Ned's Victory. By Alice Briggs. 6d. Ned, the soldier lad, amidst the temptations of his calling lives an overcoming life, and is enabled to bring others to serve his Master.

MESSRS. J. F. SHAW & CO.

The new publications of this house are got up, as usual, in very attractive dress. Out in the Forty-Five, by Emily Sarah Holt (5s.), is a tale of the last century, written in excellent tone, and with a good moral purpose. The characters bear well-known English and Scottish names, and their conversation turns to a considerable extent upon the movements of Wesley and Whitefield. Opinions as to methods and impressions are freely expressed in the dialogue, which, however, is dominated by a thoroughly evangelical spirit. The work is decidedly instructive, as well as very entertaining.—From Squire to Squatter. By Dr. Gordon Stables. 5s. A capital illustrated volume, by a versatile writer. Squire Broadbent, becoming reduced in circumstances at home, at last goes to Queensland, where his high-spirited son had settled and succeeded as a squatter. Bush life and gold-diggings' experiences are ably delineated.—The Earls of the Village. By Agnes Giberne. 3s. 6d. Several persons of the name of Earl lived in the village of Falbrook, and this book gives an interesting account of their sayings and doings.—Alma Ryan. By Charlotte Mason. 3s. 6d. A picture of life governed by high principle; a love story coming in at the close.—Hillside Farm. By M. L. Ridley. 2s. 6d. A well-told tale of family pleasures and disappointments.—Up to the Mark? By Harriett Boultwood. 1s. 6d. This schoolboy's story, told in his own way, makes an excellent presentation volume for lads.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Told Ever so Long Ago. By Agnes Park. Marshall Bros. In the form of allegory, an aunt discourses to her nephew and niece of "things good, true, and lovely." Children will enjoy the book.

A wonderfully cheap, handy, and neat edition of Bunyan's Holy War has been issued by Mr. Andrew Stevenson, Edinburgh. It is well printed, in clear type, on good paper, and substantially bound in cloth boards. It costs only sevenpence.

Tales and Sketches, in Prose and Verse. By J. W. Wood, F.S.A. 5s. Elliot Stock. While there are some good thoughts in this handsome volume, the want of arrangement causes the reader to question the author's intent. Hymns, valentines, comic verses, and spiritual reviews are all jumbled together in confusion. The quatrain in praise of "Tobacco" and the lines upon "House Sparrows" come somewhat strangely from the writer of "Alone."

Birds and Beasts. By Rev. J. G. Wood. 3s. 6d. The many illustrations in this volume are excellent; the name of the accomplished author is sufficient guarantee that the letterpress is alike instructive and entertaining. Intelligent children will hail with delight so fascinating an introduction to natural history wonders. (J. F. Shaw & Co.)

The Lives of Robert and Mary Moffat. By their son, John S. Moffat. 3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. At present, when so much interest is being evinced in missionary work, this popular edition, embellished with several illustrations, ought to find many readers. It will, we hope, be long ere the grand story unfolded in these pages is regarded as wanting in lively interest.

In Immanuel's Land. Memorials of Sophia Mary Frances Wood. By her Mother, F. L. Cheales. 5s. and 3s. 6d. A. Holness. This is a second and revised edition of a book which we know has been a blessing to many. We commend the beautiful record of this gracious young life to all who are seeking greater light in their Christian walk. To young Christians it must prove a valuable help.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have just commenced the publication, in monthly parts at 6d., of a new and carefully revised edition of that standard favourite, the Popular Educator. This great work is so well known that it is almost superfluous to say it is a complete and reliable medium of thorough self-instruction, for all ages and classes, in every branch of a liberal education—literary, commercial, and technical.

The Sermon Bible. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This is the second volume of a work which most preachers are sure to find extremely useful. It is a rich mine of homiletic wealth, as well as an excellent guide to modern sermon literature. The area covered is 1 Kings to Ps. lxxvi., and on some passages of special experimental value there are several explanatory outlines, by preachers of name and power.

Abraham: or, The Obedience of Faith. By F. B. Meyer. This volume contains the series of studies which were recently given in these columns. There is something for all in its pages; for those who have not the faith which was accounted unto Abraham for righteousness, as well as for those who are the true children of him who has been apostolically designated the father of all them that believe. In serial form these chapters were read by many to great profit, and it is hoped that in this collected form they will be abundantly blessed. Several original illustrations help in the elucidation of the story. The price is 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. according to style of binding. (Morgan & Scott.)

Jeremiah: His Life and Times. By T. K. Cheyne, D.D. 2s. 6d. Nisbet. This is another volume of the "Men of the Bible" series. Those who know the devious ways of modern criticism, and can distinguish evident and ascertained truth from mere assumption and conjecture, however confidently expressed, will read it with considerable profit, as well as much interest. Questions arising in the study, and suggested by various interpretations of the history, are discussed in a very free and attractive manner. Like all others who pursue the "higher criticism," Dr. Cheyne finds much to reject in the positions of his fellow-speculators. The fact is becoming increasingly patent that Colenso, Wellhausen, Robertson Smith, and Dillmann are teachers whose errors are being continually corrected by their humblest, as well as their most distinguished disciples and followers.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission being held in All Saints' Church, Caledonian-road, Holloway, N., by Rev. W. Balgarnie, Nov. 17 to 23.——For blessing on a mission at Queen's-park Hall, Harrow-road, conducted by Mr. Chas. Inglis, Miss Vansittart, and Miss Schofield.——For blessing on a mission in St. Paul's Church, York, conducted by Rev. A. R. D'Arcy and Rev. A. Roberts, from Nov. 10 to 20.——For blessing on a mission to be held at the Colchester Soldiers' Home, Nov. 17 to Dec. 2, by Messrs. Hogben and Middleton.——For blessing on a mission to young men, by Mr. Newton Jones, at the Priory Hall, Upper-street, Islington, from Nov. 18 to 23.——For blessing on a mission in St. James's, Woolwich, from Nov. 17 to 28, conducted by Rev. W. Haslam.——For blessing on missions at Walmer and Dover, commencing Nov. 9, conducted by Alexander Clark.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, November 25.

The Covenant Renewed.

Josh. xxiv. 19—28; Golden Text, ver. 24.

The Scene.—The neighbourhood of Shechem, the modern Nablûs, one of the oldest cities in the world. The population of Nablûs is now 5000, mostly Mohammedans. The minority, a few hundred strong, are chiefly members of the Greek Church. There are a few Samaritans and Jews, who hate one another as vigorously and desperately as did their forefathers in the days of our Lord. It is extremely probable, indeed almost certain, that this great national assembly was held in the narrow valley between Mounts Ebal and Gerizim, close by Jacob's Well, where the nation had met for a similar, but even more solemn and wonderful covenant-service, twenty-four years before (viii. 30—35, and Deut. xxvii. 1—10). Such is the configuration of this valley that one man could easily address an innumerable multitude. "In the early morning," writes Tristram ("Land of Israel" p. 149), "we could not only see from Gerizim a man driving his ass down a path on Mount Ebal, but could hear every word he uttered, as he urged it; and, in order to test the matter more certainly on a subsequent occasion, two of our party stationed themselves on the opposite sides of the valley, and with perfect ease recited the commandments antiphonally" (see also Beecher's "Life of Christ" chap. on Jacob's Well). Teachers should labour to make a vivid picture of this wonderful scene. The noble old man surrounded by the leaders of the nation, the historic meeting-place, the countless multitudes, Joshua's stern, earnest, but tender appeal, and the answering enthusiasm of the people.

The Leader.—Joshua was now 110 years old, feeble (xxiii. 1), and about to die. He is evidently afraid that the people will, in their prosperity, forget Him who made them prosperous. The beginnings of idolatry are seen among them (ver. 23). Notice the old man's consuming zeal for Israel's purity and devotedness to God. How spiritual he is! He believes in no good, no seeming prosperity, that is not based on true decision for God. He has no fear for them in respect of their enemies; but he does fear lest they should grow half-hearted, insincere, or hypocritical. Hence decision for God is the keynote of the whole lesson.

Ye cannot serve the Lord (ver. 19).—Many take this as equivalent to, "Ye cannot serve the Lord in your own strength," a great truth that may very well have been in Joshua's mind. We shall do well, however, to connect this clause with what follows, and read, "If ye forsake the Lord, and serve other gods, ye cannot serve the Lord." It is the Old Testament version of the New Testament saying, "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." It is important to note that the chief point of the lesson is single-mindedness, wholehearted decision for God, unreserved consecration, as opposed to double-mindedness, insincere and partial obedience. The warning is not so much against thoroughgoing and formal apostasy as against the sin of cherishing idols, more or less secretly, at the very time when we endeavour to serve God. Even in her worst days Israel never renounced God entirely. Her temptation was to practical as opposed to formal apostasy. Just so with us; few of us are avowed atheists, yet how many mingle the worship of self, the following of sin and ungodliness, with the profession of, and even with the practice of, the service of God.

Reasons for True Decision.—If we include the early portion of this chapter, we find seven reasons given, each of which is most pertinent to our own case. (1) Gratitude (vv. 2—13).—God's former mercies recounted. They owe all to Him. (2) Duty.—Being their God, their Redeemer and Preserver, their first duty was to love, serve, and trust Him. (3) God's faithfulness to them called for answering faithfulness in them. He had been true to them, overcoming all their enemies; now they should be true to Him. (4) Joshua's personal example (ver. 15).—A powerful appeal this from one so venerated as he! Yet to how many of us do the holy lives of loved friends and teachers make a similar appeal. (5) Covenant vows.—"Therefore will we serve Him for He is our God"—words spoken by the people, not Joshua. (6) The judgment that would follow disobedience (19, 20).—"The Lord will not forgive," &c. There is no limit to God's forgiveness in the case of the truly penitent; but these verses suppose them to be at once wilful and hypocritical, wishing to go their way, and yet hoping for God's mercy. (7) God's jealousy (ver. 19).—He abhors a divided heart. How solemnly this truth is reiterated throughout Scripture, even to the last words of Revelation (chap. iii. 15, 16).

Witnesses to the Covenant.—(1) Themselves (ver. 22). Everyone who willingly promises to serve God will, in case of apostasy, be a witness against himself in the day of account. Can there be a more terrible judgment than that of one's own conscience fully roused by the Spirit of God? Should it witness against us now, let us listen in time. (2) The Stone of Memorial (vv. 26, 27).—So Baptism or the Lord's Supper are stones of witness against all who have observed them. The Oak of Memorial (ver. 26) was called "Abraham's Oak," probably the one mentioned (Gen. xii. 6). So certain buildings, localities, or anniversaries witness to the act of voluntary dedication to God once made by us.

ILLUSTRATION.

A soldier who had lived in notorious wickedness was aroused to deep spiritual concern. At the evening roll-call, he asked to be allowed to say a few words; and, after permission had been given, said:—"Comrades, you know how wicked I have been, what a life I have led in this regiment. With God's help, this day Charley Rockwell turns over a new leaf, and begins to live as a Christian. He wants your forgiveness for the wrongs he has done, and asks you to join him in trying to serve Christ." He made his decision consistent by restoring his gambling gains. So he put away the strange gods, &c., and became a happy Christian man.

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, November 25.

The Impotent Man.—John v. 1—16.

Christ's miracles were mercies and the symbols of greater mercies. Each act is an expression of sympathy and a sermon touching the power of Christ to heal and bless the soul. The miracle we are now to consider was wrought upon the occasion of a great feast (ver. 1). Our Lord made the most of special occasions. Comp. Mark ii. 1, 2; John vii. 37. Races, fairs, market days, and great funerals furnish the Christian worker with great occasions still, and he ought to make the most of them. Note:—

(1) The Man's Condition.—(a) He was one of a multitude.—Jesus thinks much of the individual. He cares not only for the great multitude but for the component parts of it (comp. "thinkest upon me," Ps. xl. 17). (b) He couldn't help himself.—In a recent boat accident the only person drowned was a man who, being able to swim, thought he could save himself. Jesus comes to save those who cannot save themselves. Comp. "without strength" (Rom. v. 6). (c) He had been afflicted for a long time.—Comp. Luke viii. 27, xiii. 11. Diseases of long standing yield readily to the healing touch of Jesus. (d) He was looking to the pool for help (ver. 7).—Some look to the preacher, some to the penitent bench and some to the baptismal font; false grounds of trust (Ps. xx. 7). (e) He had failed to get healing at the pool (ver. 7).—Many have failed in the search for rest, because they have sought it in forms and ceremonies (Heb. x. 4). (f) He was discouraged.—He could scarcely have hoped he would ever be saved, but the blessing came. The ship in which Paul sailed to Rome was wrecked, but help came when all hope was gone (Acts xxvii. 20). None need despair of salvation when Jesus is near to save. (g) Nobody cared for Him.—"No man" (ver. 7). Many disregarded by men are cared for by the Lord (comp. Isa. lxiii. 5).

(2) The Master's Appeal.—"Wilt thou?" (ver. 6). Surely the man was willing, but the Lord would draw from him an expression of his helplessness and of his desire to be saved (Ps. xxxiv. 6). It is not enough to be willing for Christ to save us, we must earnestly desire salvation. Notice how the appeal is adapted to the man's need ("made whole"). Jesus proposes to save the soul, and not that the sinner should save himself. The power of Christ was equal to the work of the man's restoration (Heb. vii. 25). We see this in the healing of the man. Jesus saved him easily (no remedies used), quickly ("immediately," ver. 9), and completely (he was made whole).

(3) The Complete Cure.—The man got: (a) Freedom from disease; (b) A new supply of strength; (c) Ability to walk; and (d) Power to work.

Personalia.

Mr. Denham Smith has again rallied, and is this week free from the prostration and suffering which followed the recent attack. He has been able to leave his bed for short intervals.

Mr. Gordon Forlong asks us to say that he often receives from kind friends at home papers wrongly addressed; he wishes to intimate that "Wanganui," New Zealand, is the correct address.

Mr. George H. Vanderbilt has purchased 1000 acres of land near Ashland, N.C., a beautiful and healthful region, where, in conjunction with several friends, he intends to found a great industrial school for the education of poor white children, so that they may be taught how to support themselves.

The late Samuel Morley.—We welcome a new and popular edition of Mr. Edwin Hodder's "Life" of this much-esteemed city merchant, whose name and memory will be a fragrant possession of the churches for many a generation to come. It is published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton (5s.)

Mr. Lewis E. Jackson, so long the secretary of the New York City Mission and Tract Society, has died at the age of sixty-six, of Bright's disease. The Society had in Mr. Jackson a most faithful and able manager of affairs. He had the cause thoroughly at heart, and much of its success was due to his painstaking labours.

Rev. W. C. Van Meter.—We regret to learn that this well-known worker expired at Rome on the 26th ult., after a brief illness. Mr. Van Meter's work in Rome dates from 1870, when the city was opened to Protestant effort by the entry of Victor Emmanuel. His remains were interred in the city which he so much loved, and for whose people he laboured so earnestly. Mr. Van Meter was 68 years of age.

The Nun of Kenmare.—American mail news to hand says that at Pittsburg, U.S., it is positively stated that the celebrated Sister Mary Clare, the Nun of Kenmare, has changed her religious views, and is now actively opposing the Roman Catholic Church. It is added that the Nun of Kenmare will publish an autobiography containing the account of her conversion to Protestantism, which will reveal many secrets of the Church of Rome.

Rev. Canon Hoare has returned from his holiday with eyesight seriously impaired. There is much concern on this account among the members of his large congregation, and in Tunbridge Wells generally. The loss is the more marked because the richly evangelical nature of the Canon's preaching has been remarkably based upon Scripture, to which he has continually turned. He now requests the congregation to seek out for themselves the numerous Biblical references with which he has been accustomed to illustrate and enforce his discourses.

Dr. Barnardo, in Night and Day, refers to the law which gives a parent absolute rights over his children, although he may have utterly neglected his duties, and grossly abused to the worst ends the opportunities which the custody of the children gave him. "I am told that I shall have to give up children whom I have rescued, and let their young lives be once more smirched in the foul mire from which I took them. If God spares my life, however, I know I never shall. There is a case now pending, which I am told will go against me. Unless I give up a little girl whom I have rescued to the custody of a worthless fellow who claims to be her father, he will, I am told, apply to the Courts for a writ of Habeas Corpus. This is a case in which, if it be decided against me, I shall nevertheless decline to surrender the child, and I firmly believe that if I am committed to prison for contempt in refusing to obey such an order, more rapid progress will be made in one month in obtaining the repeal of an injurious law, than by the efforts of isolated philanthropists, in Parliament or out of it, in a whole year."

GIFTS TO CHARITIES.—The Philanthropist for November contains a full list of the awards to charities and societies just made by the administrators of the residue of the estate of the late Miss McKellar, of Argyll-lodge, Chapham-park, which lady, after providing reversionary benefits to some forty-five different hospitals and charities, left her residuary estate, amounting to £43,848, for division amongst other charitable and benevolent institutions, at the absolute discretion of her trustees.

THE EARLSWOOD ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS has accommodation for 700 patients. The present income enables the Committee to receive only 570. 150 applicants are earnestly seeking admission by election. Many of these must be disappointed unless funds are forthcoming. Contributions gratefully received. Superior provision made for private cases on payments regulated by the Board of Management.

FATHERLESS.—The Board of Managers of the ASYLUM for FATHERLESS CHILDREN, Reedham, Purley, Surrey, earnestly APPEAL for HELP to maintain and educate the 300 Children now under their care. These children have been admitted to the Asylum at ages varying from six months to eleven years, and will all be retained and cared for until 15 years of age.

The Institution is entirely Unsectarian, has no endowment, and is, therefore, dependent upon public benevolence for support.

The necessary expenditure averages £8,000 per annum, but the only reliable income—that from Annual Subscriptions—does not provide one-third of that amount, hence the necessity for this Appeal. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS will be most thankfully received. HENRY SPICER, Treasurer.
JOHN R. EDWARDS, Secretary.

ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL (instituted May 10, 1758).

Senior children at Maitland-park, N.W.
Sickly children at Convalescent Home, Harold-road, Margate.

635 orphan and other necessitous children from infancy to 14 years of age are now maintained and cared for by this National Charity. Founded more than a century and a quarter ago. More than 4 000 have been benefited.

President—H.R.H. the DUKE of CAMBRIDGE, K.G.

The NEXT ELECTION of CHILDREN will take place on Wednesday, January 30, 1889.

Children of both sexes, between infancy and 11 years of age, are eligible from all parts of the Empire.

Forms of nomination of candidates must be in the hands of the Secretary, completed, on or before November 30.

The need of FUNDS is most urgent.

THE SUFFERING AND UNEMPLOYED POOR.

Sympathising friends are heartily thanked for contributions toward giving Food, Coals, and Clothing to the Poor of a very poor London parish. For each 10s. forwarded, 15 adults or 20 children can be provided—by a local Committee—with a substantial meal.—A. STYLEMAN HERRING, Vicar St. Paul's, Clerkenwell (nearly 30 years in London), 45, Colebrooke-row, N.

UNIVERSAL WEEK OF PRAYER, JANUARY 6—13, 1839.—The Evangelical Alliance, by its various Branches throughout the world, has issued its annual invitation and programme for the Week of United and Universal Prayer at the commencement of next year. Ministers and others friendly to this object are cordially invited to co-operate. Papers containing the suggested subjects may be obtained of the Secretaries of the Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London.

"A more interesting series of homilies we have seldom, if ever read. Some of them are very beautiful."
English Churchman.

"This little volume comes upon us as a delightful surprise. It is full of freshness, life, and vigour—a rich intellectual treat. Among the many dry-as-dust publications purporting to be sermons, here is at last something worth reading, marking, and learning. The preface alone is worth the money charged for the whole book. 'Hawthorn Homilies' are very charming. All are good, from the first word to the last."—Homilist.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. W. H. Barlow, the vicar of Islington, has been mentioned as a possible suffragan bishop for the northern district of the diocese of London.

Bishop Crowther sailed on Saturday week in the s.s. Calabar for Sierra Leone. The Bishop is now eighty years of age, and just sixty-six years ago was rescued by a British man-of-war from the slave-dealers.

A ten-days' mission, conducted by Rev. S. A. Selwyn, vicar of St. James's, Hatcham, has been held at St. Mary's, Malden. The rector, Rev. A. L. Hunt, hopes to carry on further evangelistic work by means of the Church Army, a branch of which will shortly be formed.

The county of Shropshire, in which Bishop Walsham How spent twenty-eight years, has taken in hand a mission district in Tottenham, and has already contributed £1600 for the mission-hall and £1500 for the building of the church.

The boys of Rugby School entirely support a native Christian school in Masulipatam, South India, founded forty years ago by Henry Fox. There is now talk of adding mission work at home to this philanthropy. The sphere would be the East-end of London, or Leicester, or perhaps Birmingham.

In the parish of St. Paul's Lorrimore-square, Walworth, London, S.E, the work of evangelisation, says The Record, goes vigorously forward. The last development has been the establishment of a house for ladies who devote themselves to work among the poor. There are now four ladies residing in it, but more workers are urgently needed. Those already in residence are much overdone, and new wants become apparent almost every day.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A navvies' mission reading-room has been opened in connection with the Chinley (Derbyshire) Church, intended for the use of the men employed on the Dore and Chinley line.

Rev. Fred. C. B. Fairey has made a mission voyage of 1,427 miles down the Murray River, Western Australia, 1,150 miles of the distance in the Evangelist canoe. Soon after the close of a lecture in the North Adelaide Congregational Lecture Hall, the canoe and all the fittings were by some accident destroyed by fire.

Dr. Behrends, pastor of the Central Congregational Church in Brooklyn, told his people on Sunday, the 21st ult., that the year before they had given a little less than a thousand dollars to the American Board for Foreign Missions, and that this year he wanted thirty per cent. advance. When the collection came to be counted up it amounted to over twenty-one hundred dollars.

The North-West District of the London Congregational Union has arranged to hold an Autumnal Conference annually on Sunday-school work, to which are specially invited the ministers and delegates from the churches in the North-West district, and also the superintendents, secretaries, and two delegates (male or female) from each of the schools in these district. The first of the conferences was held on the 30th ult., in the schools of Paddington Chapel.

METHODIST.

The annual missionary gatherings are now being held in many circuits. To awaken a deepened interest in the foreign work, the use of the magic lantern is being resorted to with no little success. Rev. J. Nettleton, of Brixton, himself for some years a missionary in Fiji, has been giving representations of mission work in South London churches, and has attracted very large audiences.

The Primitive Methodist Missionary Society is receiving good support from a series of great district missionary conventions being held in different parts of the country. It is hoped to get the new expedition to Central Africa on its way to the interior early in the new year. The enterprise will be led by two English missionaries. Many prayers are being offered up for God's blessing to rest upon this expedition to the Barotsé valley.

A remarkable outpouring of God's Spirit has been manifested at Mere, Wilts., in the Primitive Methodist Motcombe Circuit, where Mr. John W. Bennett, of Southampton, has been labouring for three weeks. Seventy souls have professed decision. The greatest unanimity has existed between the Primitives and the Congregationalists of the town, and both churches have been blessed. Good work for God has been done in many other parts of the circuit where Mr. Bennett has laboured.

Encouraged by the hearty response to the appeal amounting in all to close upon £3000, the conductors of the West London Mission have set about the extension of the work. Lincoln house has been vacated by Mr. and Mrs. Nix and the brotherhood, who now occupy commodious premises in Fitzroy-square, to be called "Wiclif House." Lincoln House will be converted into a crèche and a shelter for friendless and homeless girls. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes announces that steps have been taken to secure an additional mission-hall in a crowded quarter.

The Adult Bible-class movement, says The Methodist Times, is spreading with considerable rapidity. As the result of what he had read in the Methodist newspapers of Mr. C. R. Parson's great class at Bristol, and of similar classes, Mr. Jennings, of Plymouth, was led to commence such a class in his own town. Mr. Jennings has been almost as successful as Mr. Parsons, and of late both these gentlemen have been employed in visiting various circuits, in order to help local workers to establish adult classes. Mr. Jennings has just visited Newcastle-on-Tyne, where he has assisted to commence one of these classes in the Elswick-road Circuit.

Mr. E. P. Telford, who has returned from an evangelistic tour in America, has been successfully conducting a month's mission in Scotland-street Methodist New Connexion Chapel, Sheffield. There have been overflowing congregations, and some remarkable conversions occurred.

SALVATION ARMY.

New barracks were opened last week at Kilburn, and this week at Ely.

The Clothworkers' Company have made a grant of £10 towards the Army funds.

Major Adams' report, at the Seventh Scotch Anniversary recently held in Glasgow, was most encouraging.

The Canadian-Indian party, who "farewelled" at Exeter Hall on Monday evening, leave London to-day for Genoa, and hope to arrive at Bombay on Dec. 9.

PRESBYTERIAN.

An eight-days' Gospel mission has been held in connection with the Silverhill Church, St. Leonards-on-Sea. This special effort had been before the minds and in the prayers of the people for several months past, and God has vouchsafed an abundant blessing upon it. Not a few have surrendered themselves to Christ, and several who have for years made a formal but lifeless profession of Christianity have been enabled to trust in the Redeemer, and to enter upon the joy and peace of believing.

A great revival has been the result of a three-weeks' mission at St. Andrew's Church, Swansea, conducted by Mr. W. Thomson, of Glasgow. The word was preached with power, and large numbers professed conversion. The members of the church have also been much quickened and refreshed. As an outcome of the services, a Guild for Young Men and Women has been formed, the object of which will be the enlargement of the Christian usefulness of its members. A permanent home mission in a poor district of the town is to be commenced immediately. The winter's work has been most auspiciously begun, and much blessing is expected to attend it.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Joseph James Neave returns to Australia on the 16th inst., expecting to spend some years more in service among the scattered Friends there.

Professor Trueblood, LL.D., writes an able paper in The Christian Worker, in support of periodical conferences of American Yearly Meetings, and a committee of Indiana Yearly Meeting recommends it, "provided six or more Yearly Meetings unite in the concern," 1892 for the first.

Hereford school anniversary was recently held, and was a happy and hopeful time. Growth all round marks the school's work, and several testified to the blessing received there. Frederick Pessions, Gloucester, and William Hobson, Cardiff, besides local friends, helped in the service.

On Saturday last the remains of Hannah, widow of the late Joshua Richardson, of Neath, were laid in their last resting-place there. She was 87 years old, and her death breaks another connecting link between a prominent and honoured generation now nearly gone, and our own.

Isabella Young, York, and Maria L. Gilpin, London, have just concluded a week's mission in one of the branches of Friends' Christian Mission, Birmingham. Every night, after the first, there were anxious souls "inquiring their way to Zion," and twenty-three pledges were taken at the Saturday evening temperance meeting.

BAPTIST.

Rev. E. L. Hamilton, formerly pastor of Hay-hill Chapel, Bath, and who for the past few years has been conducting services at the Assembly Rooms in that city, is about to leave for the mission field in Africa. At a farewell meeting good wishes were expressed for prosperity in his future work.

Notice has been given by Rev. John Haslam, president of the Yorkshire Baptist Association, to the Council of the Baptist Union, that it is his intention to move a resolution urging the desirability of the amalgamation of the General and the Particular Baptists, and praying that steps may forthwith be taken to effect it.

On Sunday week the first service in connection with the starting of a Baptist Chapel at Herne-hill, Surrey, was conducted by Mr. Frederic Carter (connected with Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College), at Railton-road, where the services will for a time be held. There was a full attendance, and the singing by a choir of boys from Mr. Spurgeon's Orphanage was much appreciated.

At Longcross Baptist Chapel, Cardiff, on a recent Thursday evening, Rev. F. C. Spurr gave an address on the Ordinance of Baptism, in the course of which he expressed his willingness to baptize there and then any who desired it, and who would satisfactorily answer his questions. Five persons came forward, two of whom, after a declaration of personal faith in Christ, were immersed, the other three being reserved until the following Sunday. Those baptized belonged to the Church of England.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The Sabbath evening evangelistic services at Tobermory continue to be highly appreciated, and there is evidence of blessing.

Mr. and Mrs. Webster conducted evangelistic services in the Fishermen's Hall, Buckie, on Sabbath week. The people turned out well.

Evangelistic meetings, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., Banff, have been held in the Seafield-street Hall. Mr. McKenzie was the evangelist.

A daily service has been introduced in Govan Parish Church. Besides an afternoon service the Church is open daily for six or seven hours for the purpose of private devotion.

The Edinburgh Evening Dispatch is publishing almost every day reports of addresses by Rev. John McNeill. The Dispatch is the evening issue of The Scotsman.

The Bible-class at Clutha Works dining-hall, Plantation, Glasgow, conducted by Mr. W. S. Ross, held their first soiree on Thursday last. Over two hundred were present. Mr. Ross gave an interesting account of the work, which has been blessed to the conversion of many.

The annual Conversazione of the Home Mission Union was held last Friday in the Christian Institute, Glasgow. The purpose of this Mission is to supply the missing link between the Church and the masses. During the past twelve months 828 men and women of the non-churchgoing class have been led to join the Church through its instrumentality.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. John Dickenson, for forty-four years a minister of the Primitive Methodist Connexion.—Rev. W. F. Everitt, of Helston, Cornwall, a prominent minister of the United Methodist Free Churches.—Rev. G. Cooper, of Liverpool, senior naval instructor and chaplain in the Navy.—Rev. W. H. Iggulden, Warden of Browne's Hospital, Stamford, whilst preaching on Sunday afternoon in Little Casterton Church, near Stamford, was seized with a fit of apoplexy, and expired within four hours.

Appeals.

Borough Market.—Miss E. Sandell begs for clothing to be distributed in connection with the mothers' meeting at the Mission Hall, 9, Park-street, Borough, S.E.

Medical Aid Society.—This Society, established 1879, to provide poor gentlewomen with the best medical aid and medicines, free of all charge, is now £150 in debt. A friend has kindly promised £10, if nine others will do likewise before Christmas. Full particulars on application to Captain Hamilton, 2, East India-avenue, London, E.C.

Ham Yard Soup Kitchen and Hospice.—The Hospice contains twenty beds for cases of temporary sickness. For years on Christmas Eve the committee has been enabled to give a good dinner to about a thousand very poor families. Gifts of money and kind are solicited for this special object. Communications should be addressed to Mr. W. Stevens, superintendent, Ham Yard, W.

Brunswick Hall, Poplar.—Will your readers help us to carry on the work amongst the poor at this hall? We are now without funds. In addition to giving free meals, visits are paid to railway and police stations, docks, ships, hospitals, &c. We carry on Sunday-schools and Band of Hope, work amongst dock labourers, &c. Any help in funds, left-off clothing, tracts, &c., will be thankfully received by George Fuller, superintendent, Brunswick Hall, Poplar.

St. Andrew's, Hoxton.—We have started a branch of the "Young Men's Friendly Society." The main object is to obtain a good influence over boys between the ages of thirteen and eighteen. For this purpose, in addition to Sunday Bible-classes, various games, papers, magazines, &c., are provided for their use three evenings a week. We should be much obliged if your readers would send us suitable periodicals, &c.; also any old numbers of The British Workman.—(Rev.) W. L. May, St. Andrew's Church Institute, Canal-road, Kingsland-road, N.

REV. W. HAY AITKEN will conduct a mission in St. Mary Magdalene, Upton, Torquay, November 18 to December 3. Our readers are asked to unite in prayer for blessing on the work, and in praise for much blessing given on Stone and St. Helen's missions.

MR. RICHARD MURPHY is conducting a three-weeks' Gospel mission at Adelphi Hall, Paisley, in connection with the Lodging-house Mission. The meetings have been very good; the word has been preached with power, and not a few have decided for Christ.

WEST AFRICA.—At the monthly meeting of the C.M.S. Lay Workers' Union, held on Monday week, Rev. W. Allan, vicar of St. James's, Bermondsey, gave an account of his recent visit to West Africa. Sierra Leone, Mr. Allan said, was not the dismal swamp so many seemed to imagine, but was in as beautiful a situation as probably most present had ever seen. In describing the work of the various missions, he said that the progress made during the last twenty years was nothing short of wonderful. Large congregations, regular attendance at the Lord's Supper, hardly a child unbaptized, complete absence of Sunday trading, all testified to reality and success. Still, with all this attention to external things, a low moral tone in many instances had to be deplored. This was doubtless due to hereditary causes, and could not occasion surprise when it is considered that only a generation or two back the people were sunk in the lowest heathen degradation. In some cases he had never met men of greater spirituality. —Record.

Inspiration of the Scriptures.—One is often met with the inquiry, "What evidence have you that the Scriptures are inspired?"...You cannot wade through books at a conversation, and I want to be able to reply off-hand.—Harold. No one but the Holy Spirit can enable you to "reply off-hand" as to the inspiration of the Scriptures. When, by his operation, the living and powerful Word has pierced you to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and discerned the thoughts and intents of your heart, you will have no difficulty in "replying off-hand," but not in an off-handed way, to the question, "What evidence have you that the Scriptures are inspired?"

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Mr. William Forbes closed his mission on Thursday last at Heyrod-street Hall, Manchester. Many pledges and ribbons were taken.

The Holborn Guardians have resolved to allow no more public-houses, and not to renew those existing on their Highgate property.

It has been decided in the Scotch Court of Session that publicans compelled by law to close earlier are not entitled to a reduction in the licence fee.

The Christian Leader says many day-school teachers squeeze in a little temperance teaching, either in the headings of the copybooks, the music, or other ways.

The Governor of the Isle of Man proposes extensive changes in the local licensing system. One is that grocers having a licence must have an entirely separate shop for liquor sale.

The London West-end Cabdrivers' Gospel Temperance Association recently held a successful meeting. Mr. T. Gent, Missionary to Cabmen, gave a report of the past year, mentioning cases of men who have been saved from drink and moral ruin.

Mr. George Blaiklock has during the past month been addressing a large number of farewell meetings. He has visited Manchester, Hoylake, West Kirby, Bath, Bodmin, Plymouth, Shaldon, and Newton Abbott, and all the meetings have been successful. Mr. Blaiklock will leave England for his Australian tour in February next, and will be busy lecturing up to that time.

Mr. Edward T. Smith, of Birmingham, has given his recitals of Gough's Orations in Moneymore, Donegal, Enniskillen, Boyle, Castlefin, Coleraine, Ballymena, Lecumpher, Coagh, Downpatrick, Dublin, and Kingstown, receiving a most enthusiastic reception in each place. Mr. Smith conducted a mission in Londonderry from the 7th to the 14th ult. He is now conducting a mission in Waterford, and will subsequently address meetings in Limerick, Cork, &c.

FOREIGN.

In New Guinea to supply natives with firearms, drink, or opium will be illegal.

At Sacramento, California, the police may revoke any licence on petition of a majority of the residents in the block.

An Australian company has lately purchased about 500,000 acres of land on the River Murray, and though not teetotalers, have prohibited the sale of drink on the estate.

SOUTH LONDON PALACE.—Gospel services are about to be held here on Sunday nights during the winter, by the Evangelistic Mission. Mr. Wm. Grove will preach on Sunday evening next at seven; the hall is in London-road, near the Elephant and Castle. The co-operation of Christian workers in the neighbourhood is desired.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL MEETING

WILL BE HELD IN THE LECTURE HALL

On MONDAY, November 19, 1888.

The PRESIDENT, the Right Hon.

THE LORD MAYOR,

WILL TAKE THE CHAIR AT SEVEN O'CLOCK.

The following Gentlemen are expected to be present:—Samuel Montagu, Esq., M.P.; Rev. J. B. Heard; Rev. Wm. Tyler, D.D.; F. A. Bevan, Esq., Treasurer; Henry Hill, Founder and Hon. Sec.

The prizes for progress at the Evening Classes, and a Swimming Challenge Cup, will be presented by the LORD MAYOR. During the evening there will be a Gymnastic Display by the Institute Club. Admission Free by Ticket.

HENRY HILL, Hon. Sec., 38, Bow-lane, E.C.

FREE DINNERS TO HUNGRY CHILDREN, AND HELP FOR THE SICK AND DESTITUTE.

THE COMMITTEE OF THE

LATYMER ROAD MISSION

Plead very earnestly for Funds to carry on their Winter Work, which comprises a Soup Kitchen, Relief Fund, Evening Shelters for Boys and Girls, Gospel Temperance Meetings, and other agencies. Much distress prevails in the neighbourhood. Contributions will be gratefully acknowledged.

Miss GLADSTONE, Hon. Sec.
CHARLES SMALLMAN, Secretary.

Latymer-road Mission, Blechynden-street, Notting-hill, W.

HOMES of HOPE,

4, , & 6, REGENT SQUARE, GRAY'S-INN ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case if it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

The Committee are in very urgent need of £250.

Bankers—LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK (Bloomsbury Branch), 218, High Holborn.

The Anchorage.

HEBREWS vi. 19.

To Shelter, and give Spiritual care to, Young Women lately Fallen into Sin, whether or not about to become Mothers, with a special annexe and suitable arrangements for such as are of gentle birth.

ANYONE desiring admission for such cases to apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. STUART-WORTLEY, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London, also for Servants trained in the Anchorage House. Donations may be sent to Mrs. Stuart-Wortley for the Anchorage Mission, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

MISSION TO CENTRAL AFRICA.

Married Layman and his wife (Church of Ireland), who have been in Central Africa about two years, and who speak fluently Kiswahili language, feel called upon by God to open a Mission among the Wamasai or other tribes of Eastern Equatorial Africa, to whom, as yet, no missionary has gone forth; if the Lord would lay it upon one or two of His own people to provide the means which would be required to take them there. References permitted to a leading Missionary Society, address of which may be had by addressing AFRICAN MISSIONARY, care of Messrs. Dickeson & Stewart, 4, Queen Victoria-street, London.

THE "CARTER" HOME

FOR DESTITUTE BOYS,

65, HIGH STREET, CLAPHAM
(LATE SOUTH LONDON REFUGE).

OPENING OF A SUBURBAN BOYS' HOME.

THE COMMITTEE of the "Carter" Home for Destitute Boys, Clapham, invite all Christians interested in Rescue Work amongst Boys, to join in the OPENING MEETINGS, on WEDNESDAY, NOV. 21, at 3.30.

A Special Meeting for praise and thanksgiving will be held. T. A. DENNY, Esq., will preside, and addresses will be given by the Rev. F. C. LILLINGSTON, M.A., Miss MACPHERSON, the Rev. G. FORRESTER, the Rev. MARCUS RAINSFORD, M.A., Mr. R. C. MORGAN, Editor of THE CHRISTIAN, W. OLNEY, Esq., and others. The EARL OF ABERDEEN is also expected to be present.

A PUBLIC MEETING

Will be held at 7.30 p.m., when Sir JOHN KENNAWAY, Bart., M.P., will preside, supported by J. S. GILLIAT, Esq., M.P., Rev. Dr. CONCANNON, Rev. Canon HUSSEY, D.D., Rev. JAS. DOUGLAS, M.A., Rev. ALFRED MARTYN, Rev. J. G. ROGERS, B.A., the Rev. Dr. MCEWAN, READER HARRIS, Esq.

TEA will be provided at the close of Afternoon Meeting. Every opportunity will be given for inspecting Premises.

As the new Premises are Freehold, and will accommodate 200 Boys, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN ARE EARNESTLY ENTREATED to assist, so that this Home, which has the sympathy all sections of the Christian Church, may be opened FREE OF DEBT. The Home receives really of destitute Boys, without vote or interest, from all parts. It has the great advantage of being in a good locality, so that the Boys can attend the Board schools, also the Sunday-schools: the great aim is to fit them for usefulness, and lead them to Christ. Last Report can be obtained on application at the Home. Subscriptions will be thankfully received by—

SIR JOHN KENNAWAY, BART., M.P.
EUGENE CRONIN, Esq., M.D., Clapham.
Or by MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

The Home is close to Clapham-road Station; trams and 'buses from all parts also pass the door.

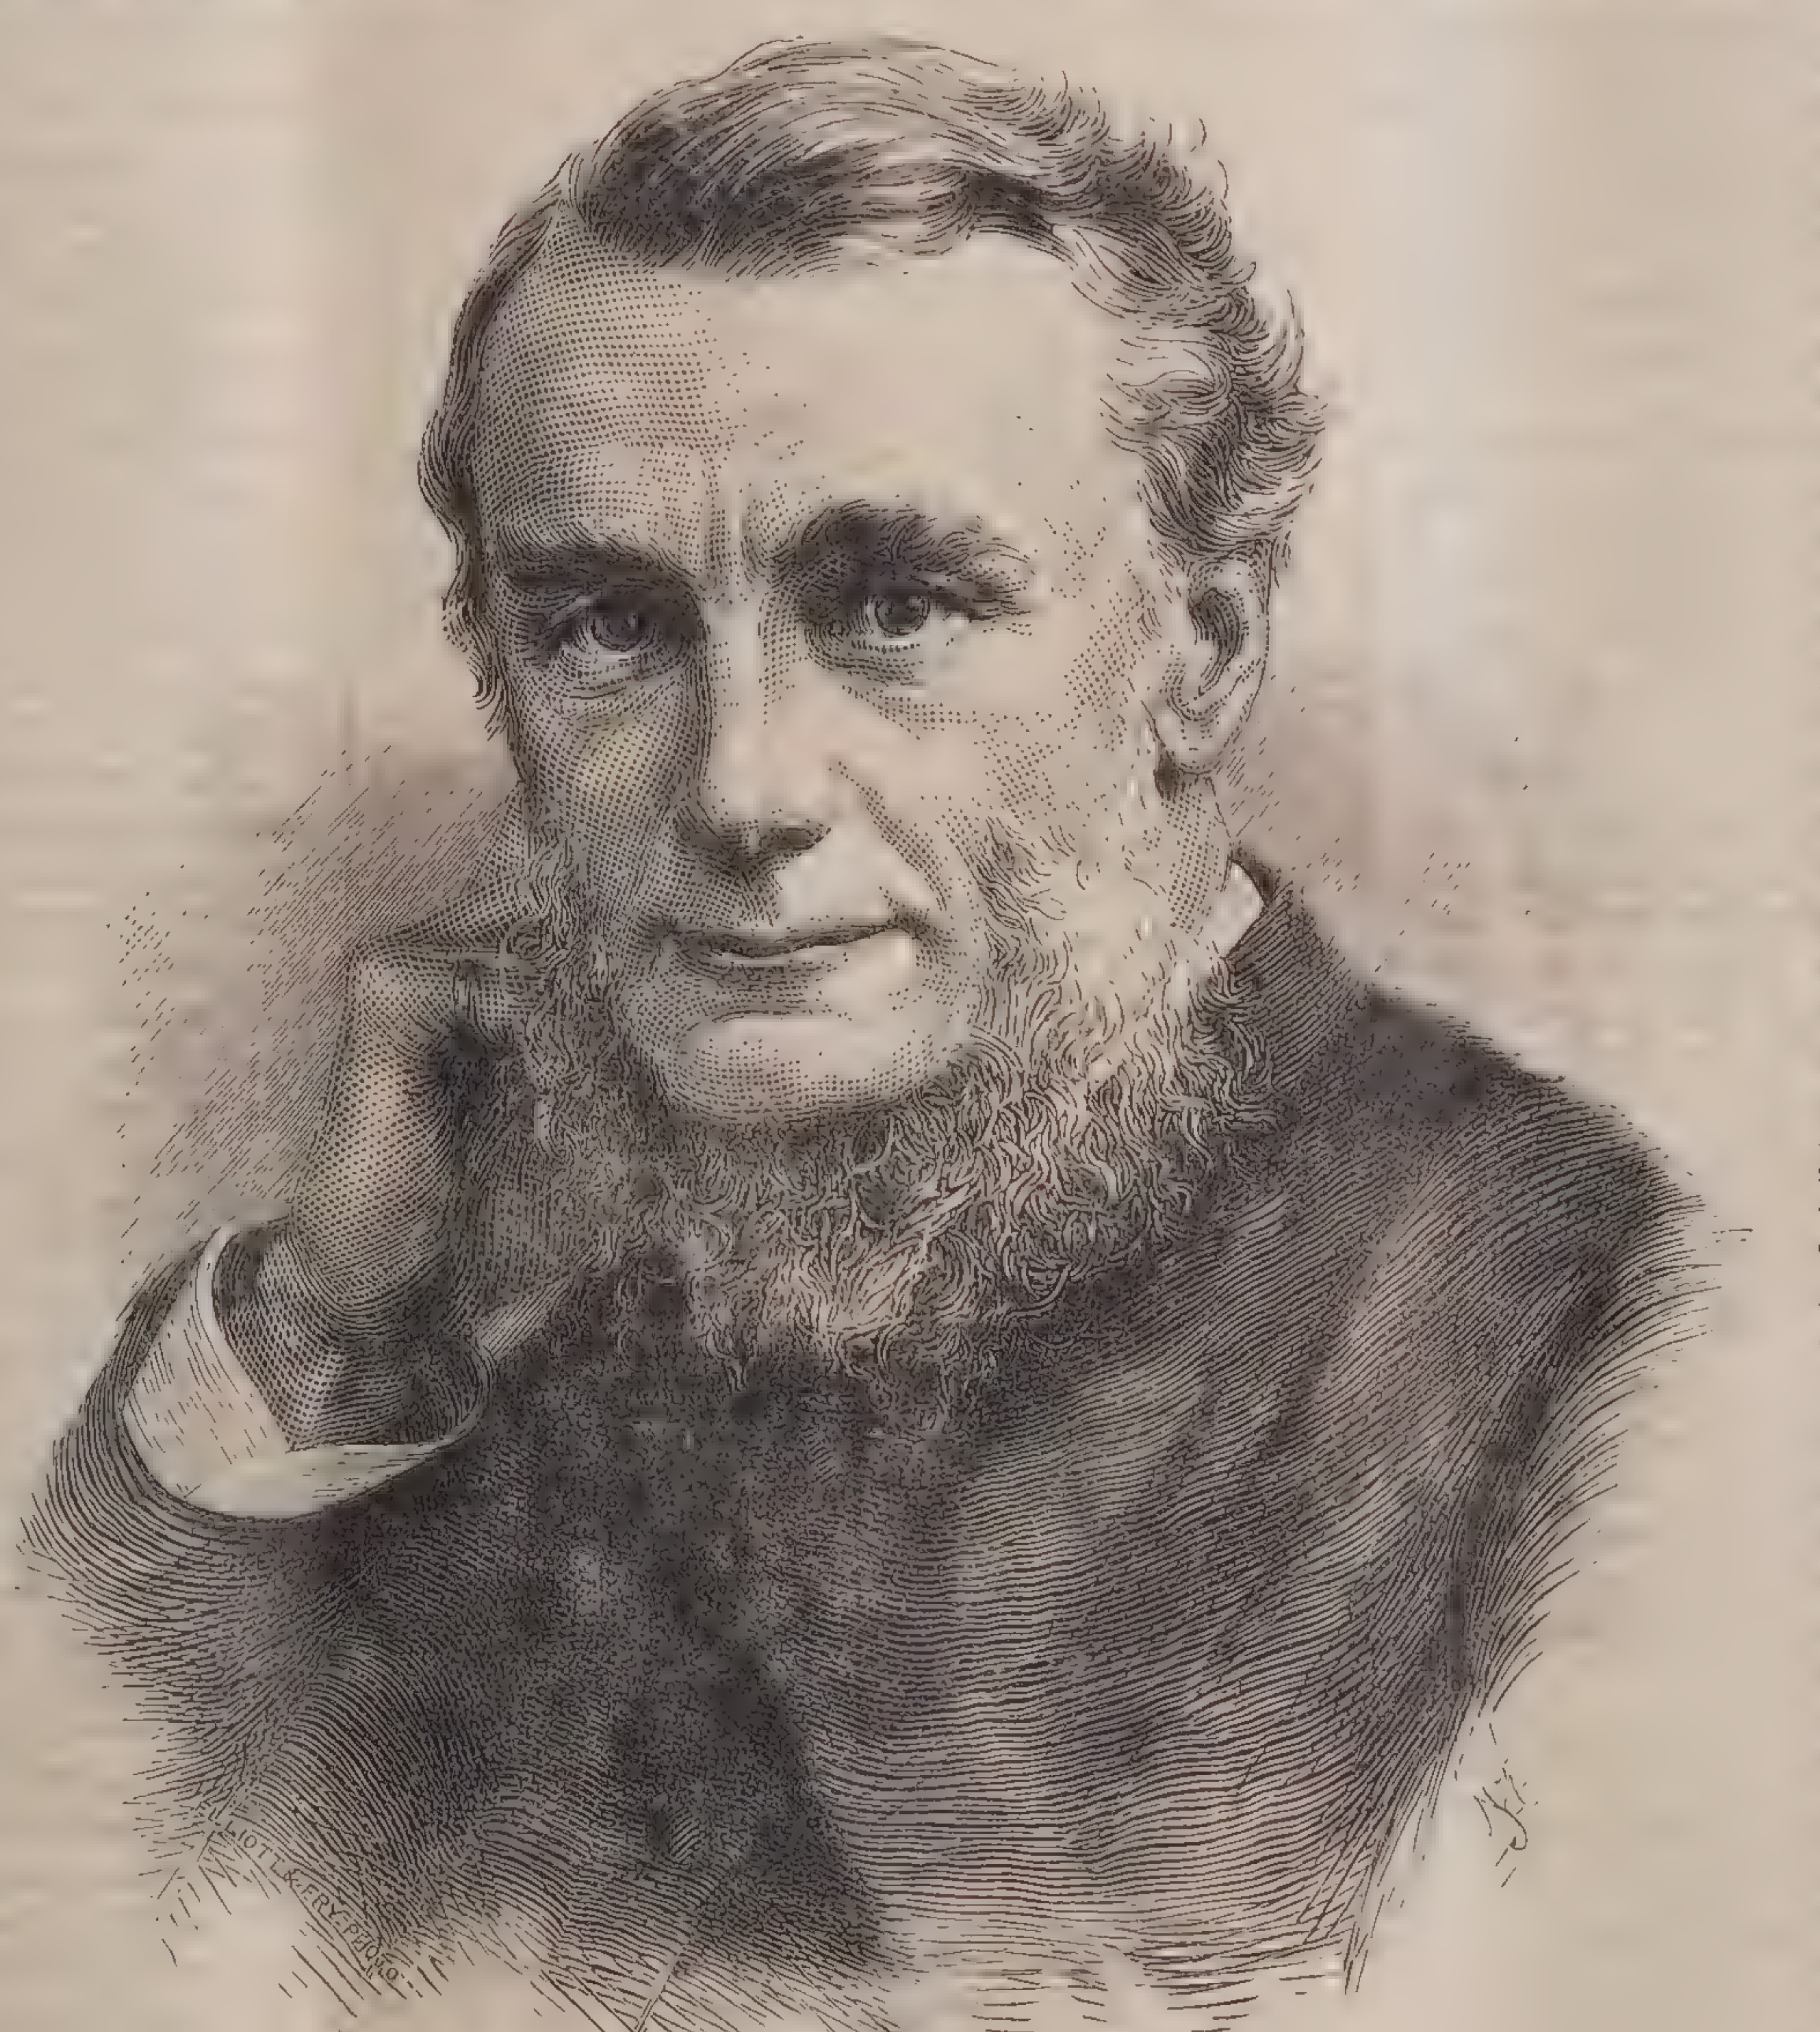
Lord Bishop of Exeter.



(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

THE subject of our present sketch is the only son of the late Rev. Edward Bickersteth of Watton, first cousin of the late Robert Bickersteth Bishop of Ripon, and father of the present Bishop of Japan. He was born in 1825, while his father was assistant secretary of the Church Missionary Society and resided at Barnsbury Park. He commenced his University course in 1843 at Trinity College, Cambridge, and in January, 1847, when he took his degree, appeared in the Classical and Mathematical Triposes.

Early in February, 1848, he was ordained by the Bishop of Norwich, and later in the same month he married his cousin, Miss Rosa Bignold. His curacy was in the country, some fifteen miles north from Norwich, at Banningham, the living of which village, in the patronage of the Bignold family, was held by Rev. J. W. Jex-Blake. He was curate here when, in February, 1850, his father died, and he remained so until 1851. In 1852 he became curate of Christ Church, Tunbridge Wells, under Rev. T. W. Franklyn; and the same year he was presented to the Dorsetshire rural living of Hinton Martell by the Earl of Shaftesbury, between whom and his father there had existed a most affectionate friendship. In 1855 he accepted the important incumbency of Christ Church, Hampstead, London, his successor at Hinton Martell being Mr. Charles Bridges, who was then needing a less laborious sphere of duty than Weymouth. In 1885 Mr. Bickersteth followed Dr. Temple in the see of Exeter.

Amid the changes of the times Mr. Bickersteth ever cherished his early Watton principles, and during the thirty years of his residence in the suburbs of the Metropolis the name he bore was sufficient to double the influence merited by his unquestioned talents and ministerial faithfulness. Among the points wherein the father more conspicuously lives in the son may be mentioned a warm affection for the Church Missionary Society. When, a few years ago, a new wing was at great cost, but on urgent necessity, added to the House in Salisbury-square, the vicar of Christ Church stepped forward with £250, associating with it the name and memory of his beloved father, and inviting others who possessed sufficient means for such gifts to commemorate in a similar manner some dear or honoured name. Canon Babington was the first to respond with two donations in memory of his wife, and her sister Miss Charlotte Elliott; and the result has been the disappearance of a very large part of the building debt, and the appearance of a mural brass with a long and growing list of the commemorated and the commemorators, which is one of the things to see at the Church Missionary House. At this year's anniversary of the Society, Dr. Bickersteth occupied the pulpit of St. Bride's, Fleet-street, as the selected preacher.

The Bishop is yet too new to his diocese for his ministry there to have told in a way which could be gauged by an outsider. That his position is one of difficulty, involving many an anxious thought as to the imperative line of duty, few will need to be reminded. The maxim of "To his own Master" is one to be remembered by all who are more or less directly affected by his administration where this has to be exercised within clear bounds of discretion. Integrity of purpose and prayerful action, we are convinced, are the very last things that will ever be doubted of him, however much judgments may differ from his in other respects. One of the things that may have attracted the notice of distant observers is that in his charges the Bishop of Exeter has sought to call the attention of the clergy to some of the less studied but yet very important subjects of Holy Scripture, like that, for instance, of the Second Advent. There have been many improvements made in late years in conducting visitations, and this may prove a useful experiment in the same direction.

Another thing in which the Rector of Watton survives in his son is the large use made of the Press; but the Bishop has developed a poetical talent quite his own, and this we have reserved here for our final remarks. While an undergraduate at Cambridge, Henry Bickersteth gave signs of no mean ability by gaining the Chancellor's gold medal for English verse, open to the whole University, three years following, a success never achieved again before or since in the whole seventy-five years of the existence of the prize, though in a few instances a competitor has carried it off twice, as Macaulay, Praed, C. Wordsworth, and one or two more. The subjects were: "The Tower of London," in 1844; "Caubul," in 1845; "Cæsar's Invasion of Britain," in 1846. It is not, therefore, surprising that Mr. Bickersteth brought out a volume of poems (these three included) in 1849, when he was but twenty-four. In 1851 he published "Nineveh," a poem; and in 1854, "Ezekiel," which gained the Seatonian Prize at Cambridge. These earlier efforts prepared for the poem which has made his name now familiar in literature, "Yesterday, To-day, and for Ever." It first appeared in 1866, and its wide circulation is attested by the issue of more than seventeen editions at various prices, ranging from a shilling to half-a-guinea. A long poetical work in twelve books with such an evidence of readers cannot but possess striking merits. It is indeed in many respects remarkable. Dealing with a profoundly mysterious subject, but one lending itself with unusual facility to imaginative treatment, the poem has ever excited a very keen interest, and even readers who have been unable to indorse the author's ideas in some parts are impressed with the strength of its execution, and confess the charm of the work as a whole, provided they think it a wise thing to enter upon such realms of thought at all without the closest possible textual guide of Inspiration.

This poem was preceded by two tracts and succeeded by another, which show how the author's studies were being drawn all about that period to the subject of the world unseen. These were: "The Blessed Dead," in 1863; "The Risen Saints," in 1865; "The Second Death," in 1869; all close investigations of Scripture texts. These were for study and meditation. For liturgic use within his own church he issued his well-known "Hymnal Companion to the Book of Common Prayer" in 1870, and in 1883 a meditative companion to the Prayer Book (which he greatly prized), entitled, "From Year to Year." This is in fact a new "Christian Year," which claims a place, and assuredly not in vain, in the series started by Heber and continued by Keble, Monsell, and C. Wordsworth. When we have mentioned a "Commentary on the New Testament," which has had a circulation of many thousands, we have not exhausted the list of the Bishop's publications; nor when we have laid down our pen shall we have described more than a fractional part of what the Church of Christ owes, under God, to the family of Bickersteth.

Two Mount Hermon Graduates.

Dear Sir,—Permit me, through your pages, to introduce two young brethren, graduates of Mount Hermon School, and now in this country, Messrs. Hyde and Stevenson. Since leaving Mount Hermon, Mr. Hyde has been pastor's assistant at the Chicago Avenue Church, while Mr. Stevenson has aided evangelists in service of song, besides being officially connected with the Brooklyn Y.M.C.A.

Pastors needing evangelistic help this winter would find these young men efficient workers. Mr. Hyde preaches the Gospel of Christ faithfully, while his fellow-helper does good service with choirs and solos. They are ready to co-operate with every superintendent of Christian work, in halls or churches. Both are connected with evangelical churches in the United States. Though recently from America, they are natives of Ireland. I heartily commend them as modest, earnest, and judicious young evangelists. Letters will reach them, care of Y.M.C.A., Dublin.

In best bonds, Geo. C. Needham.

Can Pentecost be Regained?

"Thus it is written, that Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached unto all the nations in his name." The latter was as necessary as the former. If the Christ tasted death for every man, every man should know it. If it was written that the Christ should suffer and rise again the third day, it was also written that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations.

The necessity in each case lay in the Scriptures of truth. From Genesis to John the Baptist—from "Thou shalt bruise his heel" to "Behold the Lamb of God which beareth away the sin of the world," a suffering Messiah had been foretold; and from "To Him shall the gathering of the peoples be" to "My name shall be great among the Gentiles," it had been shown that the good tidings of redemption were intended for the whole world.

Many times did the Lord, before and after his resurrection, urge this upon his Apostles (Matt. xxiv. 14; xxviii. 19, 20; Luke xxiv. 46, 47; Acts i. 8; xxvi. 16—18). The Book of Acts is a record of their obedience to his command. The Epistles declare that Jesus tasted death for everyone; that He gave Himself a ransom for all; that God is the Saviour of all men, especially of them that believe; and that the Gospel is the power of God to everyone that believeth. And the Apocalypse contains repeated visions of the redeemed out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, who have come out of great tribulation, and washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

The declaration of the message by human lips, even of eye-witnesses of his glory on the holy mount and of his sufferings on the cross, would be of no avail without the power from on high—the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. Therefore Jesus told them, "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you, but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be clothed with power from on high." And on the day of Pentecost the promised Spirit was given—the promised power fell upon them, and the evangelisation of the world began by the hundred and twenty from the upper room speaking in all languages the wonderful works of God. But nearly two thousand years have passed, and little progress has been made in the accomplishment of this great commission.

The day of Pentecost inaugurated the New Dispensation. When a monarch is crowned, his coronation day is expected to be followed by years of reigning. When a railway is opened, it is expected that trains will never cease to run. But, instead of the day of Pentecost being succeeded by Pentecostal centuries, the one accord was early broken and the pristine power lost. The great calamity which has befallen the Church is the loss of Pentecost. Nothing can compensate for this. Without Pentecostal power, the Church is like Samson bereft of his locks, and weak as other men.

Let us consider what were the characteristics of that time, if haply, knowing what they were, and seeking them by faith and prayer, they may be restored to us once more.

Jesus had been glorified. John, a year before, had said, "The Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified." But now God had glorified Him, and said, "Sit Thou on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool."

Pentecost was the fiftieth day from the resurrection of the Lord Jesus. "Seven Sabbaths shall be complete." This symbolic period represented a perfect rest of faith in the risen Christ. And thus Jesus was glorified by man as well as God. Pentecost was counted from the first day of the week, the resurrection day, and it fell upon the first day of the week, the resurrection day, fifty days after: thus emphasising the great truth of the Gospel, the resurrection of Christ, and our resurrection in Him.

The hundred and twenty disciples, both men and women, were all with one accord in one place. They were of one accord in believing that Jesus was the Son of God—the promised seed of the woman; that He had died to take away the sin of the world; that He had ascended into heaven, and that all power was given unto Him in heaven and on earth. They were of one accord in obedience to their Lord's command to evangelise the world; of one accord in the consciousness of their own insufficiency, and in tarrying together until they were endued with power from on high; and when the Spirit came upon them as a rushing, mighty wind, and the tongue of fire sat upon each of them, they all, with one accord, spake in all the diverse tongues the wonderful works of God, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

The day of Pentecost and the outpouring of the Holy Ghost is historically past, and never can return, any more than any other past event can happen a second time. But the experience of Pentecost, which would never have been lost had the conditions of its continuance been maintained, may be, and ought to be, regained.

So far as God is concerned, those conditions have never been reversed. Jesus has been glorified, and the Holy Ghost has been given. But a blessing may be given yet not received. God gave his only-begotten Son, but the world does not receive Him. The glorified Son has received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, and sent forth the Paraclete, but the Church does not—cannot—receive Him in Pentecostal fulness, because the conditions have been departed from.

Those conditions were: (1) Acceptance of the call to be the witnesses of Jesus Christ, "Ye shall be my witnesses, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." (2) Obedience to the great commission, "All authority hath been given unto Me in heaven and on earth. Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I command you: and, lo, I am with you all the days, even to the end of the age." (3) Implicit belief that apart from Him they could do nothing, and consequent waiting, in sevenfold rest of faith, upon the risen Saviour. for the power of the Holy Ghost upon them; which power had been promised solely for the purpose of fulfilling the great commission to evangelise the world. (4) Unanimity in this faith; in this obedience; in this waiting for the promised power: "They were all with one accord in one place." All the people of God cannot now be physically in one place, as those hundred and twenty were; but we may be spiritually in one place—at the throne of grace—which was the essential thing: "These all with one accord continued stedfastly in prayer."

A measure of Pentecostal grace and power will be given to the individual disciple whose heart is fixed to obey the great command; who prays, "Unite my heart to fear thy name:"

Let all my powers be joined
Thy glorious name to raise.

A more than proportionate measure of the same power will be given to any number of believers who are of one accord, continuing stedfastly in prayer, having chosen the one thing needful, the good part which shall not be taken from them, to sit at Jesus' feet, and hear and obey his word, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to the whole creation: he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned."*

But "only with all saints" can we comprehend the love of Christ, or receive the Pentecostal baptism of the Holy Ghost. "For we are members one of another." And "God hath set the members every one of them in the body," of which Christ is the Head: "from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."

Oneness in judgment, oneness in opinion, oneness in experience, is impossible; but oneness of faith in Christ, and oneness in obedience to his great commission to evangelise the world is not impossible; and without these Pentecost can never be restored. But when the members of the Church which is in God the Father are content to leave the husks of selfishness and the chaff of party for the finest of the wheat, continuing in supplication for the fulfilment of Jesus' prayer: "That they all may be one, that the world may believe that thou hast sent Me," then Pentecost in its integrity and fulness, the gift of the Spirit without measure, will be restored, and with it the centuries that the locust hath eaten; so that the Bride will make herself ready, and haste the coming of the day of God. M.

Dr. Saphir on the Bible.—3.

At St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington, on Thursday, last week, Rev. Dr. Saphir delivered the third of his series of four addresses on the Bible. The weather was unfavourable, but nevertheless the attendance was large. In the course of the preliminary service, 2 Pet. i. 15—21 was read, special emphasis being laid upon the re-assuring words: "Prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

Dr. Saphir's object on this occasion was to accentuate his previous argument that Holy Scripture is the Word of God. It does not simply contain that Word, combined with something besides, but it is, in deed and truth, a revelation from God. It was shown at the outset that one spirit pervades the entire Book, one light illumines it, one hope animates it, and the voice we hear therein is that of the Eternal One, who, having in his own mind purposed great things for our salvation and to his glory, spoke unto us in various portions and divers manners, and, moreover, caused the words to be written for our instruction.

The great truths of the Bible are not put forward in a methodical or systematic form; doctrine does not succeed doctrine, and facts and promises are not arranged in a way calculated to make the learning of them specially easy. There is, however, in Scripture that harmonious irregularity which is found in nature. Above all, Scripture shows us a history in which God Himself was the great Agent. God takes the initiative throughout; his acts have priority, not merely in time, but also in causality. After the fall of man, God begins by giving promises. After the three great catastrophes, or judgments—the expulsion from the Garden of Eden; the judgment of the flood in the days of Noah; and the dispersion of the human race at the Tower of Babel—God begins the golden history of election and grace, in the call of Abraham, which does not end until the appearing of Jesus Christ and the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, and, in fact, concludes with the Apostle Paul being a preacher of the Gospel not only in Jerusalem, but even in Rome. This point having been further illustrated, it was maintained that as God acts so He speaks; He interferes in action, and also in revelation and oracle.

The progress of events leading up to the appearing of Christ was beautifully illustrated. After many promises and much waiting, Christ came in "the fulness of time." Century upon century elapsed while this consummation was being expected, and in that time God was not only preparing his chosen nation of Israel, the womb out of which the Messiah was to come, but by many of the outstanding characters, such as Abel, Moses, Isaac, and David, He prefigured the coming Deliverer, as well as indicated his work and offices by such things as the brazen serpent and the typical appointments of the Tabernacle. Moreover, not only was the nation prepared for the first advent of Christ, but also for his second, so that all that is told us in the Scriptures about Israel—even the genealogies, statements about localities, and minute prophecies respecting Israel's restoration to their own land, and their condition in those days—are a necessary part of the Word of God, although perhaps not so interesting to some of us as other parts are. The Old Testament history is indeed a drama and not a monologue. Israel was sometimes obedient, at other times disobedient, but God overruled their unbelief and unfaithfulness, for his purpose and election stand sure.

After referring to the five books of Moses, which specially set forth the beginnings of things, God ever taking the initiative, Dr. Saphir pointed out that the ancient Hebrews who collected the Scriptures called the historical books, beginning with Joshua, called them "the Former Prophets," and in this they certainly showed their wisdom, for the history of the Jews was not drawn up on the same principles as secular histories, but it has reference throughout to the kingdom of God. It hastens to one consummation, the advent of the Messiah; and everything recorded stands in a more or less direct relation thereto. So the writers must have had the Prophetic mind, the Theocratic spirit; more than that, He who knoweth the end from the beginning must have guided them. Besides, they were not mere historians, for "whatsoever was written aforetime was written for our learning." Whether, then, penned by Samuel, or Joshua, or someone who remains anonymous, the real author was Divine.

The objection that those writings which contain records of man's folly cannot be the Word of God was then referred to. Certainly they are the Word of God, for God distinctly wants us to know these things; He wants to show us what sort of a world it is in which we live, and the anatomy of our own heart. In the Bible wickedness and villainy, private and public, are fully described, but in a way that only God can portray them—in their real nature and depth, and in such a way that the poison is, as it were, hermetically sealed. The Bible also contains words spoken by the devil, and most important it is that we should know what the devil says. One of the truths revealed to us in Scripture—a truth of which this age has no hold, and of which believers have but little hold—is the important doctrine concerning the devil and his kingdom and influence over men.

Other objections having been referred to, Dr. Saphir emphasised the human element of Scripture. God's channels of blessing to man are all human. Then he spoke of the Divine element. One after another the prophets hesitated to do the will of God; some even expostulated. But against their own inclinations they delivered the message God gave them. The later prophets quoted the earlier writers, and the New Testament Scriptures quoted the Old. Then, again, Jesus the Son of God explained his actions by "It is written," and sent his Apostles into the world to bear testimony thereof. Scripture is now the rule of faith, because the source and foundation of faith. "Faith cometh from hearing, and hearing by the Word of God."

Glasgow Home Mission Union.

Five years ago this organisation was instituted for the purpose of prosecuting the task of gathering in the non-churchgoing population. All the evangelical denominations were invited to co-operate, and nearly all responded. The president of the Union at present is Dr. Marshall Lang, and the secretary Dr. Joseph Corbett. The Council is composed of representatives of almost every denomination.

At the annual meeting, recently held, encouraging statements were made as to the results achieved, though the fact was deplored that some of the co-operating congregations do not prosecute the work so steadily and earnestly as could be wished. Good work, however, is being done by a large staff of workers, and doubtless the Union will win its way to the sympathy and support of Christians in Glasgow and elsewhere.

AMONG JEWS IN THE EAST-END.—Mr. Israel Isaiah Aschkenasi has for some years been privileged to carry on a good work among his brethren according to the flesh in the East-end of London. He has recently taken the premises, 160, Brick-lane, Spitalfields, and every Saturday afternoon there is Gospel preaching for adults, and a service specially for children. Mrs. Aschkenasi is labouring among the Jewish women, and by various channels and different means many have been helped and blessed, temporarily and spiritually. Mr. Aschkenasi's address is 52, Alconbury-road, Clapton.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

V.—WHAT IS MAN?

Hebrews ii. 5—9.

In the first great division of this treatise, we have seen the incomparable superiority of the Lord Jesus to angels, and archangels, and all the heavenly host. But now there arises an objection which was very keenly realised by these Hebrew Christians, and, which, to a certain extent, presses upon us all, Why did the Son of God become man? How are the sorrows, sufferings, and death of the Man of Nazareth consistent with the sublime glories of the Son of God, the equal and fellow of the Eternal?

These questions are answered during the remainder of the chapter, and may be gathered up into a single sentence: He who was above all angels became lower than the angels, for a little time, that He might lift men from their abasement, and set them on his own glorious level in his heavenly Father's kingdom; and that He might be a faithful and merciful High Priest for the sorrowful, and tempted, and dying. Here is an act worthy of a God! Here are reasons which are more than sufficient to answer the old question, for which Anselm prepared so elaborate a reply in his book, "Cur Deus Homo."

What is man?—Those three words in ver. 6 are the fit starting-point of the argument. We need not only a true philosophy of God but a true philosophy of man, in order to right thinking of the Gospel. The idolater thinks man inferior to birds and beasts and creeping things, before which he prostrates himself. The materialist reckons him to be the chance product of natural forces which have evolved him, and before which he is therefore likely to pass away. The pseudo-science of the time makes him of one blood with ape and gorilla, and assigns him a common origin with the beasts. See what gigantic systems of error have developed from mistaken conceptions of the true nature and dignity of man!

From all such we turn to that noble ideal of man's essential dignity, given in this sublime paragraph, which corrects our mistaken notions, and, whilst giving us an explanation that harmonises with all our experience and observation, opens up to us vistas of thought worthy of God.

I. Man as God made him.—The description given here of the origin and dignity of man is taken from Ps. viii., which is doubtless a reminiscence of the days when David kept his father's sheep, even if it were not composed on that very spot, over which in after years the heavenly choirs broke upon the astonished shepherds "abiding in the field, and keeping watch over their flocks by night."

Turn to that Psalm, and see how well it expresses the emotions which must well up in devout hearts to God as we consider the midnight heavens, the tapestry work of his fingers, and the spheres lit by the moon and stars, which He has ordained. How impossible it is for those who are given to devout and pensive reflection to come in contact with any of the grander forms of natural beauty—the far-spread expanse of ocean, the outlines of the mountains, the changing pomp of the skies—without turning from the handiwork to the great Artisan, with some such expression as the apostrophe with which the Psalm opens and closes: "O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth."

At first sight, man is utterly unworthy to be compared with those vast and wondrous spectacles revealed to us by the veiling of the sun. What is his life but a breath, a shadow careering over the mountain side, the existence of the aphides on a leaf in the vast forest of being? What can be said of his character, sin-stained and befouled, in contrast with peaks whose virgin snows have never been defiled; with sylvan scenes, whose peace has never been ruffled; with silvery spheres, whose chimes of perfect harmony have never been broken by discord? Four times over is the question asked upon the page of Scripture, What is man that Thou art mindful of him? (Ps. cxliv. 3; Job vii. 17, 18, 20; Ps. viii. 4, and here).

And yet, nevertheless, it is an undeniable fact that God is mindful of man, and that He does visit him. Mindful! There is not a moment in God's existence in which He is not as mindful of this world of men as the mother of the babe whom she has left for a moment in the next room, but is quick to catch its slightest cry or moan. "I am poor and needy, yet the Lord thinketh upon me." "How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God." Visiting! No cot is so lowly, no heart so wayward, no life so solitary, but God visits it. No one shall read these lines, the path around whose heart-door is not trodden hard by the feet of Him who often comes, and stands, and knocks. We speak as if only our sorrows were Divine visitations. Alas for us, if it were only so! Every throb of holy desire, every gentle mercy, every gift of Providence is the visitation of God.

But there must be some great and sufficient reason, why the Maker of the Universe should take so much interest in man. Evidently bigness is not greatness; a tiny babe is worth more than the tallest mountain; and an empress-mother will linger in the one tiny room where her child is ill, though she forsake the remainder of her almost illimitable domain. What if earth shall turn out to be the nursery of the Universe? The true clue, however, to all speculation is to be found in the declarations by the Psalmist of God's original design in making man. "Thou crownedst him...Thou didst set him...Thou didst put all things under his feet." Nor was this lofty ideal first given to the Psalmist's poetic vision. It had an earlier origin. It is a fragment of the great charta of humanity, which God gave to our first parents in paradise.

Turn to that noble archaic record, Gen. i. 26—28, which transcends the imaginings of modern science as far as it does those legends of creation which make the heathen literature with which they are incorporated incredible. Its simplicity, its sublimity, its fitness attest its origin and authority to be Divine. Evolutionists tell us that our race has developed from specimens of humanity little removed from the level of the miserable Bushmen of Australia. But it is very unlikely that evolution is all the truth. Science is rash, indeed, if she thinks that she has spoken her last word in that matter. And, indeed, true science would not dare to dogmatise.

We are prepared to admit that God's work in creation was symmetrical and orderly, and that He worked out his design according to an ever-unfolding plan. But science has discovered nothing as yet to contradict the express statements of Scripture, that the first man was not at all inferior to ourselves in those intellectual and moral faculties which are the noblest heritage of mankind.

God created man in his own image (Gen. i. 27).—There we have the Divine likeness. Our mental and moral nature is made on the same plan as God's: the Divine in miniature. Truth, love, and purity, like the principles of mathematics, are the same in us as in Him. If it were not so, we could not know or understand Him. But since it is so, it has been possible for Him to take on Himself our nature, and that we should be one day transformed to the perfect image of his beauty.

And God said, Have dominion (Gen. i. 28).—There you have royal supremacy. Man was intended to be God's vicegerent and representative. King in a palace stored with all to please him, monarch and sovereign of all the lower orders of creation. The sun to labour for him as a very Hercules; the moon to light his nights, or lead the waters round the earth in tides, cleansing his coasts; elements of nature to be his slaves and messengers; flowers to scent his path; fruits to please his taste; birds to sing for him; fish to feed him; beasts to toil for him and carry him. Not a cringing slave, but a king, crowned with the glory of rule, and with the honour of universal supremacy. Only a little lower than angels, because they are not, like him, entangled with flesh and blood. This is man as God made him to be.

II. Man as Sin has made him.—"We see not yet all things subjected to Him" (ver. 8). His crown is rolled in the dust, his honour tarnished and stained. His sovereignty is strongly disputed by the lower orders of creation. If trees nourish him, it is after strenuous care, and they often disappoint. If the earth supplies him with food, it is in tardy response to exhausting toil. If the beasts serve him, it is because they have been laboriously tamed and trained, whilst vast numbers roam the forest glades, setting him at defiance. If he catch the fish of the sea, or the bird of the air, he must wait long in cunning concealment.

Some traces of the old lordship are still apparent in the terror which the sound of the human voice and the glance of the eye still inspire into the lower orders, in the feats of lion-tamer or snake-charmer. But for the most part anarchy and rebellion have laid waste his fair realm.

So degraded has man become that he has bowed before the objects that he was to command, and has prostrated his royal form in shrines dedicated to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things. It is the fashion nowadays to extol heathen philosophy, but how can we compare it for a moment with the religion of the Bible, when its pyramids are filled with mummies of deified animals, and its temples with the sacred bull.

Where is the supremacy of man? Not in the savage cowering before the beasts of the forest; nor in the civilised races that are the slaves of lust, and sensuality, and swinish indulgence; nor in those who, refusing to recognise the authority of God, fail to exercise any authority themselves. Sin reigns, as the Apostle says most truly. And all who bow their necks beneath its yoke are slaves, and menials, and cowering abjects, in comparison with what God made and meant them to be.

Do not point to the wretched groups surrounding the doors of the gin-palaces in the metropolis of the most Christian people of the world, and impute their condition as a stain on the love or power of God. This is not his work. An enemy has done this. Would you see man as God intended him to be, you must go back to Eden, or forward to the New Jerusalem. These are the products of sin. Sin defiles, debases, disfigures, and blasts all it touches. And we may shudder to think that its virus is working through our frame, as we discover the results of its ravages upon myriads around.

III. Man as Christ can make him.—"We behold Jesus ... crowned with glory and honour" (ver. 9). "What help is that?" cries an objector; "of course He is crowned with glory and honour, since He is the Son of God." But, notice, the glory and honour mentioned here are altogether different from the glory of Heb. i. 3. That was the incommunicable glory of his deity. This is the acquired glory of his humanity.

In John xvii. our Lord Himself distinguishes between the two. In verse 5, the glory which He had with the Father as his right before all worlds. In verse 24, the glory, given as the reward for his sufferings, which He could not have had unless He had taken upon Himself the form of a servant, and had been made in the fashion of man, humbling Himself, and becoming obedient to the death of the cross—"made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, that He, by the grace of God, should taste death for every man."

This is the crown wherewith his Father crowned Him in the day of the gladness of his heart, when, as man, He came forth victorious from the last wrestle with the Prince of Hell. All through his earthly life He fulfilled the ancient ideal of man. He was God's Image, and those who saw Him saw the Father. He was Sovereign in his commands. Winds and waves did his bidding. Trees withered at his touch. Fish obeyed his will in shoals. Droves of cattle fled before his scourge of small cords. Disease and death and devils owned his sway. But all was more fully realised when He was about to return to his Father, and said, in a noble outburst of conscious supremacy, "All power is given to Me in heaven and on earth."

"We behold Him."—Behold Him, Christian reader. The wreaths of empire are on his brow. The keys of death and Hades swing at his girdle. The mysterious living creatures, representatives of creation, attest that He is worthy. All things in heaven, and earth, and under the earth, and in the seas worship Him; so do the bands of angels, beneath whom He stooped for a little season, on our behalf.

And as He is, we too shall be. He is there as the type and specimen and representative of redeemed men. We are linked with Him in indissoluble union. Through Him we shall get back our lost empire. We too shall be crowned with glory and honour. The day is not far distant when we shall sit at his side; joint heirs in his empire; comrades in his glory, as we have been comrades in his sorrows; beneath our feet all things visible and invisible, thrones and principalities and powers; whilst above us shall be the unclouded empyrean of our Father's love, for ever and for ever. Oh, destiny of surpassing bliss! Oh, rapture of saintly hearts! Oh, miracle of Divine Omnipotence!

By Rev. J. MOUNTAIN.

II.—TASMANIA AND AUSTRALIA.

After a pleasant sail of thirty days we arrived at Adelaide, in South Australia. From there we took steamer to Melbourne, and from there we sailed to Launceston, Tasmania. It was apparently unfortunate for our work that we arrived in November, which is the beginning of the Tasmanian summer. In Africa, evangelistic work can be done all the year round; but in Tasmania, owing to local customs more than to the climate, special missions in churches are almost impossible during the summer months.

It was to us a source of sorrow to find that throughout Tasmania the work of most evangelists was lightly esteemed by ministers and churches generally. Good and true evangelists had visited the country; their labours had been successful, and they and their work will be long remembered with gratitude. But I was informed on good authority that others had distinguished themselves by publicly denouncing the ministers and the churches, encouraging separatist tendencies among their converts, and mixing themselves up with local questions of which their knowledge must necessarily have been imperfect. Far from acting in the spirit of Mr. Moody, they undermined the influence of the ministers, and left the churches weaker than they found them. Other evangelists had committed various indiscretions; while one or two others had been rank impostors. Under these circumstances, accompanied by the fact that a large proportion of the population consists of Irish Roman Catholics, it will be evident that evangelistic work in Tasmania presents many special difficulties. Nevertheless, much earnest and successful labour is being put forth by the pastors of all Protestant denominations, and by various outside agencies. It was our privilege to preach, or conduct missions at Launceston, Evandale, Richmond, Hobart, and five or six places in the Huon. There are branches of the Y.M.C.A. in Launceston and Hobart, but they were both in a weakly condition. We found Tasmania a beautiful island, as green as Ireland itself. It is, however, very wet and windy. By and by, as the forests are cut down and the country is brought under proper cultivation, the climate will be drier. As a country, it is decidedly the most backward of all the colonies we have visited, which may be due to the well-known manner in which many of the earlier settlers found their way thither.

After remaining in Tasmania for about four months, we sailed for Sydney, the capital of New South Wales. Up to this time we had conducted our missions upon a broad, undenominational basis; but when we arrived in Sydney we found that most of the leading denominations had one or more ministers devoted to the work of the evangelist. It was therefore a necessity that most of our missions in all the Australian colonies should be conducted in Congregational churches. On our arrival in Sydney, we found there two of the ministers with whom we had held missions in Scotland several years before. They welcomed us, and introduced us to the brethren generally. We found Sydney a large city of 250,000 inhabitants, a centre of wonderful activity in business, philanthropy, and religion. We conducted seven or eight missions, nearly all of which were greatly blessed. We were then invited to Brisbane, the capital of Queensland. Our first mission there resulted in the admission to Wharf-street Congregational Church of over one hundred members. We conducted three other missions in the city, and then visited, Maryborough, Rockhampton, Bundaberg, Goodna, and Ipswich. We then returned to New South Wales overland, a journey of about eight hundred miles, and then from there overland to Melbourne, the capital of Victoria. Melbourne is a city about the same size as Sydney, with, however, far more architectural pretensions. It is really a beautiful place. We conducted missions at Kew, Williamstown, Warnambool and Ballarat. There were several more applications for our services; but we had promised to take a number of missions in South Australia, so we journeyed thither overland, a distance of about six hundred miles. We were greatly delighted with Adelaide, the capital city. We had four missions there. We also laboured at Glenelg, Gawler, Angaston, and several other places.

Our tour in Australia occupied us about two years. To us it was a very delightful one. As a rule, we were entertained most hospitably. The churches in which we laboured were sympathetic, and the ministers, generally, were in hearty accord with our work. All the churches, episcopal as well, seemed to be more fraternal than they are in England. The piety in the colonies is as real and true as at home, but it flows through shallower, yet wider channels. There is more freedom and dash about the churches, as a whole. Now and then some Episcopalian will set people by the ears by making some startling sacerdotal assumption for his church; but the bishops and the episcopal clergy generally make a warm recognition of the clergy of other churches. Be it remembered that all ministers in Australia are alike called "clergymen." Australia leads the van in the march of Christian union. In this matter she is twenty-five years ahead of the old country.

The climate of Australia is manifold, but charming in all its variety. In the colonies we visited, the air is light and dry, except, of course, in the usual wet season. People there seem to enjoy life greatly, and many live to a good old age.

Evangelists and other Christian workers who purpose visiting Australia should take with them the best credentials. So many money-hunters, faddists, and impostors have turned up in that part of the world, that the most charitable and generous people there have been imposed upon. They are naturally and justifiably upon their guard.

Destitute Children's Dinners Society.

Sir,—This Society is now entering on its twenty-third year of labour. It provided weekly during the last season between 17,000 and 18,000 meat dinners in sixty-four dining-rooms located amongst the poorest districts of the Metropolis. Each child contributes a halfpenny towards the expenses of its dinner, these halfpennies during the past season amounting to the large sum of £713 3s. 3d. The rule of the Society is to allow each child a quarter of a pound of meat in every dinner provided. The last two seasons have greatly drained the resources of the Society mainly from its continuing its operations later than heretofore.

Although the cash in hand was only one-fourth the amount required to open all the dining-rooms, we have opened them, having faith in the kindness of the public, and with a firm hope that many may be induced to visit our dining-rooms, and realise what it would be should the doors be closed. The committee dare not comply with requests for increased grants, or open fresh centres without a large increase of help. One pound it is calculated will enable us to provide a dinner for 120 children. Anyone wishing to help personally in the work may ascertain particulars by writing to the secretary, Mr. H. Morton Carr, 89, St. George's-square, S.W. The treasurers are Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall East, S.W., and Mr. William Fuller, Stoughton Grange, Guildford.—Yours faithfully,

E. M. O. Henderson. Burdett Coutts.

MID-DAY PRAYER.—A Wednesday afternoon prayer-meeting, from one to two o'clock, has just been established in connection with the new Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars-road.

Leaves from my Note-Book.

By Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.,

XXXIV.—TESTIMONY.

After a sermon I had been preaching in a university town, a student came up to me and said, "I feel that I can speak to you; will you permit me?"

"Certainly," I replied, "come at once."

"No," said the young man, "thank you. I must be in College at nine o'clock; but, if you will allow me, I will call upon you to-morrow morning."

We made an appointment, and punctually to the time the young man made his appearance, looking very miserable. He sat down, and at once told me how unhappy he was. He said, "I have lost my light and my joy."

I replied, "We do not naturally have light and joy to lose."

"Oh yes, I know that," rejoined the young man, "but I mean to say, I have had great joy; but it has all gone."

I said, "Now I understand you. Do you mind telling me how you received the joy you refer to?"

He readily complied with this request, and began his story.

He gave me to understand that he was the son of believing parents, and that he came up to the university a steady, well-disposed man. He did not waste his time, as far too many do, in idle amusements, or dissipation; but, on the contrary, applied himself diligently to his books.

Being thus engaged all the week, it was his custom on Sundays to go out for a long walk in the afternoon.

He said, "Upon one occasion, as I was passing a certain church, I heard the two bells ringing. They seemed to my ears to say, Come in, come in, come in. I looked towards the church, but I could see no one; also up and down the street, but not a person was approaching. Yet the bells pleaded on as distinctly as before, Come in, come in.

"As I walked forward, the thought came to my mind, Why do not you come in? I come in? No, I am going for my walk. I have been reading hard all the week, I have been to College chapel this morning, and intend going to church again this evening; I am going for my walk now.

"Still the bells went on with their distinct Come in, come in. No, I said, I am going for a walk, I cannot; but the bells seemed to say more vehemently than before, Come in, come in, come in. I said, I won't, striking the ground at the same time with my stick. That very instant the bells stopped.

"It was foolish of me, you will say, but I could not help myself; I was all of a tremble, and felt inclined to turn back and go into church. However, I rallied myself, and set out resolutely for my walk, inwardly saying, I will not be so superstitious. For all this, I was obliged to return, and go into church.

"It was rather late, as you may suppose; but I took a seat near the door, and joined in the service.

"As the curate was reading the second lesson, he looked off his book straight at me, and uttered the words, 'By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast' (Eph. ii. 8, 9). I heard no more, and cannot describe to you the effect those words had upon me. I was as it were arrested, I trembled, and fell upon my knees. 'By grace ...through faith...not of works.' These words convicted me. Hitherto I had been trying to lead a good life in order to go to heaven; but all that was brought to an end now. Before the service was over, I was as happy as I could be, and down at the bottom of the high pew was thanking God, wondering what had happened.

"At the conclusion of the service, I went away in haste, and on my way met one of the men, who said, 'Holloa, what's the matter with you; have you good news?' I did not speak, but hurried on to my rooms. There I sat down, 'lost in wonder, love, and praise,' as the hymn says, at what the Lord had done for me."

He continued: "I went on rejoicing in my heart, with a sense of sins forgiven, and was so happy that I could not hide it. Men in College made remarks about my appearance, and asked whether I had received a legacy, or what. 'Have you got the vacant scholarship?' said one; but I evaded all their questions."

"Why did you not tell them your experience?" I asked; "it would have increased your joy, and most likely have done them good too. Were you afraid they would laugh at you, or what?"

"No," he replied, "I did not think about that. I cannot tell what made me so reserved."

"Go on with your story," I said, "and tell me all."

He continued: "When the vacation began, I went down, and on my arrival home, my dear mother remarked, 'I am very pleased to see you looking so well; and so happy,' she added, significantly. But somehow, though I knew what she was referring to, and what joy it would have given her to hear the good news, I did not tell her why I was so happy.

"My father also asked me many pointed questions—whether we had had any special services or meetings during the past term, and so on. Still I was silent, and did not tell them about myself.

"After the vacation, I came back to College as happy as before; but all at once my joy went away, and I have been most miserable ever since. Last night, while you were speaking, I thought you could help me. I am——"

There he paused. I said, "Are you miserable now?"

"No," he replied; "strange to say, I feel happy again."

I did not like to interrupt his story, but while he was speaking I could see his countenance brightening. "Shall I tell you," I said, "why your joy went away, and why it has come back again? You lost your joy because you did not tell of it, and you have received it back because you have borne testimony. We are but broken cisterns at best, which cannot hold water, though we may do very well for channels to transmit it."

"I am very much obliged to you," said the young man, "for the encouragement you give me, and thank you sincerely."

"I accept your thanks," I said, "and will ask you to show your gratitude in two ways. First, I should like you to write home to your parents at once, and tell them why you were so happy at Christmas; and secondly, I want you to tell some of your College friends what the Lord has done for you."

He promised me he would comply with these two requests. Some time after this he told me that the first he found comparatively easy, but the second cost him a great struggle. He said he went to several of the men, but had much difficulty in originating the subject.

At last, he communicated his secret to one of his friends, who, to his astonishment, replied, "I take shame to myself that I have never spoken to you. I am a converted man too." They rejoiced together, and then went in company with each other to a third man whom they suspected, and found that he was a believer also. In this way they discovered several more who could sympathise with them. They all came to my service in the evening.

My friend of the morning looked up with a bright face, as if he would say, "See the six men I have brought with me." None of them were gloomy, or sad of countenance.

Afterwards I talked to these men, and impressed upon them the importance and advantage of testimony. I pointed out how much we lose if we do not testify, and what encouragement we have if we do.

I said to them, and I say to all, "Never be ashamed to tell of the Lord's goodness to you. Only think, who is to tell of your salvation, if you do not? And how is God to be praised if those who have received his benefits do not acknowledge Him?

THE OPIUM QUESTION.

Dear Sir,—Encouraged by the strong feeling expressed on the subject by the recent Missionary Conference in London, and by the formation at the Conference of an "Anti-Opium Christian Union," intended to strengthen and consolidate that feeling amongst the Christian public, the Committee of the Anti-Opium Society has appointed Mr. Arthur Williams, B.A., of Saffron Walden, a member of the Society of Friends, as secretary. Mr. Williams assumes his office with a strong conviction of the unrighteousness of the opium revenue raised by our Government in India, and with an earnest desire to be an instrument in God's hands in putting away this reproach from our nation.

I would ask for the new Secretary and for the Committee the prayerful support of your readers. Mr. Williams hopes to devote a large portion of his time to work in the provinces, and will be glad to respond to applications to give lectures and attend Conferences on the Opium Question. The Society's address is Broadway Chambers, London, S.W.

Yours truly, Joseph G. Alexander.

Bridwold, Croydon.

Mr. James Murray, of Hankow, Central China, writes:—The treaty with England for admission of Opium to China is binding only up to January 18, 1890. It can then be terminated by either party at twelve months' notice; therefore, it can be made to expire on January 18, 1891. As to the desirability of terminating this traffic there can be but one answer.

Christians are gathering money to build Opium Refuges all over the country to save the lives of the devotees to the opium pipe, and missionaries are called for by day and by night to attend cases of opium poisoning. I have myself been in hundreds of opium dens, and there have seen poor, wasted-looking human beings with the fatal pipe in their mouth, careless of all else but this selfish craving for opium. I have seen troops of these devotees come into hospital, and gladly pay the physician to cure them of the craving. I have heard the taunt thrown in the teeth of English missionaries, "Is it not you who send us the opium?"

To be callous and inactive when a question so momentous is before us is to retard the coming of the Lord's kingdom. In England there are conscientious men urging the question upon the Government, but they have hitherto met with a response tantamount to, "We cannot afford to abandon the trade." Such an answer is pure mockery of Divine law, and to continue in known sin is to heap up a certain and awful retribution. Let all who "serve God rather than man" petition the Emperor of China and his Government to give notice to England that this treaty will not be renewed.

NORTH-EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSIONS.—A second institution for working girls has been opened by this Mission at Ball's Pond-road, near Dalston. It is likely to prove of great service to the large number of factory and other girls living in the neighbourhood. The visitors of the Mission are already finding great privations among the sick and unemployed poor. The Director of the Mission is Mr. W. Chorley, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N.

THE SLAVE TRADE IN CENTRAL AFRICA.—Père Lourdel, a Roman Catholic missionary in Uganda, in a recent communication states that the Arab slavers have been inciting King Mwanga against English and Germans alike. Not only have they instilled into his mind suspicions as to the intentions of missionaries and other Europeans, but they have also appealed to his cupidity, for the king himself has large dealings with the Moslem traders, who put arms and powder in his way in payment for the surplus proceeds of his numerous raids for the replenishment of court service. Père Lourdel thinks the Arabs have some great design for conquest, and that Europeans who intend establishing colonies in the country will have to make a clean sweep of the slavers, and interdict the importing of guns and powder, which are stored in such quantities in Uganda as to fully explain the haughtiness of Mwanga.

The Turning of the Tide, 1688.

A TRUE TALE OF THE COVENANTERS.

VI.

JAMES NIMMO had arrived in Morayshire, very shortly before the death of Elizabeth Brodie's father, in September 1680. His employer, Mr. Hay, laird of Park, was connected by marriage with the Brodie family, of which Brodie of Brodie was the head, and, with others of his kinsmen, made no secret of their attachment to the cause of the Covenant. It is not surprising therefore to learn that James Nimmo, introduced to such a circle by one who was himself a warm sympathiser in the cause, met with a reception which enabled him to write of it thus:—

"It pleased the Lord to give me favour in the sight of all I had to do with, and made those I was to stay with more tender of me than my father and mother; the which was very encouraging to me, and I was made to serve the Lord with rejoicing, and gladness of heart."

But his position in Park's service proved one of great trial, as his duties brought him so much more into public places than he considered safe, and he was required as overseer of the estate "to engage with cesses, militia, and paying kirkmen," the which he "had no freedom" to do.

Nor is this surprising, seeing that the cess was a tax which had been laid upon property solely for the support of troops maintained to suppress field meetings, the militia were liable to be called out at any time to assist them, and the kirkmen were the curates occupying pulpits which ministers, now outed, had at one time filled.

Meanwhile, his burdens, of another kind, had been very heavy, in the prospect of the meeting of the Scottish parliament in 1681, as he had reason to believe that his own case would be brought before it, he tells us, but he does not state in what manner. Going out to the fields one night, at a late hour, to lay the matter before the Lord, he could get no freedom in prayer, and was on the point of returning when he thought he "would strive to mind the Church's case" before giving up the contest, in which the Lord gave him "much freedom, tenderness, and faith in laying hold of the promises," so that all his unbelief and discouragements were dispelled.

Some believer who reads these lines may rejoice to find Nimmo's experience confirming his own, as he remembers seasons when he has sought the Lord for light and comfort for himself, "without any intimations of favour," but, when led to intercede for others, or for the Church of God, has found the door thrown wide open, as it were, giving him access to the throne of grace "with great freedom, tenderness, and faith," to the dispelling of all discouragement! Is not this one way the Master takes of teaching his disciples to bear one "another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ," by leaving them to bear their own until they bring those of others before Him in prayer, then taking them all on his own shoulders, as it were, and letting his servants go forth from his presence with wonder, love, and praise in their hearts?

Leaving the service of Park, Nimmo accepts an invitation from Brodie of Lethen, to stay with him, and help him in the management of his property. He did not take this step without anxiety, he tells us, not knowing how their disposition and his would agree. But as to this he receives some encouragement, on arrival at the house, on December 23, 1681, when the Laird gives out a portion of Psalm xxxvii. to be sung at family worship in the evening, especially as that Psalm had been Nimmo's "ordinary reading" on that day; "and yet," he adds, "partly through weights in my mind, and partly by unacquaintedness in the family, I was somewhat cast down, and attained to little freedom for some weeks."

He had by this time become acquainted with one of the most eminent of the outed ministers in the North of Scotland for personal piety and ministerial gifts, Mr. Thomas Hog, of Kiltearn. This most excellent man had but recently obtained his liberty, after eighteen months' imprisonment on the Bass rock, for conscience' sake; and, as fellow sufferers in the same cause, and of one mind in their loyalty to the Covenant, which they believed to be the cause of Christ, he and Nimmo seem to have been attracted to each other from the very first, and knit together with an affection which was to prove a source of the greatest comfort to both during the years of suffering and persecution which were still before them. Mr. Hog was much the older of the two, and Nimmo found in him and his wife a father and mother, whose tender sympathy and wise counsels were peculiarly grateful to him in his trials. He frequently mentions having been present when Mr. Hog or some other outed minister preached, and occasionally at Lethen House, a mark of the favour with which they were regarded by some of the gentlemen of the county, in spite of the severity of the laws against such meetings.

It is interesting to note how greatly he must have profited by the experience gained when seeking the Lord by night in the fields, as stated above, as he now writes: "I was made to observe sometimes that little more than the seventh part of my requests were on behalf of myself, but all this time, as it pleased the Lord to help me to be concerned for others, so it also pleased Him to help others to be concerned for me, which was sometimes a sweet refreshment to my soul, to think the Lord made others the means of my spiritual support, more than anything I could do myself."

For believers whose joy in the Lord is but intermittent, and who cannot understand why it is so, the following testimony of Nimmo should prove helpful: "That was brought to my mind with much light that I had wholly closed with God, through Christ, for salvation, and continually trusted in Him for the same; but I had not so closed with Him for sanctification, and for leading and guiding me in my daily straits."

Nimmo's circumstances at this time were such that we would suppose him to have been the very last man to be advised by his friends to marry, but some of them seemed to have thought very differently, and to have seen no reason why he should not propose to a young lady related to some of the best families in the county. He tells us that he had not been long in Morayshire before "a godly friend proposed that one Elizabeth Brodie (who she said was a gentlewoman of good friends and truly pious) would be a fit wife" for him, but that he took little notice at the time. About a year later, others of his friends proposed the same thing to him, and amongst these Mr. Hog, who most strongly urged him to marry and settle in that part of the country, where nothing was known as to his antecendents, save by a few of his most intimate friends, on which account he might probably remain there in comparative safety. Mr. Hog likewise recommended the same gentlewoman to him for a wife, "to which," adds Nimmo, "I had little inclination (considering how I was circumstanced) and therefore I waived it then."

So urgent, however, was his friend, Mr. Hog, in charging him, as he must answer to the Lord, to set some time apart for special consideration of his duty in the matter, that Nimmo did so, and sought the counsel of some of his more special friends amongst the godly upon it. He names one after another, men and women, consulted by him, and quotes the advice given by each, showing how all agreed in supporting the proposal, but adds, "Now all this while it pleased the Lord to help me to be so much concerned with other things upon my spirit, that this had not great weight; but truly I must confess that there was much concernedness about the Church in my mind at this time."

Meanwhile, Elizabeth Brodie had been living quietly at home, with her mother, her brother, and her younger sister, Barbara, who, though very rarely mentioned in the diary, seems to have been very much of one mind with Elizabeth in her religious views. The following extract gives some indication of the dependent position in which the sisters found themselves after their father's death:—

"June 21 (1682).—The first fifteen days of this month my soul was in no good condition, under deadness and hardness of heart. After that came on a quarrelling frame of spirit, at length unbelief, distrust. I could not get relief either for the present, or for the time to come, as to my outward condition. Upon the 13th of this month I was going to Elgin, and I thought there was a great many things I stood in need of, but, my father being dead, I had no confidence to seek money from my brother to buy anything. Then Satan took occasion to make me discontent with my lot, and made everything appear as great difficulties when there was none. At last I went to prayer, and the Lord composed my mind so, that when I returned, and was asked by my brother what money I would need, I saw not the need of anything. Thus the Lord shamed me out of my unbelief, and by his outward providence stopped my mouth."

BLESSING IN LIVERPOOL.

DURING the last two months special missions have been held by some of the Liverpool town missionaries, which have been of a very fruitful character. United prayer had been offered. One night we spent in this way till two o'clock.

The first mission was held in Norwood Mission Hall, Boaler-street, where the meetings continued three weeks, each week being better than the other. At the close it was seen that over 130 had been personally dealt with. These have been seen (some twice) in their homes, and we believe a large proportion are hopeful conversions. We could tell many interesting facts. So decided has the blessing been in this district that after a short break we have resolved to go on another fortnight.

Following this, other two missions began, one in Kensington, and the other in St. Domingo-road. God has richly blessed both. In Kensington night after night many were wounded. Several times men would or could not leave before they knew that they were saved. At the other hall (St. Domingo-road) fruit was gathered every night, and we are full of praise to God.

We are in the midst of a mission at present. Another begins on the 18th, and two more on the 25th. For these we ask your prayers.

AMERICAN FREEDMEN AND MISSIONS.—Rev. J. A. Taylor, of Richmond, U.S.A., secretary of the Coloured Baptist Foreign Mission, in writing to acknowledge contributions sent to him from our readers, says:—"The money came just in time to aid us in making necessary improvements on our mission field in West Central Africa. We have added twenty to our number of converts this year. We are preparing to send out more missionaries, and we need help in the work."

Mr. SPENCER WALTON in S. AFRICA.

Our hearts are filled with gratitude for what God has done among us through his servant. He has given him much wisdom in meeting ministers of different views and tendencies. He has been made a blessing to believers in opening up to them the possibilities of a life of consecration, as indeed brought within the reach of all, and secured to them in our blessed Saviour. God has also used him to gather many out of darkness to light and service. Wherever he worked there was but one complaint, that the time was too short. We do bless God that He has put into the heart of his servant the thought of giving himself entirely to South Africa, and are looking forward to much blessing, if his purpose be realised.

I believe there are wonderful openings for evangelistic work, both in the large new centres, such as Kimberley and Johannesburg, and in all our colonial towns. There is hardly a place where one or more ministers will not be found who will rejoice to have a visit from time to time from one so fitted to help in rousing believers, and gathering in those who are outside. And if the prospect could be realised, that Cape Town should at the same time be made the centre of home mission work, whence other towns might be guided and helped, a work might be accomplished of which it is difficult to calculate the consequence. We shall wait on God to remove every difficulty out of the way, and trust that our brethren in England will help Mr. Spencer Walton forward in prayer in the work he hopes to undertake.

Wellington, S. Africa. Andrew Murray.

A Wesleyan minister writes that the visit of Mr. Spencer Walton to Grahamstown, Cape Colony, was greatly blessed of God. The local Ministers' Union, in conjunction with representative laymen belonging to the Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Wesleyan Churches, united in meeting him here. The special services extended from September 14 to 24; beginning vigorously, they increased in interest and power to the end. Mr. Walton's services have been appreciated highly by the various ministers and churches who co-operated. He has been manifestly successful as an evangelistic reaper. The names of about one hundred inquirers were taken by the Christian workers; some of these were already church members, but the majority were not such; and many others, whose names do not appear on our lists, were undoubtedly strengthened and blessed.

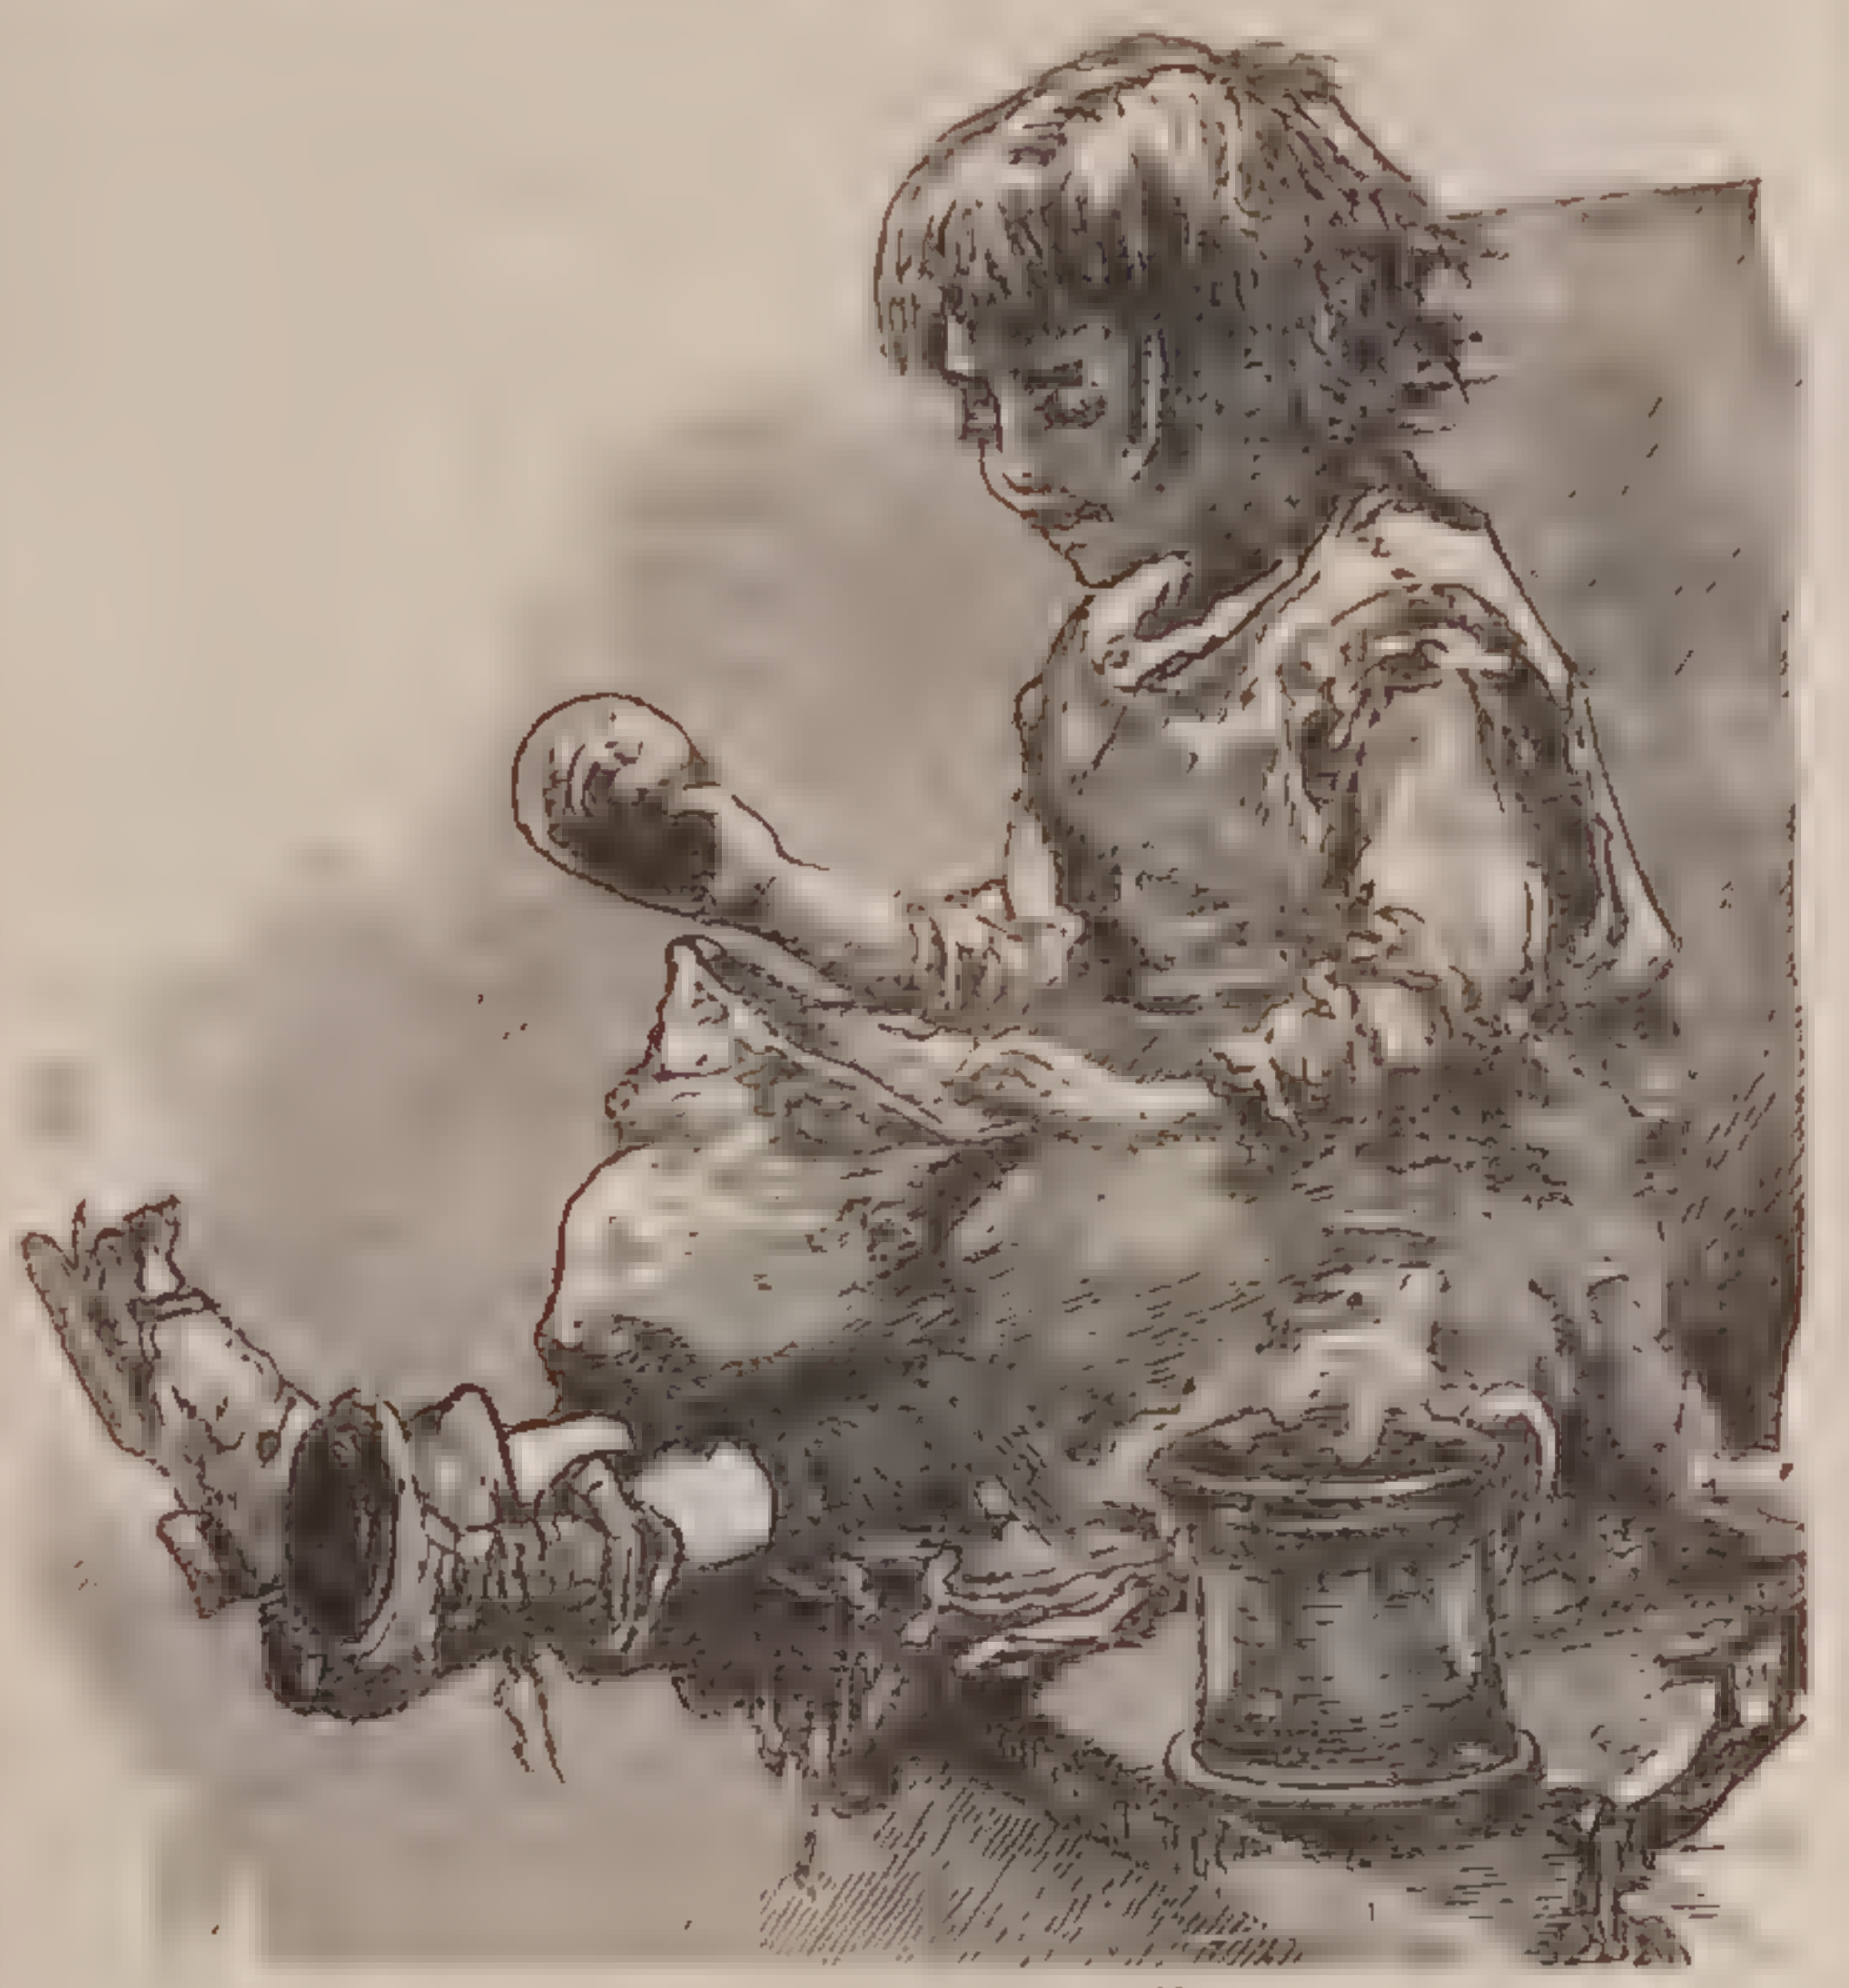
THE "SECULAR" PRESS.—A correspondent, in sending to us a copy of The Essex Newsman, which devotes a column to "religious readings," suggests that many Christian friends might be able to secure the carrying out of a similar arrangement in the daily and weekly press.

FLOODS IN MANCHURIA.—Mr. John Ross, 10, Rocklea-terrace, Kelvinside, Glasgow, writes:—"The floods which have again this year burst with great violence over northern China have in Manchuria drowned in the waters or killed by falling houses thousands of the people. Tens of thousands of horses, mules, oxen, and pigs have been carried away. Great multitudes have been rendered homeless. The destruction of the growing grain, which a previously dry summer had stunted, is such that a widespread famine is unavoidable. The Chinese Government has an enormous extent of flooded country to relieve, and cannot by any possibility overtake more than a fraction of the destitute. Rev. James Webster, Mookden, is in great distress because of his inability to cope with the impending famine, which, with the cold now setting in, will be of the most aggravated form. Half-a-crown will keep a man from starvation for a month. Mr. Slight, treasurer, College-buildings, Edinburgh, or myself, will be glad to receive contributions towards this clamant need."

RESCUED!

Dr. Barnardo thus writes, in Night and Day for November, of a boy and a girl rescued by him:—Recently I admitted Robert F., 15 years of age. He never had a home. His father and mother both died in common lodging-houses, the former actually of starvation. The lad, thus left orphaned and friendless, wandered aimlessly over the country, selling matches, carrying parcels, and begging, sleeping nightly beneath the open sky, in fields, under hedges, or where he could find a resting-place. He was never at school in his life; he could not write, and he can read only a very little. He came to me shoeless, clad in a few filthy torn rags, well-nigh starving; in fact, faint from prolonged want of food. His last meal had been a piece of bread picked up in the street on the morning of the previous day.

Of course I admitted Robert, and with that admission has ceased at once and for ever (I hope) the story of his sufferings. But what about the thousands yet unreached? I would that I could cry aloud on their behalf and spare not, in a voice which all England should hear!



"OUR JENNY."

Jenny Wren came to one of my tea-meetings, and as the result of what she heard and saw there she wanted badly to be admitted to the Home, but durst not stop that night. Mother, she told me, said she was to return early. Mother, I learned, lived in G—— street, in a common lodging-house. She could not tell me what mother did, but she was "out a good bit," and was "fond of gin!" So I said good-night, but invited her to visit me later. She responded to the invitation by bringing "mother" two days afterwards with her to the Home. She would not sign any agreement yet awhile, but she would leave Jenny for a bit to see how she liked it. Meanwhile Jenny, with her fate in the balance, sat outside in the hall, drinking her mug of tea, and eating hungrily the food brought to her in one of the paper bags left over from a feast of the day before. Poor little ragged damsel! She does not even know how badly she needs care and kindness, and food and education, and is only happy in her ignorance of the dreadful lot that all too surely awaits her after a year or two more in that dreadful lodging-house, with such a mother, and with only evil women around her.

Thank God, there is now no such alternative for "our Jenny." A happy little lass she is, if ever there was one. But, oh, the pity of it, that Jenny as she was can be paralleled to-day in every back street and slum, and in hundreds of the common lodging-houses scattered throughout the Metropolis!

CHILDREN IN LODGING-HOUSES.

Dr. Barnardo's plan for securing London waif-children from the evil surroundings of the common lodging-house has been launched with every prospect of abundant success. The need for such efforts as have thus been determined upon is altogether unquestioned, and it is profoundly to be hoped that Dr. Barnardo's arrangements, which have been entered upon in the fear of God and for the good of humanity, will prove a great blessing to many little ones who would otherwise, almost certainly, be doomed to a life of unhappiness and a death of shame. At a meeting of friends of his work, on Tuesday afternoon, last week, Dr. Barnardo unfolded his scheme, and bespoke the hearty co-operation of the Christian public. He pointed out that for years he had realised the sad need for steps for the rescue of young children of the destitute class from the awful houses into which they are taken by their parents, to herd with vicious men and degraded women. Nothing short of legislative interference will go to the root of the matter, yet scores of little ones may be reached by philanthropic means, whereby also experience may at the same time be gained as to the best way to effectually deal with the whole subject.

Mentioning the fact that he had taken a common lodging-house, for children only, in a district much frequented by waif children, and that he had all but secured a second, calculated to prove equally useful, Dr. Barnardo spoke of the way in which he proposes to have these institutions managed. In ordinary common lodging-houses children are paid for; so in his a nominal charge of a penny each will be made, which will also entitle the inmates to a warm meal. The want of a penny will not, however, be a bar to admission; and destitute children will ever find kindly consideration at the hands of the people in charge. One Home will be for girls and the other for boys, and for the first a suitable deputy, a good and qualified woman, is already in mind. The houses are small, holding from thirty to thirty-five children each; if they prove successful, then similar ones may be established in all the lodging-house districts in London.

Dr. Barnardo gave figures showing the magnitude of the lodging-house population of London, and said there must be from 50,000 to 60,000 persons homeless in the city, of whom 25 per cent. are children. Some little girls who had just been brought into his Homes were led into the room in which the meeting was held, and sorry objects they were, albeit intelligent in physiognomy. Their histories were (in their absence) briefly detailed, and they were sad in the extreme—poverty and wretchedness made up the tale. Having mentioned that money was required wherewith to furnish the houses, and said that the highest good of the children is his great object, Dr. Barnardo left the cause in the hands of the friends of the young.

Mr. J. B. Wookey having spoken of the fearful sights he had seen at nights on the streets of London, Rev. Walter J. Mayers made some remarks on Prayer, and introduced to notice the Daily Prayer Union, the members of which undertake daily to ask a blessing upon all rescue work among orphans and destitute children. Mr. J. Rankin, M.P., followed with a few words, in which he cordially commended Dr. Barnardo's scheme to the liberal support of the Christian public.

HOUSEWIFERY.—Miss Headdon's Training House at Riverdale, Newnham-on-Severn, is an excellent institution. With the present spacious accommodation, more pupils can be taken in than previously. The house is a real home school for the teaching of housewifery, and efforts are made to secure employment for pupils after training. Such a work requires outside support, and Miss Headdon will be glad to communicate with sympathising friends.

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,"

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training nearly 3,000 poor Waifs and Strays.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the ANNUAL SALE on behalf of these Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE?

Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale remember that crochet shawls, really fine underclothing for ladies and children, shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing, are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold? Well-made woollen shawls are frequently asked for, and, indeed, women's garments of all kinds would be especially useful. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged. Valuable help would be afforded if donors of gifts of old china, foreign goods, articles of vertu, &c., would kindly mark on them their value, or indicate the price which is likely to be obtained.

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as for the LAST FEW YEARS; that is to say, Instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End of London during the month of December, as formerly, all the Goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection, of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent to any part of the country on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque made payable to Mr. J. T. Page.

Ladies willing to order these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have repeatedly expressed warm approval of this plan, and have promised to purchase Boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold in their own houses, to which their personal friends can be invited during the winter season.

If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the Large Hall of the "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, London, E.

Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all who love poor children to co-operate with him in this effective plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed ready for transmission, can be despatched on receipt of remittance to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (Prepaid), with full instructions as to conveyance, &c., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

THE TRADE MANAGER,
18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To all who have already in any degree helped by Contributions of Useful or Fancy Articles, Dr. Barnardo desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments and hearty thanks.

For the Young.

A NIGHT AMONG THE BEDOUIN.

By Miss Dora Fooks.

I was once travelling with a friend in Galilee, and as we were riding along, tired and hungry, near the waters of Merom, we longed to find some place where we could rest, and get shelter for the night. There were no villages or houses near where we might ask for a lodging, so we continued our journey until we came in sight of some black camel's-hair tents, which we knew belonged to the Bedouin. These people are very hospitable and kind to travellers, and after having eaten bread with a stranger, consider themselves bound to protect and care for him. So we rode up to the tent door and asked for the sheik. He came out to welcome us and sent for his wives to entertain us. Very soon we were surrounded by a crowd of dark figures; carpets were brought out and we were seated in the middle of the ring of women. The first thing we did was to get some bread from our saddle-bags and invite the chief wife to eat with us. She took a small piece and liked it so much that she asked for more, and in a few minutes our little store of bread had quite disappeared. Our appearance excited great curiosity; a circle of open-eyed, admiring children gathered round me as I showed them my watch, and tried to explain its use. The only clock they know of is the sun, and as soon as it sank to rest we took up our baggage and entered the tent.

It was a strange dark place, about thirty feet long, with no furniture but a few mats round the camel's-hair walls. A large wood fire was burning in the centre opposite the door, and our beds were put down behind it. An immense iron pot filled with rice was taken off the fire as we entered; we all sat round on the floor, and dipping our fingers into the unsavoury mess, managed to eat a few mouthfuls. Then we talked to the group around of the goodness of our heavenly Father, who not only gives us temporal mercies, but loved us so much that He sent his beloved Son to die for us. The poor ignorant women could hardly understand, and when we knelt down to pray seemed very much mystified. The sheik informed me that he could pray, and spreading a small carpet on the ground, bowed himself down on hands and knees, repeating over many times:—

"There is no God but God, and Mahomet, the prophet of God."

He knew nothing about the God he prayed to, so, as he could read a little, I gave him a Testament, which I told him would teach him about God. Then we gathered the children together, and tried to make them learn a text. It saddened us to see so many growing up without hearing anything about our dear Saviour. You English boys and girls who have learned so much, and listened to the story of the Gospel so often, think of these poor wild children who have none to teach them, and who live more like animals than human beings. Yet Jesus loves them just as much as He loves you, and shed his blood for them, that they, neglected and wicked, as they are, might become sons and daughters of God. The poor Bedouin do not know this, and never will unless you or some other Christians go and tell them.

When all the men had left the tent we lay down on the mats provided for us, and watched one after another of the tall black-robed women disappear into the darkness in the corner of the tent. One only remained crouching with her long pipe over the smouldering embers, and every few minutes a man would glide softly in, light his pipe and go out again. Dogs and goats came in and out as they pleased, and evidently thought we had no business to be there from the suspicious way in which they snuffed around us. We lay, unable to sleep very much amid such strange surroundings; but, as we looked out on the beautiful stars which studded the heavens, our hearts were cheered by the remembrance that our Father made them all, and we felt ourselves perfectly safe under the shadow of his wings. Early in the morning before anybody was awake, we crept out of the tent, called our muleteers, saddled our horses, and set off again on our journey to the Sea of Galilee, feeling quite rested after our night among the Bedouin.—Regions Beyond.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICES.

By Lady Hope.

Sunny smiles! bright faces! sweet singing! earnest, attentive listening! In what other words can we sum up the general impression of one of Mr. Spiers' meetings?

A fortnight of real and most successful work in connection with this Mission has been ended, or perhaps we should say begun, at the Lecture Hall, Dorking. Who can tell what its results may be? Several hundreds of the children in that town, as well as large numbers from the adjoining villages, have been assembling daily to hear Mr. Spiers give his short and telling addresses, so simple that all could understand them, and to join in singing sweet, lively hymns.

His methods of working are remarkable in more than one respect, because they are unique. But perhaps the most telling of all these efforts is the interest he takes in each child. In a few days he knows every face. While he speaks he watches every expression before him: nothing is lost. If the children look about, if they whisper, if they look grave and thoughtful, he sees it all, and remembers afterwards the little faces, speaking a kind word to each, day after day, as they come and go from the meetings. And their unbroken attention, assembling together as they do in such vast crowds, is really wonderful.

Each child is asked at the beginning of the mission to buy a portfolio, which costs 3d., or 1½d.; and in this portfolio the daily gift of leaflets, cards, picture papers, and tiny Gospel books is placed. During the meetings the children are sometimes asked "to hold up their portfolios," and then the whole room looks like an animated flower garden. By the end of the mission these portfolios are well stocked, and Mr. Spiers very truly says, "their work will follow," when he has gone away, and the mission is ended. Then the little books will be read and treasured, kept, perhaps, for many a day.

To me this mission was one of special interest, because I have known for many years the fathers and mothers of most of the children. Some of them were boys and girls in my classes fifteen years ago; and numbers of them have now happy homes, who once had dark and wretched ones. Thank God for such victory won. Let us praise Him for each soul saved, each life that has been rescued.

There are many earnest workers at Dorking; and this mission has certainly been full of encouragement to them. The closing praise-meeting seems to have been one of the most interesting features of the work; when many parents, friends, and older girls and boys gave their testimonies to the blessing they had received during the past fortnight.

It is difficult to instance special cases of conversion at so early a date; but in another year's time, we may feel certain this will be no difficult task, as then the work will have been tested, and its results more definitely seen. "It has been so nice"; "We are so sorry it is over"; "Oh, I wish it would go on," many of these dear children said, with pathetic looks on their little faces. "May its good work go on for ever; may this mission increase and prosper," we older ones can earnestly respond.

DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Sir,—The case of the Deep Sea Smacksmen, as placed before the public by this Institution, has awakened great interest, and large sums have been subscribed towards mitigating the evils incidental to their hard and toilsome life. For this practical sympathy we are profoundly thankful.

So many contributors have, however, preferred to give "towards a new Mission ship"—so few to the general funds—that we are brought face to face with a most serious disproportion between available income and the necessary expenditure involved in efficiently maintaining the Society's vessels. The Queen Victoria, specially furnished with ten hospital cots, and quarters for a resident surgeon, is nearly ready for sea; her sister smack the Albert (generously given at a cost of £3500 by an anonymous donor) is on the stocks.

Yet so low are the general receipts, that even the pioneer hospital ship cannot be despatched on her beneficent errand unless additional funds be speedily forthcoming, while, for the same reason it may prove needful to delay the completion of the Albert, and it is evident that we ought not to accept the proposed gift of other vessels until such time as there is reasonable prospect of maintaining those we already have.

Meanwhile the winter is creeping on, and illness and accident abound, as proved by the fact that no fewer than 6575 smacksmen, 96 of whom were in-patients, have received treatment during the present year on board our Dispensary Mission Smacks, while three surgeons have been almost constantly afloat since the spring, and by their valuable efforts, even with the crude resources at their command, have demonstrated at once the great need and the practicability of a more elaborate hospital scheme.

As yet, however, we have merely touched the fringe of this keen distress, and we feel it to be essential that suitable cruising hospitals should accompany the fleets in order that this hard-working and most deserving class may benefit by the professional skill and careful nursing secured to the very poorest on shore, but of which, by reason of the conditions of their life, they have hitherto been entirely deprived.

This can only be accomplished when the fish-eating population at home are more fully alive to their responsibility—we would rather say privilege—in respect of the thousands of our fellow-countrymen who risk and lose their lives on the fishing-grounds.—Your obedient servants,

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE.

THE name of W. Evans Hurndall is widely known as that of one of the most popular preachers of the East-end. People are not generally aware, however, of the fact that the preacher goes straight from his own pulpit on a Sunday night to the room over the entrance of Bow Railway Station, where he conducts another service for a congregation of 1200 persons.

The spacious old chapel in Harley-street, Bow-road, is one of those suburban sanctuaries that were exceedingly respectable half a century ago, but which changed for the worse with changing times, until empty pews became more numerous than their congregation. Since Mr. Hurndall's acceptance of the pastorate, however, more than the old prosperity has been revived at Harley-street Chapel. The chapel itself has been enlarged, while new vestries and rooms have been erected. On a recent Sunday evening, at the seven o'clock service, the aisles were crowded as well as the pews, and on almost every night of the week something appears to be going on. Mr. Hurndall so far resembles the pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle as a preacher that he is not by any means enslaved by pulpit conventionalities. In discoursing on the text, "They knew not that evil was near them" (Judges xx. 34), he described the battle between Benjamin and Israel in glowing style; and, while expressing the delight that it afforded him to see boys and girls who could fight evil, he showed that danger came to those who were busy, and were getting on famously in the world, as well as to the idle. What they wanted was a capable leader, such as they had in Christ. The world was full of danger, and they could not fight their own battles; but Christ would do that for them.

The service at the chapel is over at 8.15, and a quarter of an hour later Mr. Hurndall is on the platform at the Bow and Bromley Institute, and there is a look of expectancy on the sea of upturned faces that greet the preacher. This meeting is a winter institution, which has just been commenced for the season; and it has become so popular with working people, more especially, that they were eagerly asking the visiting missionaries a short time back what would be the date of the opening night. We cannot wonder at this meeting's popularity when the peculiar circumstances of large numbers of the poor and struggling people are taken into account. There are not a few mothers, for example, who actually cannot leave home until after eight o'clock, or until their children are out of hand for the day, by being in bed. Then it is a curious fact that some of these women have husbands who are so uxorious that they will not attend a meeting at all without their wives. There are some present who either cannot or will not attend an ordinary church or chapel service. To take more particular notice of the closely packed assembly is to see that though they are much mixed, some evidently being well-to-do, a large proportion are of a very poor class.

The service is enlivened by the singing of several pieces from The Christian Choir, &c., and a lady sings a solo, the chorus of which is taken up by the congregation. After the singing follow a brief prayer, and the reading of Ps. i., care apparently being taken that nothing shall weary the people by its length. Then such of the people as happen to be what Mr. Hurndall calls "early risers" on Sunday mornings are invited to be at the Harley-street Chapel service at 11 a.m. on the 28th instant. Beyond this a Bring-some-one-else-with-you Society had been started, and people were invited to be of some use by honouring its principal rule.

Those who wish for advice or instruction are invited to retire into ante-rooms, and on the evening of a recent Sunday sixteen persons thus turned aside. Mr. Hurndall states that there is very rarely a church meeting held at which persons do not apply for membership whose first impressions were received at these late meetings after the ordinary chapel service.

In a very literal sense the church is a working mission church, with eight missionaries, who are constantly visiting among the people, and with a Sunday-school of 850 scholars, besides Bible-classes for adults, and the usual Christian agencies. The elder girls of the school constitute a working society, which makes clothes for needy children, and for the poor generally. Living at 16, Cottage Grove, Bow-road, Mr. Hurndall is a near neighbour of Mr. A. G. Brown; and while the two are in hearty sympathy with each other's work, they are together recognised by poor East-enders as two of their principal benefactors during trying winters and hard times. G. MEDICAL PRAYER UNION.

THE annual meeting of this Union was recently held at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. Dr. F. LE GROS CLARK presided, and delivered an excellent opening address.

The Hon. Sec., Mr. C. F. HARFORD-BATTERSBY read the annual report, referring to the work done by the Christian associations at the various Metropolitan hospitals. He spoke of some excellent work being prosecuted by St. Bartholomew's and University College Hospitals, who are leading the van in this Christian enterprise, the former with a Medical Missionary Society, the latter with a Working Lads' Club. It is found that many men, not decided Christians, cannot be induced to interest themselves in the latter project. Good work is being done in many of the hospitals, and, on the whole, he could give a very satisfactory report of the year's progress. Unfortunately, some of the hospitals are very lukewarm in their love for Christ, and in two no Christian Associations are at present in existence.

Rev. F. B. MEYER gave the address of the evening. He said it was but rarely that the medical man and the minister of the Gospel meet except in the sick-chamber, and then under circumstances when human nature is generally seen at its worst, with mind and spirit alike overclouded. Yet man was made in the image of God, and that gasping, struggling creature, clinging desperately to the last fragment of life is the wreck of the grand original design. As we see the picture of the perfect man, Christ Jesus, we think of what man shall be. And as we contemplate the wreck before us, let us think, "Yet that man was enough for Christ to die for." We are all equally fallen from the standard of the perfect man. We may enjoy perfect bodily health, but what an infinite distance is yet between us and the perfect man! Man always has fallen short of the highest standard—not from want of knowledge, but from want of power to perform the good we would do. How shall we get this power? We have talked much of the Gospel as a scheme of salvation from sin, as if that were all. But the Gospel is also the power of God to enable us to be what we wish to be. We may have to do with mysteries which we cannot analyse. The power which comes into a human life is not a mere power or an influence, but the very presence of the Spirit of God. Christianity is not merely the whitewashing of a filthy soul on the verge of eternity, but something which comes as health to the diseased spirit, power to the impotent soul.

There was not so large an attendance as usual, but a spirit of deep and earnest attention prevailed, and many must have gone forth to another year's work feeling that it had been good to be there. Students from most of our large London hospitals were present, and we also noticed present Dr. Alder Smith, Dr. Heywood Smith, Dr. Thorne Thorne, Dr. Thorowgood, Dr. Maxwell, &c., &c.

WHO WILL GO?

OH, where are the twelve who shall ventur
    A valiant Apostle band, [forth
To carry the words of the Prince of Peace
    To yonder benighted land?

Perhaps to-night, by the fireside bright,
    They are reading some thrilling tales
Of mission emprise, which shall rouse their soul
    And take from their eyes the scales.

Perhaps they are found in a concourse vast,*
    Engaging in praise and prayer,
Where a still small voice to their hearts shal
    That they in the work must share. [sa

Wherever they are, and whate'er excuse
    They urge as a plea to stay,
Make plain their way by thy power, O Lord,
    And thrust them forth, we pray!

How passing strange that a thrusting forth
    Is needed for work so high;
In reaping for Thee such a harvest field,
    The angels might surely vie.

MR. IRA D. SANKEY.

MR. SANKEY concluded his visit to Torquay o Wednesday night, last week, when he held service in the Upton Vale Baptist Chapel. Th spacious building was crowded. Mr. Sanke occupied the first half-hour rendering some o the best known of the "Additional Songs an Solos." Then, after singing "In the shado of his wings," the evangelist gave a powerfu address, and at the close of the meeting twent persons professed to accept Christ as thei Saviour.

Going on to Plymouth, Mr. Sankey attende a service held on Friday evening in St. Andrew' Hall. He was accompanied by several minister and laymen, who are in the habit of takin part in Gospel meetings, which have been con tinued since the visit of Messrs. Moody an Sankey in 1882. The building was crowded After singing "Numberless as the Sands of th Sea," and "Belshazzar's Feast," Mr. Sanke delivered a stirring address. His utterance were highly appreciated.

Mr. Sankey will next visit Devonport an Brighton.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN IRELAND.

THE sixth week of Major Whittle's mission i Belfast opened on Sunday, November 11, whe crowded meetings were held in the largest buildings of the town. The evening meeting in the Ulster Hall, had features of a specially interesting character, one of which was the attendance of a large body of soldiers of the Black Watch and Gordon Highlanders. The Major delivered a powerful address from the words, "One of the soldiers with a spea pierced his side," and introduced some thrilling incidents by way of illustration.

Meetings for conversation, after the regula proceedings, were attended by hundreds, among whom a band of earnest workers moved. A the Sunday services, and for some days following, Mr. Clement Davis, of London, sang number of solos. During the week Bible-readings were given in one church, and evangelisti services held in another. Throughout the entire mission special meetings for the member of the Y.M.C.A. have been held each evening and have been followed by very encouraging results.

MISSIONARIES FOR NORTH AFRICA.

THREE new workers for the North African Mission were present at the noon-day prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Tuesday, last week, and were commended to God in earnest prayer. Two of them told of the way in which they had been led to decide upon preaching Christ in a foreign land.

One of the party, Pastor Hamilton, late of Bath, takes a wife and family with him. His wife's sister is another worker. Mr. Hamilton has for some years been the life and soul of a notable effort in the city he has just left. On quitting the Pastors' College nine years ago, he addressed himself to real uphill work at Bath, and having built up a large church, he founded an evangelistic mission, with a large Assembly-hall for its centre. This agency has been instrumental of much good in East Somerset, where Mr. Hamilton's name will long be remembered with affection. Going to Morocco, trusting the Lord to use him for his glory, Mr. Hamilton is following the noble example of Miss Herdman, formerly a member of his church at Bath.

Miss Hodges, another of the outgoing missionaries, had the advantage of training at Doric Lodge, one of Mr. Guinness's institutions. For some time she has been an earnest worker in connection with the Y.W.C.A. The third missionary who attended the meeting was Mr. Harding, who will leave England shortly.

A GOOD WORK AT SPEZIA.

SIR,—May I be allowed to occupy a few lines of your valued space in putting before your readers the impressions I have formed of the work being carried on by Rev. Edward Clarke, at Spezia. It was my privilege to spend two days with him lately, and to visit his Orphanage for girls, and some of his day-schools, and I was extremely gratified with all I saw and heard.

Spezia is now a very important place, as there are 6000 men employed in the arsenal, and buildings are being erected for the accommodation of 10,000 working people, so that there is a splendid field for work among children. I found that there are about 400 children in Mr. Clarke's various day-schools, who, in addition to the ordinary secular instruction, are being taught the simplest truths of the Gospel. The Orphanage now contains twelve young girls, under the care of a most competent person, and it was delightful to see their neat and cheerful appearance, and hear them sing Sankey's hymns in Italian.

Mr. Clarke has besides several preaching stations as well as schools in the neighbouring villages, and these he is anxious to multiply as the needful funds are supplied. At present there is a debt of nearly £400. He also wishes to establish an orphanage for boys in a most suitable house, and I shall be very glad if Christian friends will come forward and help him to fulfil his wish, as he might then be enabled to rear and train teachers and preachers of the Gospel, which is Italy's great need at this time. The people are most willing to receive Gospels and tracts, as I can testify from a visit with Mr. Clarke to Porto Venere, a small town near Spezia, where only two persons out of about sixty spoken to refused the offered tract.

The Lord has hitherto guided and prospered his servant and those who help him in a remarkable way, and I should rejoice to know that my recent visit resulted in an extension of the work. I will gladly take charge of any contributions for the purpose

Yours faithfully, F. A. BEVAN.

INQUIRERS' PAGE.

IMMERSION.

DEAR SIR,—Thanks for your notice of my question. Owing to your oft-repeated "want of space," I wished to be concise. I have no reason to complain of the spirit of the replies, and certainly they are instructive. By "old and new use of baptizo" I wished to emphasise what I think in this controversy cannot be fairly maintained, that the word only implies total immersion, even granting, as I do, the root meaning of the word is "to dip." By principal meanings, I meant uses of the word in old writers and the New Testament.

One of your correspondents said: "There is something at the bottom of this question which he wished could be got at." So say I; and this is at the bottom of it. When our blessed Master gave (Matt. xxviii. 18, 19) the admittedly universal command, "Go, teach...baptizing," &c., did He command every true follower of his to be totally put under water, on peril of disobedience to a Divine command, or otherwise there could be no baptism? I, for one, trusting I understand what whole-hearted surrender to his will is, have not a shadow of doubt He did not lay such a ritual upon his followers. Such a command would necessitate that the delicate, infirm, sick, and dying, newly converted, should be put under water. Of these I have cases now in my parish. Do the Baptists do this? Shall we heat the water, or provide waterproof clothing? Or can a universal command be set aside by, "Oh, the Lord does not expect it of you."

Now, what is the use of this word, with its root meaning "to dip"?—(1) To immerse totally; (2) to dip a part only; (3) to wash or bathe; (4) to wash a part only (Mark vii. 4; Luke xi. 38; Heb. vi. 2; Acts xxii. 16); (5) for sorrows to come upon one (Luke xii. 50; Mark x. 38—40); (6) for the descent of the Holy Spirit (Acts i. 5); baptized with the Holy Ghost, explained ver. 8, "Holy Ghost come upon you"; (7) where no water touched (1 Cor. x. 2. See Exod. xiv. 22: "Upon the dry ground"); (8) the word baptizo is nowhere in the New Testament defined by the words, "went under the water." Standing in the water, ankle or knee deep, and pouring the water, would cover the expressions "into and out of." In Matt. iii. 16, "Jesus came from the water." Luke iii. 16, dative of the instrument, is with water, also Acts i. 5, xi. 16; John iii. 13, "much water there," R.V. (margin) "many waters"; is this a reference to the springs? In Rom. vi. does the language imply a fact or a figure? "Buried with Him through baptism into death." I understand this to be, made partaker of his death by baptism as the public profession of the acceptance of Christ crucified and risen. This passage certainly cannot be held to define the mode of baptism.

How can any maintain that this word with all these diversified uses must and can only mean, when applied to the Christian ordinance, total immersion? Of course, there is no sprinkling directed to be used in the English or Irish churches. E. R. MONCRIEFF, Clk.

DEAR SIR,—Some of your correspondents seem to overlook the fact that those best able to judge have long been agreed that the original baptismal institution was immersion administered to believers on personal profession of their faith. All that the most exacting Baptists could say in contending for the practice of immersion has been said over and over again by men who decline to tread the "old paths" in this particular. Lexicographers are practically at one as to the meaning of the word, and those who are recognised as learned in Christian antiquities hold it to be clear beyond doubt that from the beginning immersion was the simple way.

Primarily, the Greek word baptizo means to dip, as a dyer steeps a fabric, and a bather immerses himself. Secondarily, it means to submerge an object or person, as when water swamps a ship, or suffering overwhelms a man. All figurative and developed uses come from these senses, as "Baptism of the Spirit," when the Spirit falls upon, endues, or clothes a person. Some correspondents find difficulty in understanding 1 Cor. x. 1, in the sense of immersion. They have not, however, denied that the cloud "covered" the Israelites (Ps. cv. 39), and the sea also, though not the waters (Exod. xiv. 22; Ps. lxxviii. 13, 14). The people "passed through the sea," under the leadership of Moses; Christians also "pass through" the waters of baptism when confessing Christ in that manner.

One correspondent says that our Lord "sanctioned the relaxation" of the Sabbath law. This is certainly a mistake. The good law was upheld, but the tradition which made it void was exposed. To argue that Christian institutions may be altered because the Day of Rest was in early times altered from the seventh to the first day of the week, is to make it very clear that there is little or no excuse for modifying Christ's own ordinance. Obviously, the practice of the Apostles with regard to the Lord's Day amounts to a command to us, who should follow them as they undoubtedly followed the Lord Himself.

There is nothing novel in ceremonial dipping. It had its place in the significant ordinances of the Jews ages ago, and it is not surprising that Christ should have instructed his disciples therewith to show forth that their sins had been put away, covered, renounced; that He should give them an ordinance in the observance of which they would declare their death to sin and rising again to a life of righteousness. One of your correspondents finds the origin of baptism in the law of Moses. No doubt he is right; but it is in the many washings from impurity, not the mere sprinklings of consecration we find the Mosaic counterpart of the rite.

With regard to the objection about the facilities for immersion in Jerusalem at Pentecost, I may point out that travellers have shown that they were ample. The vast pools of the city were many of them used for purposes of ablution. Seeing, however, that the word "baptize" clearly answers to the Latin "immerse," and the Saxon "dip," objectors must be careful how they discredit the Scriptures, if they do not create confusion as well. In The Nineteenth Century for November, 1879, the late Dean Stanley honestly admitted that the Western Church had "changed" Christ's institution. He said: "The change from immersion to sprinkling has set aside the larger part of the apostolic language regarding baptism, and has altered the very meaning of the word." I cannot but think that such a "setting aside" requires more than sentimental or preferential justification.

Yours faithfully, T. W. J.

"Nemo" writes, drawing attention to the statement of "Patrobas" in a recent issue that the 3000 baptized on the Day of Pentecost could readily find convenience for immersion in the Jordan, "which was not far off." As a fact, the distance from Jerusalem to the nearest point of the Jordan is from twenty-four to thirty miles.

"Investigator" states that in the East the mode of washing or bathing (except in the sea) is invariably to sit or stand on the floor, or in shallow water, the water being then poured over the person. It is the same with the washing of hands and feet. Therefore the idea of pouring was more natural to the Eastern mind than dipping. The primitive word for "bathing" in all languages means at first "dipping," but we talk of a "shower bath" or "douche bath," and so it seems to have been with "baptize."

"K. L." writes with regard to the question: When should baptism be administered? In the mission field it should follow conversion. Should it then be administered on the confession of Christ to those who, brought up under Christian influences, have been baptized in infancy? The writer says: "Should anyone be called, being baptized, let him seek to be 'filled with the Spirit'; but should any be called, not having been baptized, that is a different matter, and not to be treated lightly, or put aside altogether, as some would teach."

"Shem," a Hebrew Christian, points out that baptism is still universally practised among the Jews; the form is identical with that which obtained in the time of Christ, when "immersion" was the sign of the washing away of sins. Sprinkling was an essential part of the Temple service, but the Jews have never confounded it with baptism. As to the objection based on the record concerning Pentecost, the writer says: "I cannot find in the Acts that 3000 men were baptized in Jerusalem in one day."

[Both sides having been now heard at length, we do not propose to prolong this correspondence.—ED.]

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Captain Dawson, Evangelist, Bournemouth.

Not long ago Mr. Arnold White, in his admirable volume, "The Problems of a Great City," dealt with the question of the absence of a general system of mortuaries, and called attention to the necessity under which so many of the poor labour, of keeping corpses in the living-room of the family until the interment can take place. Such a provision for the comfort and health of the living might well be made at the expense of the community, but in the absence of legislation we are glad to see that here and there private individuals are taking upon themselves to provide what is required.

The Literary World asserts that a great change is passing over the taste of the Church in relation to hymns; that all save the most lyric and inspiring of the older hymns are dropping out of use, and that their place is being taken by the far more poetic and lyric productions of the last half century. No doubt a number of whilom favourites are gradually dropping into disuse, but it is not because of objection to their doctrine. Toplady's noble hymn, "Rock of Ages," still holds its place, despite "Down-grade" movements, and it is satisfactory to find that not long since the readers of The Sunday at Home placed it at the head of a list of one hundred favourite hymns.

There is a nameless something in a really good hymn which it is, perhaps, difficult to characterise, and it is the absence of that something which leaves numbers of our hymns, that are faultless from the purely critical point of view, cold, and without power over men's hearts and lives.

Referring to Canon Taylor's recent attack upon the missionary societies, The Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette says very aptly :—

> Progress often seems slow to contemporaries, but even in the case of the great dominion of India, at the present rate of evangelisation the entire empire will be Christianised within one hundred and fifty years; and how many centuries did it take to Christianise Europe?

A recent painful death from the improper use of one of those drugs now so commonly advertised for the use of those suffering from "overwork" and "brain worry," intensifies our recent warning against the adoption of such remedies without the sanction of an able medical man. Those suffering from nervous disorders who find temporary relief from the use of the dangerous sedatives advocated by interested people are only too likely to become slaves to the habit of indulgence in that which, in another way, is not less sinful and destructive than the companion habit of intemperance.

For a considerable time now the doctrine of the Real Presence has been openly insisted upon by a large number of "Protestant" clergymen, and, as an almost necessary adjunct to that "doctrine of the mass," prayers for the dead have been taught. It is difficult to stop the ball when it has been set rolling, and it appears that now the argument will be forced to its legitimate conclusion. As The St. James's Chronicle puts it, "the lucrative milch cow of purgatory" will be made to enrich the advocates of the doctrine, "special intercession" for the departed having been urged, and a gentle intimation made that the "daily Eucharist" cannot be kept up without funds.

From the lately issued Report of the Local Government Board, which contains a mass of information of interest and importance to all who are either working for the reform of the poor laws, or who have to administer the present complex system, it is gleaned that during the last twenty years pauperism has diminished by nearly one half; for whereas in 1869-71 the mean number of paupers in London was over 150,000, in 1887-8 it was less than 100,000, and the proportion of paupers to population is now twenty-six per thousand, as against forty-seven per thousand at the former period. The percentage, it appears, is very much higher in such southern counties as Wiltshire and Devonshire, than in the northern; in Kent and Sussex, notwithstanding the diminution of agricultural labour, there has been no appreciable increase of pauperism.

Mr. Hedley, the Metropolitan Poor-Law Inspector, holds that the present distress in London is not exceptional, but chronic and permanent, being mainly due to improvidence and to the scarcity of cheap house accommodation—a defect which, as we have frequently urged, calls for immediate remedy. Mr. Fleming, another inspector, advocates the discouragement of outdoor relief, and a stricter administration of the poor-law. Whilst agreeing that the system of outdoor relief, unless carefully guarded, opens the door to imposition, it must be remembered that the dread and abhorrence in which "the house" is held by so many of the independent poor are more than a mere sentiment; and it is towards the enabling of such persons to retain their homes that the efforts of private charity, working hand in hand with the local authorities, may be with advantage directed.

It is well that official and public attention has been drawn to the subject of the boarding-out of pauper children by the recent brief discussion in the House of Commons. It is satisfactory to know, on the authority of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board, that the number of cases where children are educated in the workhouse schools has considerably decreased during the last five years, and that the necessity of careful inquiry as to the character of the persons who receive the children is continually impressed upon Guardians. With respect to the emigration of pauper children the President of the Local Government Board gave the assurance that no impediment would be placed in the way of Boards of Guardians. A propos of this, it may be mentioned that in an exhaustive paper on "Child Emigration," read by Mr. Rankin, M.P., before the Reformatory Conference some months ago, it was stated that children could be fitted out and sent to Canada and placed in good situations there at a cost of £15 per head (the expense of keeping a child in the workhouse under the present system being £9 a year), and that only eight per cent. of those hitherto so sent out had proved failures. Such an economical and effectual method of reducing the supply of possible paupers and criminals deserves every attention and encouragement from our philanthropists and reformers.

The Mansion House Conference on the condition of the unemployed have issued a memorandum stating that after much careful investigation it has been decided to adopt (with many modifications) the plan of labourers' training colonies which is in operation in Germany. The committee hope by this means to arrive at some feasible method of assisting individual cases of unemployed in the Metropolis, and that some light may thus be thrown upon the question of the treatment of wayfarers and vagrants. "It would prove," says the memorandum, "how far, under strict discipline and the regenerating influence of steady work, men might learn to adapt themselves to new conditions, or acquire habits of punctuality and perseverance." The experiment is worth a trial, and will be watched with interest. The Conference invite suggestions from any persons interested in this question; communications may be addressed to Mr. J. H. Allen, 46A, Pall Mall, S.W.

It is to be regretted that many persons, to whom they are sent, do not make themselves acquainted with the richly interesting matter in the annual reports of the various missionary societies. The last report of the London Society presents evidences of progress in China, which would go far to cure the unbelief that is a paralysis on the zeal and hope of many at home. If they see no converting power in the congregations where they worship, the more necessary is it that they should go for proofs of this to the mission field. Nor is this grace shown there among the poor only, though that would be no disparagement of the work: men of education, high position, and philosophic tastes accept salvation through a crucified and risen Saviour, and go forth to preach the truth of Christ with earnestness and fervency.

But it is the old-fashioned Gospel that is being shown to be "the power of God unto salvation" among the people of China, as elsewhere. Rev. Griffith John writes of "the splendid work" done in the hospital in Hankow through clear Christian teaching, and in a passage we cannot refrain from quoting, remarks :—

> You would be surprised to see how the darkness, the death, and the gloom of heathenism give way to the light, the life, and brightness of Christianity under this simple teaching. I have known men to stand up and thank God for the illness which brought them to the hospital, because it was the means of bringing them into contact with the life which is eternal. Some of your good people at home are beginning to think that they can do with a Christianity in which the Divinity of Christ and the Atonement of the Cross may be classed among the debateable non-essential dogmas of the Church. The moment you have made up your minds to adopt that conclusion as the truth of God, that very moment you may break up your missions; for we feel that a Gospel robbed of these two cardinal doctrines is no Gospel at all to the heathen.

The Record says of the prosecution of the Bishop of Lincoln for unlawful ritual, that the die is now cast. The gravity of the step must be profoundly felt by all wise men. Our contemporary, in very firm language, blames Dr. King for laying himself open to it; for not exercising the self-restraint that his official prominence demanded; for taking all the Church could give him of profit and influence, and involving himself, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and, in a degree, every Churchman, in a dangerous strife and turmoil of far-spreading consequences. Onlookers may regret the occasion these things

With Nine Original Illustrations. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From The Rock:—

"The lessons to be learnt from the life of this prophet are well drawn out and emphasised in the pages before us. . . . Mr. Meyer's language is clear, forcible, descriptive, and interesting; his doctrine is always pure and elevating."

From The Presbyterian Messenger:—

"This is a most stimulating book. It sparkles with heavenly light, and glows with heavenly fire from beginning to end. We honestly and heartily recommend it."

CHRISTIAN LIVING.

FIFTH THOUSAND. By F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Cloth boards, 1s.

From Footsteps of Truth:—

'Mr. MEYER writes with all the warmth of one who tastes, handles, and feels the Word of Life. In this book he stretches out a loving hand to his fellows in the Christian course, eager to help them in the pathway of holiness."

From The Christian Commonwealth:—

"Every page is full of stimulating thought for Christian workers; and we heartily commend its earnest admonitions, and cheering appeals for a higher life. From beginning to end it is a live book; and is worthy of a place in every Christian library."

"IN THE VOLUME OF THE BOOK:"

Or, THE PLEASURE AND PROFIT OF BIBLE STUDY.

By Rev. Dr. G. F. PENTECOST, M.A.

Being an Introduction to the Study of the Holy Scriptures.
With Introductions by Rev. JOSEPH COOK & Rev. J. H. VINCENT, D.D.

SEVENTH EDITION. Cloth limp, 2s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

From Night and Day:—

"No one can read this almost unique volume without being stimulated to a more diligent study of THE BOOK. It is not, strictly speaking, evidential; yet the key to valuable Scripture evidence is to be found within. It is not exegetical; but the careful reader will be taught thereby a sound method of exposition. It is not homiletical; although the seed-corn for dozens of addresses are contained in its brief compass. Buy it, we can say to all; read it with your Bible open and a common-place book to hand, ready to catch up and store away the many precious things so lavishly scattered throughout its pages."

Cheap Editions: Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

By F. B. MEYER, B.A.

With full-page Illustrations of the RIVER JORDAN and JACOB'S WELL.

SIXTH THOUSAND. Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From The Baptist Messenger:—

"We have had considerable pleasure in reading this book on the Life of Jacob. Mr. Meyer has great descriptive power. He can tell a narrative well. The subject in his hand glows with life; and the scenes and events in the history of his hero pass vividly before you, and are ever being used to force home on the readers some great and important principle. The volume is prettily got up, well bound, and embellished with frontispiece and illustrations."

From The Sword and Trowel:—

"Exceedingly good. Not only spiritual, as everything from our brother Mr. Meyer would be, but also thoughtful, fresh, suggestive, and thoroughly practical."

CHRIST and the SCRIPTURES.

THE LIVING WORD AND THE WRITTEN WORD.

By Rev. ADOLPH SAPHIR, B.A.

Presentation Editions: Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s.; with gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"We know of no volume that we more earnestly desire to see in the hands of persons of every age who are pondering the religious questions of momentous importance, so much agitating men's minds at the present time. It is admirably adapted for the mature and thoughtful; and also peculiarly fitted to give a right direction to the lives and thoughts of the young, and to mould them into Christians of a high type of character.—The Newcastle Daily Journal.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY BIRTHDAY BOOK.

With Beautifully Illuminated Frontispiece.

In this country very few books, except the "Pilgrim's Progress," have been so largely circulated or so widely read as Bogatzky's "Golden Treasury." In addition to the issue of Bogatzky in the ordinary form, the Publishers have also produced an Edition, Arranged as a Birthday Book, a form in which it is believed the volume will be welcomed by many. In this "Birthday" Edition four additional pages are introduced at the close of each month's portions. These extra pages are arranged with thirty or thirty-one blank square spaces—one for every day of the month. Each of these squares is adapted for receiving four entries; consequently, the total number of names which can be inscribed in the special pages of the "Birthday" Edition amounts to over fifteen hundred.

Cheap Edition: Cloth, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

- Difficult Texts Explained.
- Prayers Recorded in Scripture.

And a Large Amount of Valuable Biblical Information.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"We do not know a more useful handbook for Bible readers and Bible students. It seems to embody nearly everything necessary in such a book."
The Christian Commonwealth.

"Full of instructive matter from beginning to end; well-arranged; and most suitable for those who desire either to understand for themselves, or to help others to understand, the Holy Book."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

Cheap Editions: Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY

By A. L. O. E.

With Attractive Frontispiece in Colour.

"We have walked through 'PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY' with great pleasure, admiring the chaste productions of a rich fancy, and the skilful interweaving of the moral with the picturesque. We would recommend our readers to follow our example."—Footsteps of Truth.

"Percival is a bright, gifted, true-hearted young artist. His 'PICTURE GALLERY' consists of representations of Scripture incidents from the Old and New Testaments, which are here delightfully narrated, and no less clearly expounded. For the young the volume will prove deeply interesting and instructive."
The Baptist Messenger.

furnish to the enemies of religion; nevertheless, the Church of England is a Reformed Church, or it is not. It would be a happy thing for England if the clergy would, by their unmistakable Protestantism, decide this question; but, if they do not, it cannot awaken surprise that there should be among thousands of the best of her adherents very anxious solicitude while waiting for an authoritative opinion upon it.

It is remarkable that while a large number of Englishmen seem desirous to draw nearer to the Church of Rome, in many parts of the Continent a work of self-reformation is springing up of a deeply interesting nature. We learn from an address delivered last week by the Archbishop of Dublin, who has visited Spain and Portugal for the express purpose of testing reports which had reached him, that in Portugal, within the last twenty-five years, 250 congregations, representing 10,000 persons, have come out of Romanism. In Spain the friends of the Gospel are increasing, and are about to raise "The Church of the Martyrs" on the site in Madrid where Spanish reformers have been put to death. In Canada, also, 30,000 have forsaken the Romish Church, and the movement is spreading in Mexico, Cuba, and Brazil. Let us not doubt, spite of adverse appearances, that the Holy Spirit is working in the earth, and that the great redemption is drawing near.

Mrs. Josephine E. Butler's quarterly review, The Dawn, deserves the cordial support of all who are exerting themselves for the abolition of the State regulation of vice. The third quarterly number, recently issued, is well filled with information calculated to equip and encourage all who are interested in the progress of this special Christian endeavour at home and abroad. It is an excellent medium of inter-communication between the friends of purity and workers for the protection of young women. More subscribers are required to cover the cost of production. Those who send 2s. to Mr. J. T. Doswell, publisher, Winchester, will receive The Dawn for a year, and at the same time help to sustain Mrs. Butler's noble endeavour.

The Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette makes a strange statement with reference to the breakdown in health of bishops and clergymen:—

> We do not remember the time when so many were hors de combat, and we cannot but think that the almost universal prevalence of total abstention from the use of alcohol in some shape or other as a needful stimulant has something to do with it.

From this and a good deal more to the same effect which follows, it would seem as if the editor of the journal referred to were a second Rip Van Winkle, so far as the temperance question is concerned.

We are asked to insert the following. We recognise and heartily acknowledge the kindness of Miss Grace Hawthorne; but, with our convictions as to the stage, we must express our great regret that the wife of a clergyman should thus become a purveyor for the theatre:—

THE STAGE AND HUNGRY CHILDREN.

Miss Grace Hawthorne has kindly given permission for a Ticket Benefit at the Royal Princess's Theatre on Monday, Nov. 12, to Friday, Nov. 23, on behalf of the Christ Church East London halfpenny dinners. All tickets bought direct of Mrs. Priscilla Jay, Christ Church Vicarage, Watney-street, E., will benefit the charity.

Next Sunday will be observed as "Temperance Sunday" in Nonconformist churches. This is in accordance with an agreement entered into last year by representatives of the principal Nonconformist temperance organisations.

A correspondent who, as a justice of the peace, is now on a licensing bench, writes to express the fear that the new County Councils, being elected by the democracy, may largely represent the drink interest, and that the public may be the losers instead of the gainers by the change. No doubt there is great peril that this result will accrue unless the Christian temperance electors bestir themselves to appoint the proper men. We trust that strenuous efforts will be made everywhere to get those elected who will consider the highest interests of the people.

We have not experienced a greater shock of surprise for many a day than when we read in Rev. William Rogers' recent letter to The Times on the East-end murders, the barefaced suggestion that "all those women who ply the meretricious trade should be registered, and, if need be, licensed." Of course, there is not the remotest chance, we are thankful to believe, that the Rector of Bishopsgate's plan will be adopted; but we confess we stand aghast at the confusion of thought which will permit a religious teacher to advise the licensing and regulation of iniquity as a method of stamping it out.

It is interesting to find from reports in The Guardian that recent experiments in the direction of "three acres and a cow" have been remarkably successful. Several clergymen who have divided their glebe lands into allotments of from one rood to five acres state that the land has maintained a larger number of persons than that employed by the farmers who previously held it, and that the occupiers have "a store of wheat and potatoes to help them and their families through the winter months." In one district there was only one tenant who did not pay his rent punctually, although the total number of allotments was 130.

It appears from some very suggestive figures, which, according to the Madrid correspondent of The Daily Chronicle, have been lately published respecting the religious orders in Spain, that in that country there are two hundred and twenty-one monasteries, containing four thousand monks and friars, and eleven thousand convents, containing twenty-five thousand nuns. Nearly two hundred monasteries have been built during the last twelve years, and there is scarcely one of the above number which does not control large sums of money. It is an evil day for a State when Popish orders become numerous and rich, and therefore the alarm felt by the Liberal press of Spain is amply justified. In the face of these figures it is little wonder that the civil power should be paralysed by the ecclesiastical; they may also serve as a warning to England, who, from a false idea of tolerance, permits the free entrance and settlement of Jesuits and Roman Catholic orders. Moreover, in view of the present tendency to throw a false charm over the monastic and conventual system, it may be well to remember that our own sixteenth century records show that these institutions are but too often whited sepulchres, and that behind the mask of poverty and separation from the world lurk superstition, profligacy, and well-endowed idleness.

A correspondent draws our attention to the prospectus of a proposed Cab Company for Paris. One thing specially impressed on likely shareholders, in favour of the enterprise, is the fact that the cabs "would be worked every day, and more especially on Sundays and holidays." We should think that the words we have italicised will have a very different effect on the minds of Christian capitalists from that intended by the promoters.

A recent issue of The Rangoon Gazette contained a long letter ventilating a grievance which will have an interest for English and American Christians. The Government of India has, it seems, imposed upon Christian missionaries a tax similar to the British income tax, while exempting Buddhist monks, public officials, and foreign consuls. As they derive no financial benefit by living in the country, the missionaries claim to be at least as generously dealt with as the idle native monks, and it is hoped that the Government will see its way to grant the relief which is being asked for. If, however, the payment of the tax is a condition of citizenship with its privileges, we can conceive circumstances in which it may be a decided advantage in Burmah for Christian workers to act without hesitation on the command, "Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's."

The experiment of providing dinners for poor children, which has proved such a boon in London, is being attended with equal success in Vienna, which contains about thirty thousand pauper school-children. More than forty thousand florins have already been collected this winter, the Emperor heading the list of subscribers, and a free dinner of excellent and abundant soup and bread is to be given six days a week to children of needy parents, the serving being done by lady volunteers. It is stated that similar dinners last year effected a wonderful improvement in the physical and mental health and strength of the children. It is certain that the attempt to cram facts and subjects into the heads of children whose bodies are only half fed cannot be a success from any point of view, and such a practical form of charity as the above deserves every encouragement, and might with advantage be still more generally adopted than it is even in our own country; for, wherever it has been in operation, teachers bear unanimous testimony to its beneficial effect upon their child scholars.

MR. DENHAM SMITH.—We are happy to be able to state that the improvement in Mr. Denham Smith's condition is still maintained.

"THE GREAT BIOGRAPHY."—On Thursday evening, last week, in Union Chapel, Islington, N., a service of a somewhat novel character was held. This was the exhibition by M. Gautschy, of Lausanne, of a series of 24 cartoons, illustrative of scenes in the life of Christ, from the exquisite paintings by Hoffman in the Dresden Gallery, magnified and shown up to great advantage on a large sheet through a magic lantern, by the electric light. The pictures were accompanied by the reading, by Dr. Allon, of appropriate passages of Scripture, and the rendering of sacred music by an efficient choir. The whole was most instructive, and could scarcely fail to deepen the interest of those present in the life of our Lord on earth, whilst doubtless being a real means of grace to many.

EVANGELICAL PREACHING.

THIS week, as announced, a series of Conferences on Evangelical Preaching, convened by Dr. Parker, have been held at the City Temple. An introductory meeting on Monday evening, at Union Chapel, Islington, was presided over by Mr. H. H. Fowler, M.P. He advised preachers to avoid controversy and party politics, and to give much time to exposition of the Scriptures. Rev. T. V. Tymms described Evangelicalism as standing between Rationalism and Romanism. Rev. Newman Hall read a paper on preaching. He insisted that there must first be a distinct call to the ministry of the word; then culture would be an advantage. Dr. Parker urged Evangelicals to show that it is only by the way of the Cross of Christ that man can come to God.

Dr. Allon opened the Conference on Tuesday with a powerful address on the evangel, and the way it should be preached. The history of the past cannot, he said, be dispassionately studied without the conviction being wrought that whatever results may have been produced by ecclesiastical organisation and ritual, the New Testament forecast of the Christian propaganda has been abundantly verified: "It has pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe." Such methods as have for their motive the lessening of the pressure of Christian appeal, while augmenting the sense of religious enjoyment, he altogether disapproved, and maintained that a strong religious life can only be sustained by intelligible theology. As the endeavour of the preacher should be to convert men to Christ, and perfect the life of believers, the evangel must tell men how they may receive forgiveness of sins, and lead a life of acceptance before God. This is through the atoning sacrifice of Christ, and the regeneration of the Holy Ghost, which are the distinctive points in the evangel. Preachers must emphasise these, with other truths, in their proper place, not for the sake of theological instruction, but for helping men to live the life which Christianity puts within their reach. "Christ crucified" was the keynote of Dr. Allon's powerful address.

Rev. Dr. H. R. Reynolds followed with a closely-reasoned and highly spiritual paper on "Evangelical Religion contrasted with its rivals, ancient and modern." Of this and other papers we hope to give some notice in our next issue.

BRISTOL Y.M.C.A.—In our report of Mr. Sankey's visit to Bristol Y.M.C.A., in our last issue, it erroneously appeared that that Association owed its existence to a previous visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. It is the large Y.M.C.A. Hall, in which the meetings were held, of which this is true, the Association itself having been founded as far back as 1862.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY are in need of a man who will go to Persia as their agent. He must acquire a knowledge of the language, if he does not already possess it, and he will also have to study Arabic and Armenian. There is also needed a young man of missionary spirit with business capacity, and linguistic gifts to go to Calcutta to be secretary of the auxiliary there. He will have the oversight of a vast field of labour in which fifty colporteurs are at work. Laymen are eligible for these two posts.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a special mission in Shaftesbury Memorial Hall, by Mr. John A. Arnold, from Nov. 25 to Dec. 3.——For blessing on a fourteen days' mission, at Tollington Hall, 239, Hornsey-road, from Nov. 25 to Dec. 9.——For blessing on a mission by Mr. Wm. Forbes, at Cheadle, Staffs.——For blessing on a work among young lads in Hoxton, commenced last week.——For blessing on Lorrha Protestant School, co. Tipperary, Ireland.——The Geneva Railway Mission has re-opened this autumn under heavier difficulties than ever. The ladies at the head of the Mission ask prayer that they may have wisdom, strength, and an increase of faith, so that the mission may be blessed to many.

The Book World.

* Prices of books sent for review will be given if stated.*

ROCKVILLE (1s. Hamilton & Adams) is an interesting temperance story, specially suitable for girls.

RIVETS OF GOLD. By Mrs. Bradshaw. 1s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons. A well-written tale, specially fitted for a girl just entering domestic service.

Like all his other works, Dr. Macduff's new work, RIPPLES IN THE STARLIGHT (2s. Nisbet & Co.) is marked by much freshness of thought, couched in chaste and expressive language. An excellent companion for a quiet hour.

The late Dr. Guthrie is the subject of the latest of The Tract Society's "Biographical Series." It is written by Rev. J. Radford Thomson, and graphically describes in outline the career of the popular and eloquent Scottish preacher. (1d.)

THE GLEANER PICTORIAL ALBUM is now complete. Vol. iii., the last of the series, gives details of the Church Missionary Society's work in China, Japan, Africa, and other parts of the world, the whole being sumptuously illustrated. (5s. C. M. S. House, Salisbury-square, E.C.)

THE STORY OF JONAH. By Captain Dawson. 1s. Shaw & Co. Here are some old lessons for the New Year. The matter is expository and practical, the manner terse and evangelical. The book is well worth study by those who desire to grow in grace and in the knowledge of Christ.

There is a great deal of reading in Margaret Robertson's new story, BY A WAY SHE KNEW NOT (5s. Hodder & Stoughton), but the interest never flags as the chequered career of the heroine unfolds itself. As a record of the refining influences of severe discipline in life, the tale deserves commendation.

Two volumes of HORNER'S STORIES are issued in highly coloured covers that will be sure to catch the eye of the inveterate story reader. Those who can thus be beguiled to dip into these lively and moving tales from real life, will find something that they do not get in the "penny dreadful"—a clear setting forth of the way of salvation, and the path of righteous living. We are glad to see the stories are being so widely circulated.

We have received an attractive parcel of artistic books and booklets from Messrs. H. Drane & Co., Lovell's-court. They are beautifully illustrated, and are very suitable for Christmas and New Year's gifts for the young. Whilst all are splendidly produced, we must specially commend "Songs of Love and Joy," poems by Dr. H. Bonar. 6s. —"The Right Way," by Charlotte Murray. 2s. —"In the Service of the King," containing some of Miss F. Havergal's beautiful poems. 2s.—"The Better Land" (2s.), poems by Dr. Bonar and others, and "Memories," by Mrs. Tom Kelly. 2s.—"Little Songs for Little Singers" (1s. 6d.) is beautifully illuminated.—The Rose, Shamrock, and Thistle books, by Edith Prince, are ingenious novelties.

VOICES OF THE SPIRIT. By Rev. George Matheson, M.A., D.D. 3s. 6d. James Nisbet & Co. There is considerable charm in the style and a striking originality and beauty in some of the thoughts brought out here. The work consists of ninety-five chapters, expository and devotional in character, the particular lesson in each case being made vocal in prayer. Our regret is that with so much that is admirable in exposition, there is also so much that is questionable incorporated. Too often the interpretation is ingenious rather than sound. The work is distinguished by freshness and occasional brilliancy of thought, but as an exposition it is encumbered with serious defects, and, we reluctantly add, mistaken interpretations.

LANDMARKS OF NEW TESTAMENT MORALITY. By Rev. George Matheson, M.A., D.D. 6s. James Nisbet & Co. This work deserves a more extended notice than our space will allow. While much impressed by the ability of the writer we take serious exception to his treatment of his theme. We are at issue with Dr. Matheson in his chapter on the motives of Christian morality, the first stage of which he says was "Epicurean," the second "Stoic." Leaving other matters untouched, what are we to think of the theologian who is of opinion that when Paul treats of the flesh and the spirit he is speaking simply of "two kinds of love—self-love and universal love"? The conception is purely rationalistic, and is virtually extrusive of the Holy Ghost, which in Christian experience is the true antithesis of the flesh.

LIFE'S PROBLEMS HERE AND HEREAFTER, by Geo. T. Flanders. 4s. 6d. R. D. Dickinson. We are by no means disposed to chime in with the favourable criticism which has been passed upon this book. That it is thoughtful and entertaining, and that some of its chapters are decidedly helpful, we do not deny, but we are doubtful whether it will fulfil the author's purpose of meeting "the intellectual as well as the heart wants" of his readers. It is calculated to unsettle the stable, rather than to establish the doubting. It describes the author's return to faith after a painful experience of doubt and darkness. The method by which his return was effected may be judged from his own words, "Scripture, to be worth anything, must have the unhesitating verdict of reason in verification," p. 144. "Reason and revelation, when their final verdict is made up, have always been found to be in perfect agreement. It is well for revelation that they are not in conflict," p. 173. Indeed, the author confesses in the last chapter that he has subjected the problems dealt with to "a purely rational treatment." This new faith is reached, therefore, not by revelation, but by reason; and texts of Scripture are cited only to confirm the conclusions of reason. Those of us who are accustomed to find fullest rest for mind and heart in God's revelation of Himself in Christ are not likely to forsake the voice that speaks "with authority" for the uncertain conclusions upon which this author depends. Nor can we help being surprised that an author who cannot accept the authority of the Bible should so readily trust the apparitions which he says entirely removed his doubts as to the soul's immortality. This seems to us like forsaking the true light for a doubtful will-o'-the-wisp. We are equally dissatisfied with the faith to which his struggle leads him. It is both less and more than that which he formerly held. It is less, inasmuch as "theological lumber" and "teasing, unrestful dogma" are abandoned; it is more, inasmuch as it includes several speculations of very doubtful character. Sin, Atonement, Justification, the New Birth, as taught in the Bible, have no place in his new creed; while God, as the universal Father, and, consequently, universal salvation, are, of course, prominent. We think we have found a more honourable use for our reason than that to which this book invites us.

The Christmas issue of The Graphic as usual is exceedingly attractive from the artistic standpoint, and constitutes a wonderful shilling's worth.

STORIES AND PICTURES OF ANIMAL LIFE. By James Weston. 1s. Partridge. A capital book for the little ones—admirably illustrated, and well written.

THE DAILY TREASURY OF PRACTICAL THOUGHTS. By Rev. W. J. Spriggs-Smith. 1s. The "Church Monthly" Office. The "thoughts" are original and selected, and varied in quality as well as in subject.

GOD CALLS THE CHILDREN. By Mrs. W. E. Legg. 1d. J. E. Hawkins. An excellent tract, containing a Gospel appeal to children. Mrs. Legg is a friend of the Children's Special Service Mission, and has a kindly anxiety for the little ones.

THE NORTHERN ADVANCE is the title of a new politico-religious weekly newspaper, published at Manchester, and circulating in the Northern and Midland counties. We sincerely trust that it will worthily perform the functions of its important mission.

PENNY DINNERS AT HOME. By E. Seeley. 1d. Jarrold & Sons. A pamphlet that is calculated to be of great service in many a home, as it records hard "facts" as to the advantage to which a hard-earned penny may be spent, when reason rules the transaction.

VALLEYS AND VILLAGES OF THE BIBLE. By Josiah Viney. 1s. E. Stock. Scripture scenes are here illustrated by a description of sacred localities. A spiritual tone runs through the entire book, which is calculated to prove specially useful to youthful readers of the Bible.

EVANESCENT PHILOSOPHIES AND CHRISTIAN CERTAINTY. 1s. per dozen. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. This is a remarkably good tract. A wide field is covered in terse language, and with a forceful conclusion. Let it be widely and prayefully circulated, and much fruit may be confidently expected.

FAIRIES AND FIENDS is the title of a little penny book, by Annie Beale, descriptive of the work of the Theatrical Mission among pantomime and other children. Copies may be purchased at the office of the Mission, Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London, W.C.

TRUST JESUS, well-known card (Partridge & Co. 6d. per 100), is now printed on very large cards, 12 in. by 10 in., as one of the "Floral Series," published by Messrs. Drummond & Co., of Stirling. 2d. This would be a suitable Christmas or New Year's gift, to remind us silently from the wall of the one thing that we have ever to do.

BRIGHT SABBATHS. 1s. Partridge. A few words to mothers are here spoken by "One of Themselves." They are words of sound sense, and we trust many will give heed to them, and make Sunday a day of real joy and profit to the little ones. To show how this may best be done is the object of the book, which is now in its third edition.

From Mr. R. J. Masters, 327, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W., comes a packet of four exquisite chromo-lithographed cards, entitled "Choice Words" (2s.). They would grace the wall of any drawing-room. Mr. Masters has also issued three very chastely designed brochures for the Christmas and New Year seasons. They are uniform in size and style, the price being 3d. each.

The Young Churchman's Searching and Finding Almanac. We recommend this neat almanac to clergy and Sunday-school superintendents as well as to parents. An introductory letter by Rev. H. C. G. Moule adds to its interest. It can be procured of M.A.E.W., River Hill, Bramford, Ipswich. 1½d. single copies by post; 3d. extra per dozen; 1s. extra per 100. Profits go to work among factory girls in Ipswich.

Faith Lacking. By Frank H. White. 1d. Partridge. This is "a message for the New Year," and a grandly forcible one too. Defined and expounded from the Holy Scriptures, faith is beautifully illustrated from the chief allegories of Bunyan.

The True Position of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper among the other Means of Grace. By Rev. C. H. Waller. Bemrose. The author contends that the Lord's Supper is a means of grace especially devised to remind the faithful of the covenant into which they were baptized, and that far from being a participation in the risen life of the Lord, it is set forth in Holy Scripture as a showing forth of the death of Jesus. On several points, chiefly involving ecclesiastical positions, we are unable to follow Mr. Waller.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Dr. Whittemore's two annuals, The Sunshine and The Little Star, are very prettily got up and display the usual attractive qualities of reading matter.

Hand and Heart for 1888 will cheer many a home with its bright family, social, and temperance stories and sketches. (2s. "Home Words" Office.)

The first year's numbers of "A1" make a very handsome and useful volume. It would be an immense favourite in village and Sunday-school libraries.

The Fireside for 1888 is a grand pictorial volume, with contents for old and young alike, calculated to prove very interesting and instructive in the family circle. "Some Eminent Scotchmen" is the title of a capital series of sketches. (7s. 6d. "Home Words" Office.)

Early Days for 1888. 1s. 6d. T. Woolmer. The year's issues of this attractive serial make a very acceptable volume.

Our Boys and Girls, 1888. This annual volume will delight many a child. The pictures are bright, and the reading pleasant and profitable. 1s. Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Union.

The Mother's Friend. Mrs. Reaney edits this magazine, which is excellent in tone as well as high in purpose. The yearly volume (1s. 6d.) would make a capital present to many young women as well as experienced matrons. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

TORONTO has sent forty-three missionaries to foreign fields during the past ten months.

PARIS EXHIBITION.—The Paris Religious Tract Society offers three prizes—one of 150 francs, one of 100, and the third of 50 francs, for the best tracts suitable for distribution at the coming Paris Exhibition.

THE FRENCH SUNDAY-SCHOOL COMMITTEE have decided, after much deliberation, to give up using the International Lessons for 1889. It was agreed to have a series of lessons from the Old and New Testaments, to run simultaneously for four years.

DR. BHANDARKAR, OF POONA, has been telling his co-religionists that India's Sacred Book does not support child-marriage or forbid the re-marriage of widows. When Dr. Bhandarkar speaks on Sanskrit literature, other authorities are wisely silent.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS CLUB, NEW YORK, lately held its first autumn meeting, which was made especially interesting by an address of Dr. J. M. Buckley on "Religious Journalism." He made a comparison between English and American religious newspapers, that was decidedly favourable to the American papers.

CHILDREN IN PARIS.—The Children's three weeks in the Country Society contemplates adding two branches to its work—a family branch and a seaside branch. Last year 273 children and one whole family enjoyed the much-prized country air for three weeks each, and all increased in weight and strength.—Le Christianisme.

CENTRAL AFRICA.—The secretary of the Universities' Mission states that none of the mainland stations have been abandoned. The ladies have been withdrawn to the island of Zanzibar for the present, but in other respects the work goes on as usual. This explanation is made in view of a somewhat general impression that the political disturbances on the east coast have obliged the Mission to suspend its work on the mainland.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—During the last six months most of the cities in New York, having a population of 15,000 or more, have organised branches of the Evangelical Alliance. A call has been issued for a convention at Syracuse, Nov. 20 to 22, to study the methods and needs of the new movement inaugurated at the great Washington Conference last December, and to consider the formation of a permanent State organisation.

CEYLON.—We hear (says The Ceylon Observer) that there is a probability of another Special Anglican Evangelical Mission being sent to Ceylon, and worthy successors to Rev. Mr. Grubb and Col. Oldham are said to be ready to take up the work. The missioners so far mentioned (although nothing is decided yet) are Rev. W. Haslam (whose praise is in all the churches) and Rev. Hubert Brooke. Ceylon is indeed being highly favoured in the present day, and there is much call to act up to special and abounding privileges.

MISSIONS IN SPAIN.—The negotiations between the U.P. Church of Scotland and the Mission Directors of the Irish General Assembly for the taking over by the latter of the U.P. Church's Mission in Spain have not been successful. The Irish Presbyterian Church were prepared to take over the ministers and stations in Spain, which the United Presbyterians are abandoning, upon receiving a certain proportion of the expense of maintaining the work. The U.P. Foreign Mission Committee would only promise an inadequate sum for three years, and thus the Mission in Spain is hampered, and Rev. William Moore's College at Puerto Santa Maria (in connection with the Irish Presbyterian Church) will suffer seriously. If some generous friends do not come forward to help Mr. Moore and the others engaged in this important field, there may be a sad collapse.—Presbyterian Messenger.

O LORD, HOW LONG?

AN ADVENT HYMN.

O Lord, how long? Our weary feet
Are failing on this world's rough way,
While vainly strive our eyes to greet
Some glimmerings of approaching day;
Our hearts grown sick with hope deferred,
Will scarce allow a pilgrim song,
Faith strives to rest upon thy word,
But fainting hearts ask, "Lord, how long?"

O Lord, how long? The haughty foe
Oft makes us feel his cruel hate;
Mocking to see us brought so low,
He asks us where our Lord doth wait?
Oh, think of thine, so faint, so few,
Amid the hosts that round them throng.
Thy word is sure—thy promise true;
But fainting hearts ask, "Lord, how long?"

O Lord, how long? Dost Thou forget
The blood of those who died for truth?
It cries to Thee; and wilt Thou let Proud Babylon renew her youth?
Some deemed her arm was weak with age,
But, oh, how mighty still for wrong!
Kings cower before her hellish rage,
While fainting hearts ask, "Lord, how long?"

O Lord, how long? Not earth alone
Would know thy own appointed hour;
But heaven, with earth, impatient grown,
Waits the revealing of thy power.
On earth, Thy weary people sigh,
And, mingling with the angel song,
From 'neath the altar comes the cry
Of martyred saints, "O Lord, how long?"

John E. Linnell,
Pavenham Vicarage, Bedford.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE has commenced his winter's campaign in the provinces. The audiences have been large and enthusiastic. At Colchester, under the auspices of a united committee, he inaugurated a mission in the Drill Hall on Monday week. Mr. Noble is about to visit Plymouth, Exeter, Torquay, and other important centres.

MARITIME DISTRESS.—At a recent meeting of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society reports of relief of the immediate necessities, and forwarding to their homes, of 521 shipwrecked seamen were recorded as received from the Society's outport stations. These men were saved from vessels wrecked on the coast, or foundered at sea, for the most part, during the recent November gales. In addition, the Society has given prompt aid in numerous cases to the distressed dependants of the many mariners unfortunately lost during the same disastrous weather.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.—Next week special meetings for prayer on behalf of missions are to be held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. On Lord's Day next Jewish missions will be the subject; Monday will be given to the claims of the Church Missionary Society; Tuesday to the London Missionary Society; Wednesday to the Baptist Society; Thursday to the Wesleyan Society; Friday to Presbyterian missions; Saturday to the Moravian and the China Inland Missions, and Sunday week to Home missions. Monday to Friday the meetings will be at noon and 7.30 p.m.; Saturday, noon and 4 p.m.; Sundays, 3.30, 7, and 8.30.

A SPHERE FOR WORKERS.—At the noonday prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Monday last, Miss Macpherson spoke of testimony among the women of the East-end of London. She said that while midnight meetings are held among the unhappy class of women, nothing is done to influence the dissolute men. The latter are about in the streets during the time that endeavours are made for the good of the women, and their conduct plainly shows their wicked bent. Miss Macpherson called upon Christian gentlemen to exert themselves for the good of outcast men, and so to help forward the important work among women.

BIBLE TRANSLATION.—Archdeacon Farler, of the Universities Mission to Central Africa, has translated the Gospel of Matthew into Bondei, a language of the people to the north of Zanzibar, and the south of Mombasa. Another version of the Gospels, and the Acts has been recently made for the Moskito Indians of South America.

WORKING LADS OF LONDON.

ON Monday evening the Lord Mayor attended a meeting in connection with the twelfth anniversary of the Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel, E. The Institution has more than once had similar official recognition, but never has the chair been occupied by a warmer friend of the cause than on this occasion. Hearing the encouraging report read by Mr. Henry Hill, the founder and hon. sec., his lordship was deeply impressed with the value of the Institute and the evident solidity of its work. The members (over 600 in number) contribute substantially towards the maintenance, and it is hoped that when the debt on the building (£5300) is cleared off, the Institute will be nearly self-supporting.

In the course of a vigorous address, the Lord Mayor remarked that, being convinced that the West-end can take care of itself, he will endeavour to help forward all beneficial movements in the East-end. Having spoken in terms of hearty appreciation of the work of the friends of the Institute, specially commending the many educational agencies, he expressed pleasure at the prominence given to the principles of temperance. In view of the fearful results of indulgence in strong drink, he rejoiced in the inculcation of teetotal habits and respect for the men who advocate temperance principles throughout the country.

His Lordship's earnest temperance observations were highly appreciated. In a few words to the lads, he said: "Be steady, be honest, be industrious, and be thorough; whatever you do, endeavour to do it so well that nobody can possibly do it better. And begin to act on this advice at the very outset of your business life: then you will surely succeed." In some words of explanation his Lordship said that he was simply handing on to others the advice he himself received many years ago from his own father—advice which had had more influence than anything else upon him in bringing him to the position of honour he now occupies.

Brief and earnest addresses were also delivered by Sheriff Gray, Mr. G. S. Roberts, and Rev. J. B. Heard. The prizes awarded for progress at the evening classes were distributed.

REDRUTH Y.W.C.A. was recently opened. The Association now numbers about fifty members.

MISSION WORK IN HOLLOWAY.—The twenty-second anniversary of the Holloway Evangelistic and Open-air Mission was held on Tuesday, last week. Mr. R. C. Morgan, in presiding at the public meeting, said he was more and more impressed with the great need of Gospel work carried on with Pentecostal power—the power which he believed ought to have been retained by the people of God in all ages. The report stated that in addition to the many Gospel services, 1500 free meals were given to the poor. During the winter the Gospel was also preached. Many visits had been made to the common lodging-houses in the neighbourhood, and words of comfort carried to the sick and dying. The balance-sheet showed a deficiency of £25. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. W. Holmes, J. Townley, F. Herwood, and H. Putterill.

MILDMAY DEACONESSES.—The work undertaken by the large band of deaconesses who daily sally forth from the Home at Mildmay is so quietly done that few are aware of its magnitude or worth. Here are made up thousands of those small bunches of flowers distributed throughout our hospitals by the Flower Mission; here are sewing-classes, mothers' meetings, fathers' meetings, &c. Then there are a hundred nursing sisters, under a lady superintendent, who nurse the Doncaster Infirmary, a hospital at Bethnal-green, a Mildmay Cottage Hospital, hospitals at Jaffa and Malta, an infirmary at Newington-green, convalescent homes at Barnet and Brighton, and such private nursing as they can venture to accept. The hospital at Bethnal-green is an excellent little institution, which ministers to about five hundred patients yearly. There is also a dispensary attached to it, which some thousands of patients visit in the course of twelve months.—The Hospital.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

THE special services at the Metropolitan Tabernacle have been most successful. There is a spirit of earnestness on the part of the members of the church—a large number taking an active part as workers. Scarcely a house in the neighbourhood has been left unvisited, the result being congregations consisting very largely of non-church-goers. The evangelists are at their best, "the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." On Sunday week, in spite of the fog, Mr. Smith had the Tabernacle well-nigh filled for a children's afternoon service. The evening congregation, when Mr. Fullerton preached, was as crowded as when Mr. Spurgeon is the preacher.

The services are of a bright character, the singing being led by Mr. Smith and a choir of 200 boys and girls from the Stockwell Orphanage. As models of evangelistic addresses, Mr. Fullerton's sermons are admirable. While keeping to the simple Gospel, his points are illustrated and enforced by anecdotes and similes not likely to be forgotten. It has been a pleasing feature of the meetings that many from Upton Chapel and Christ Church, where services were previously held, have followed the evangelists, Christian workers rendering valuable help, and inquirers receiving the blessing sought.

At the close of the service each evening a young men's meeting was held in the Lecture Hall and largely attended. On Wednesday evening the leader of the meeting invited all who had consciously given themselves to Christ to stand out and link hands. There was a prompt response, and a circle was formed round those who were still anxious. The scene was most impressive as verses of testimony were sung, such as, "I came to Jesus as I was, Weary and worn and sad," &c., prayer offered, and words of counsel and encouragement given. Then the circle was broken and the Christian workers told off to speak with inquirers.

On Friday evening Mr. Smith told his life story, and a wonderful story it is. The narrative of facts was so interesting that the great audience sat out the delivery, which occupied the best part of two hours. The lessons suggested were so important and so numerous that, had it been called an evangelical address, the title would have been fully justified.

One interesting feature of the missions by these brethren is the song service on Saturday, when the working classes have a leisure evening. A series of seven services, incorporated with their book, and also published separately, are made to serve the purpose of the evangelists. On Saturday evening the Metropolitan Tabernacle was crowded, a most unusual event in the history of the building. The service, entitled, "Heaven our Home," was well rendered by the orphan choir, strengthened by a contingent of the Southwark Coral Society. Alternating with song and solo, Mr. Fullerton's addresses illustrated and enforced the subject in a masterly way. This service will prove one of the brightest memories in a very memorable mission.

CLOSING SERVICES.

On Lord's Day, Mr. Fullerton delivered in the morning a sermon of great freshness and power. At three o'clock there was a meeting for men only, upwards of 2000 being present. Many, it was evident, were strangers to the building, having doubtless seen the notices on the local tramcars, and in the Sunday papers which are read by working men. This fact is worth mentioning as a suggestion to others. The evangelist's appeals to the conscience seemed irresistible. Strong men wept, and many rose in their places to testify their decision for Christ. The inquiry-room was crowded and became a veritable Bochim.

Had the Tabernacle been double its size it would have been filled in the evening. When the gates were closed, a band of workers were posted outside to direct the people into the College buildings for overflow meetings. Here Mr. Charlesworth and Mr. Chamberlain delivered addresses, and the College students rendered good service amongst the inquirers. For some time the streets were astir with those who had to turn back disappointed. Mr. Fullerton's closing address was based on the text, "Choose life," and was one of tender pathos. In response to an appeal, large numbers rose to declare they had found the Saviour during the mission, and others to express their resolve to give themselves to the Lord. These were all invited to meet the evangelists in the Lecture Hall, and to a late hour they were kept busy in dealing with inquirers. Regrets were expressed on all hands that the mission was closing, and all will look forward with joy to the return of the evangelists.

Throughout the remainder of their London campaign they will be followed by the earnest prayers of thousands, as they will be, we are sure, by the prayers of our readers. Mr. Spurgeon made himself personally responsible for the expenses of the mission at the Tabernacle, but his friends will surely not allow him to have a monopoly of such a privilege. C.

OBITUARY.

MRS. DORA M. GLADWIN.

WE regret extremely to learn from The Bombay Guardian of the death of this earnest worker in that city in the cause of social purity. A supposed passing ailment became aggravated, and brought Mrs. Gladwin to such a condition of weakness that she was not able to rally. She is best known to our readers in connection with the Homes of Hope, which, in conjunction with her husband, she carried on successfully.

REV. W. C. VAN METER.

This well-known worker in Rome, whose death we recorded last week, was ill only about two weeks before his death. It was a sudden break-up of the constitution, and derangement of the vital organs, accompanied by intense pain. Shortly before death terminated his sufferings, he became quiet, and passed away peacefully. He was conscious, full of faith and trust, and many times gave assurance that in passing through the Valley of the Shadow of Death the Lord was with him. The greatest kindness was shown him by Christian friends in Rome; his wife, too, was with him, and nursed him throughout his sickness. He was buried in the beautiful little Protestant cemetery; the restless, energetic, and devoted worker rests in the city he loved, among the people he laboured for, whose religious liberty and welfare he had ever in view.

CAPTAIN GEORGE BAYLY

entered into rest November 13, 1888, aged 81 years. By many Captain Bayly was well known and honoured for his work's sake. By others his name will be recognised as the husband of the author of "Ragged Homes, and how to mend them." He not only entirely sympathised with Mrs. Bayly in all her undertakings; but from the time of the formation of the Rescue Society, when temperance work led to the cry for a "public-house without the drink," the whole of his leisure was devoted to the work connected with the Workmen's Hall, Kensington Potteries, opened in April, 1861. Nothing went on there without "the Capting." It caused him the deepest regret when circumstances compelled him to leave the neighbourhood, and though the different branches of the work went on, the old centre was no more. Many sorrows followed, but the shadows of illness and bereavement only showed up the brightness of his unfailing trust in God, and each privation and infirmity of old age was accepted with a smile, as one more token that the time had come for him to "lay aside his earthly garments one by one, and dress himself for heaven." The warm reception given to his work, "Sea Life Sixty Years Ago" (Kegan Paul & Co.), written when he was 78, was a great pleasure and interest to him. He continued able to attend to his duties as an Elder Brother of the Trinity House until within ten days of his gentle release, which took place from bronchitis, after only one week's illness. Mrs. Bayly is greatly sustained; he is "gone but a minute" from her.

BRITISH NEEDLEWOMEN'S SELF-HELP ASSOCIATION.—The first annual meeting of the Newcastle-on-Tyne branch of this Association was held recently at the rooms of the Y.W.C.A. The object is to afford young women thorough instruction in the various branches of needlework, thus enabling them to earn a respectable living. During last year a number of girls were trained so as to take situations, while others who received instruction are now carrying on the dressmaking business at their own homes. Moreover, work has been got for many who needed it, and numerous orders have been received and executed by the Association for the benefit of the members. Madam Lofvall, of London, who organised the Association, continues to superintend it at 15, Ridley-place, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS and ASTHMA.—Case of Miss A. LILLEY, near DARTFORD.

This patient, residing at St. Mary's, Stone, applied to me in May last. On visiting Coombe Lodge, her chest was carefully examined, and the diagnosis of her case was as above. She had been attended by two doctors all the winter without much benefit.

Hooping cough in childhood had left a permanent weakness of the lungs. A constant bronchial cough had troubled her all the winter, now worse, with thick and yellow expectoration, and severe spasmodic breathing. The appetite had failed. She had lost much strength, and flesh also.

In June she was much better. The cough had greatly abated, the expectoration was less, the pain and breathing improved. For dyspepsia and flatulence some powders of Bismuth and Charcoal were ordered.

Writing me at the latter end of August, she says:—"I am happy to say I have been feeling better lately than for four years past, though I have had five different doctors, and been a patient at the Consumptive hospital at Brompton. You are welcome to make any use of my case."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Personalia.

Mrs. Beecher's Stowe's recovery has astonished her physicians.

Mr. John Boyd, who succeeds Sir Thomas Clark as Lord Provost of Edinburgh, is an elder of Broughton-place U.P. Church.

Professor Henry Drummond resumed his meetings for the Edinburgh students on Sunday week. Each year witnesses an increase of interest.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes has been sketched by The Figaro:—" He has originality and courage; and he is satisfied with an income which many City clerks would turn up their noses at. His doctrines may not always command approval, and his methods may not please all tastes, but never since the days of Morley Punshon has any Wesleyan minister been so popular in the metropolis. Mr. Hughes has been styled a brilliant beggar. He has neglected no effort to keep up the reputation."

Mr. A. B. Owen, formerly of the Peterborough, Ont., branch, but now manager of the Toronto branch of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, has (says the Peterborough Examiner) been visiting the boys placed in the townships of Cavan and Emily. Out of about thirty-five boys in these townships sent out from the Home, Mr. Owen reports that only one has not given entire satisfaction. Mr. Owen is very popular with the boys; he uses every kindness and effort to conduce to their welfare and comfort. He will spend the fall and winter visiting boys placed throughout the Dominion.

Miss Guinness is writing delightful letters from her post in China to her friends at home. Our readers should peruse those that appear in Regions Beyond for November. In one letter she says:—" How the people run from every quarter, and with what eager attention they listen! Oh, wonderful opportunities! How is it that there are not hundred of voices to 'tell it out among the nations that his name is Love'; hundreds instead of so few? Such wide openings are here, such ready hearts, waiting to drink in the glad tidings; waiting—waiting, and, lo, there is no man to carry to them the message of life!"

Mr. Edward Clifford, treasurer of the Church Army, who was one of the band of special missioners sent out to India last year by the Church Missionary Society, is about to leave England to join Father Damien in his self-abnegating toil among the lepers on the island of Molokai. Father Damien, who is a Roman Catholic priest, devoted himself to this work some years ago, and he has laboured among the lepers so long that at last the terrible disease has thoroughly laid hold of him. Mr. Clifford is taking out with him some special oil, which he has got for the purpose, in the hope that it may cure Father Damien.

Mr. W. Mackintosh, the British and Foreign Bible Society's agent for North Africa, has for some time been in bad health, but he has so far recovered since his visit to England that he is now returning to his work in Morocco. Exposure to hot sun and air, and sometimes long fasting from causes difficult to prevent, in his summer visit to the Canary Islands, and his tour in the interior of Morocco, had placed even life in jeopardy, and his recovery is matter for much thankfulness to God. The Bible Society Committee have engaged Mr. William Watson, formerly a corporal on active service in Egypt, to join Mr. Mackintosh's staff in Morocco, where his knowledge of Arabic, and his experience in dealing with Mohammedans, are likely to be of much service in extending the circulation of the Scriptures.—The Record.

Canon Basil Wilberforce, writing to The Pall Mall Gazette on oratory, says:—" When the occasion is the advocacy of some great moral, social, or political reform, such as purity, temperance, the abolition of slavery, or the protection of the weak from coercion, I am of opinion that the success of the effort will be in direct proportion to the conviction of the speaker and the reality of his touch with God. My advice would be, have the subject well up in heart and head, be armed with a few incontrovertible figures, familiar with a few apt illustrations, spend the time immediately preceding the meeting, not in the inanities of a conventional dinner party, but in prayerful, mental concentration upon the subject of your address, thus preparing yourself rather than your speech. Have very few, easily readable, notes; lift your subject as soon as possible out of the littleness of detail into the atmosphere of eternal principles, and remember that God makes one of your audience; stop the moment you feel you have no more to say."

Mr. George Clarke hopes to leave behind him in Melbourne a permanent memorial of his Victorian visit in the form of a building for the Y.W.C.A. to cost £15,000.

Mr. Spurgeon's health improved to such an extent in the course of the past few days as to justify him in starting last Monday for his usual winter resort in South France.

Mr. Graham W. Brooke, the pioneer of the Central Soudan Mission, recognising that the Upper Congo route is closed at present, has decided, as his recent letters say, " to lose no time in setting off to find the right one," and has gone from the Congo to the Niger, hoping to reach Central Soudan by the Binué instead of the Mobangi river.

Rev. John McNeill.—We learn that in all probability Mr. McNeill will accept the call from Regent-square. We are informed that he has requested his building committee in Edinburgh not to take any further steps for the present. Many of Mr. McNeill's friends think his peculiar gifts would have greater scope in the Scottish capital than in London, but there is no reason to doubt that his advent to the Metropolis would wake up Presbyterianism mightily.

General Booth, of the Salvation Army, being lately interviewed by a Star reporter, said the Army was quickly becoming the greatest teetotal society in the world. " We not only persuade the drunkard to give up drink, but we supply him with the internal force to sustain him. Some of the noblest of our workers have been notorious drunkards. We are just now pushing the slum work. We have fifty officers in London—some brought up in the lap of luxury—who go into the worst slums they can find, take a room, and dress very simply and plainly, like the people around them. They make friends with the people in the courts, and, by and by, get some saved. As soon as they are saved they migrate, and quit their old associates. This slum work is most successful, but rather costly."

Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll, Editor of The British Weekly, evidently levies tribute on his own experience in an article last week on the Pulpit. As the result of much hearing of sermons of all sorts during the last three years, he says:—" While celebrities are generally worth hearing, of the average of modern preaching he thinks very unfavourably. It would, he thinks, be impossible for the pulpit to sink lower than it has now done. Not over ten per cent. of the sermons he heard from unknown men were worth printing; and at least one half were so disgracefully bad that they ought never to have been preached. There was no style in them—not the faintest attempt at brightness or freshness, no thought above the multiplication tables and other formulæ of theology. Warmth and earnestness were conspicuously absent."

Dr. A. T. Pierson, in a reply to Canon Taylor, which appears in The British Weekly, says:—" The work of Christian missions is far from being a failure. It has developed single characters amid all the surroundings of heathen superstition and pagan darkness and degradation that are alone worth all the time, money, and still more precious life-blood expended in the work. San Quala, in Burmah, Asaad Shidrak, in Syria, Deacon Guergis, in Persia, the Christian queens of Hawaii and Madagascar, these are specimens of what missions have done and can do. These results cannot be over-estimated, and they cannot be depreciated. Even Charles Darwin confessed that the work of the missionary in Tahiti, New Zealand, and Tierra del Fuego is 'the lesson of the enchanter's wand.' And where a scientist and materialist like Darwin gives such a testimony, it is astounding that any professed believer and Christian minister can proclaim Christian missions a failure."

Dr. John Hall, of New York, is described by "Annie Swan" in The Christian Leader as she heard him at a conference in Montreal:—" He has a tall, portly presence, a ruddy clean-shaven face, a mobile mouth, and an eye which can express both tenderness and strength. He speaks in a direct, unaffected, but very effective way. There is no striving after effect, but it is there, and sinks into one's being. He deplores the decay of family religion, and believes that a rigid discipline in youth is good. His description of how the Sabbath was kept in the Scottish home of his boyhood was a beautiful and faithful word-picture. Now that he is a father and a grandfather, he blesses God for that rigid observance of the Sabbath. He believes the home to be the cradle of the Church and the nation; and Christian people should see to it that Sabbath desecration does not begin at home."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

MR. E. VENN, of Chard, has been labouring at Stroud, Gloucestershire, with great acceptance and blessing. Many prayers follow him to Ilfracombe.

MR. J. W. MOODIE has conducted a fortnight's meetings in the Town Hall, Duns. Many believers were stirred up, and not a few of the undecided passed into the anxious room to be spoken to.

TROWBRIDGE, WILTS.—Rev. R. Balgarnie concluded on Friday a seven-days' mission at the Tabernacle (Rev. Thomas Mann, pastor). It was a time of reviving to Christians, and many professed acceptance of Christ.

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE is conducting Gospel meetings at Cumberland-street United Presbyterian Church, Glasgow, in connection with the Wynd Church. Most faithfully and earnestly has the Gospel message been delivered, and not a few have professed to receive spiritual blessing.

A REMARKABLE WORK OF GRACE is at present going on amongst the boys gathered into Dr. Barnardo's Homes. On Sunday last considerably over a hundred boys were asking " What must I do to be saved?" Many of them wept bitterly on account of the burden of sin. Will your readers join us in praise for the showers of blessing received, and prayer that every one of Dr. Barnardo's foster family (now numbering nearly 3000) may be won for Christ. Prayer is also asked for all the workers.

JAMES B. WOOKEY.

MR. CHARLES INGLIS has been conducting a most successful mission in connection with the Y.M.C.A. at Hastings. Much prayer was made for the services, and the Lord has abundantly answered. The afternoon Bible lectures will long be remembered as seasons of deep spiritual refreshing, and profit by many who flocked to them from all denominations in the town. The Gospel meetings were marked by great power and solemnity, in the after-meetings backsliders have been restored and many weary ones have found the Lord Jesus as their Saviour.

TOLLINGTON HALL GOSPEL MISSION.—The efforts of earnest workers have been greatly blessed at Tollington Hall. During the past twelve months over a hundred persons have professed conversion. A fourteen-days' mission is to be commenced on Sunday next. The secretary is Mr. J. R. Bullock, 2, Gloucester-road, Holloway, N.

THE SAILORS' WELCOME HOME, CARDIFF, is an institution which is constantly affording evidence of its great utility. Men of many nations seek its shelter, and the Gospel is presented to them by loving workers. Recently a parcel of books and tracts was received from the Queen of Sweden. The superintendent of the Home is Mr. Lars Olsen, 179, Bute-road, Cardiff.

THE EAST-END OF LONDON.—On Friday last at the noon-day prayer-meeting, at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., a deputation of the Christian Instruction Society delivered addresses, and the needs of the East-end were remembered before God in prayer. It was stated that prayer-meetings are being established to petition for blessing on Christian work in that part of London.

FLORENCE MEDICAL MISSION.—The report for the eighth year speaks of progress. There were more patients during the twelve months than for two years previously, and the benefits of the dispensary are evidently appreciated. During last winter the soup kitchen was carried on, but through lack of funds fewer tickets were issued than in other years. The attendance at the Sunday-school has been good, and the Viareggio Convalescent Home has received a greater number of inmates than ever before, seventy-four altogether.

BELFAST Y.W.C.A.—The anniversary of this institution has just been celebrated. At a public meeting, presided over by Mrs. Richardson, of Moyallon, a very cheering account was rendered of the work of the year. The Sunday afternoon and Tuesday evening meetings have been much owned of God, there being reason to believe that conversions have taken place at every such meeting since May last. Considerable interest was evinced in the endeavours of the missionary band, whereby a substantial sum was contributed during last year towards testimony for Christ abroad. It was stated that two members of the Association intend shortly to proceed to India as missionaries.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, December 2.

ISRAEL UNDER JUDGES.

JUDGES ii. 11—23; GOLDEN TEXT, HEB. iii. 12.

THE BOOK OF JUDGES.—Its author, according to Jewish tradition was Samuel. Its plan is peculiar, it "does not follow the order of time, but groups its incidents to show the course of the history of Jehovah's redemption of his people in spite of their follies." "The whole period under the Judges may easily be mistaken for an unbroken series of idolatries and crimes, if we do not observe that the lapses that incurred punishment, and the Divine deliverances which attended repentance, are related so fully as to occupy almost the whole narrative; while periods when the people followed God, and the land enjoyed peace, are passed over in a single verse" (Quoted by Kitto). We may learn from the Book of Ruth the simple, earnest piety prevalent during the purer periods, which, according to one writer, cover fully three-fourths of the whole time of the Judges.

ISRAEL'S GOVERNMENT was a theocracy, the Lord Himself being their King, abiding among them in the Tabernacle. Between Him and the people, as mediator and interpreter, stood the high priest; while the heads of the tribes, of the families (the clans), and of the houses were the instruments of local government. In case of dispute, the ultimate appeal was to the high priest, whose duty it was to inquire of the Lord, whose prime minister he was.

ISRAEL'S RELIGION centred in Shiloh, where rested the ark, the tabernacle, and the altar for daily sacrifice, and whither the tribes came up for the three great feasts.

ISRAEL'S BACKSLIDING: ITS BEGINNINGS.—"There arose another generation after them, which knew not the Lord, nor yet the works which He had done for Israel" (ver. 10). This is an exceedingly important fact. All this backsliding, with its fearful punishments, began with neglecting to teach the children, so that they grew up ignorant and indifferent, an easy prey. Apply to those careless about sacred things, who think it a little thing to be ignorant of God, his truth, and ways. Here Israel's trouble began, as ours must too, if we also remain ignorant.

DID EVIL IN THE SIGHT OF THE LORD.—"This is the regular phrase for falling into idolatry through Judges and through all the historical books. It occurs seven times in Judges, as descriptive of the seven apostasies of Israel which drew down upon them the seven servitudes" (Sp. Com.). "Evil in the sight of the Lord." Is not all evil done before his face? So we cannot sin alone and in secret! All naked and open! BAALIM, plural of Baal, and refers to the numerous images of Baal set up. Baal=owner, lord, master. Hence, Lord God. Baal was the highest male god, just as Astoreth, or Astarte, was the highest goddess. Baal's symbol was the sun, or the planet Jupiter; Astarte's was the moon, or the planet Venus.

What were the attractions to idolatry? They must have been very real to the Israelites. (1) The images that represented Baal were visible and tangible, and the ceremonies of his worship full of appeals to the senses. God was invisible, except to faith, and his worship simple and spiritual. The Baals of our day are money, and all that it buys—pleasure, fame, self-pleasing, power, &c. These things are very real, making constant and powerful appeals to the senses and natural desires. Meanwhile God is known and felt only by the men of faith who trust and obey Him. (2) Idolatry was novel and fashionable. So a life of carelessness of God often attracts by its air of freedom and novelty. Then it is almost always fashionable to be worldly. (3) The sports and revels connected with idolatry made it very attractive. Licentiousness was taught as an act of worship; every passion was provided for; and this was a great temptation to Israel, whose God was so pure, abhorring every sin. Those who hankered after forbidden sin were pleased with a worship that allowed full licence, called for no confession, and even sanctioned what God denounced. So to many now the life of indolatrous worship of self and the world attracts by its promise of freedom to sin.

THEY FORSOOK THE LORD GOD, &c. (ver. 12).—At first through ignorance and indifference (ver. 10), but the evil grew. "Decay of morals inevitably follows decay of faith. A curious proof of this is embedded in almost every language, in those words whose primary signification implies unbelief, and whose secondary meaning is expressive of practical wickedness—e.g., miscreant, first misbeliever, then a vile wretch; the word unprincipled first had reference to speculative religious opinions, then passed over into its most common signification of profligate and vicious" (Dr. Steele). Observe how the phrase, "they forsook the Lord," is repeated, as though to emphasise both their ingratitude and faithlessness, and his grief and jealousy. THE ANGER OF THE LORD WAS HOT.—Specially hot, because they were specially loved by Him. The more God loves us, the more angry do our sins make Him. HE DELIVERED THEM...HE SOLD THEM.—No doubt there were many second causes—e.g., death of brave leaders, dying out of the old spirit of freedom and courage, lack of skill, indifferent arms, jealousies and divisions, and sheer misfortune. While they were impenitent, they would regard these second causes; but penitence taught them that God still reigned, was punishing them through these second causes, and that his hand was against them. AS THE LORD HAD SWORN, &c.—"God is as true to his threats as to his promises." CEASED NOT FROM THEIR OWN DOINGS, NOR FROM THEIR STUBBORN WAY.—Many think it a fine thing to have their own way, and to persist in doing so. This is seen here as desperate sin, wilfulness—the most dangerous form of sin. God even can do nothing with a wilful sinner but punish him, unless He let him alone, the worst fate of all!

LESSONS.

(1) The main ideal of the entire lesson is, Behold how evil and bitter a thing it is to depart from the living God.

(2) The danger of evil communications and examples.

> Vice is a monster of such hideous mien,
> That to be hated needs but to be seen;
> But seen too oft, familiar with its face,
> We first endure, then pity, then embrace.
>
> Pope.

(3) The fearful consequences of forgetting and breaking our vows and covenants with God. He is a God of truth, i.e., faithfulness.

(4) God's great patience—the pains He takes to correct his people. How eager for their holiness!

(5) His awful hatred of sin.

(6) His wonderful readiness to restore and bless the penitent.

THE "JOHN BOST" ASYLUMS at Laforce, Dordogne, France, are excellent institutions. When the report, just issued, was drawn up, the inmates numbered 480, distributed among the different homes, which are for imbeciles, epileptics, blind people, and incurables of various classes. Every endeavour is made to render life as happy and useful as it is possible in the asylums, and remarkable success continues to attend the efforts put forth. Among the friends who have recently been lost by death is Madame Bost, widow of the founder. Romanists have looked on with admiration at the excellence of these Protestant institutions, and have made them the model of homes for members of their own community. All communications respecting the Asylums should be addressed to Pastor Ernest Rayroux, director.

MOROCCO AND CHRISTIAN POWERS.—The ire of the Sultan of Morocco has been raised at the large number of Moors who have by some means or another secured the protection of foreign powers. Without such protection, well-to-do natives have long been liable to momentary imprisonment, with the view of a ransom being extorted from them; now it has become the rule for the protection of Christian powers to be held in fanatical contempt. Recently a Moor, who made an arrangement with a British Jewish subject, which be thought entitled him to protection, was beaten unmercifully by order of the Governor of the district, and not only was his property all taken away from him, but a pack-saddle having been put on his back and a bitted bridle in his mouth, he was made to walk on all fours through the town, and proclaim himself the beast of burden of the Christians. He is still working as a mortar-man in prison. The Times correspondent at Tangier declares this to be one among a thousand similar outrages.

Seacombe, Cheshire.—Miss Owen, late of Egremont, has removed to 17, Albemarle-road, Seacombe, Cheshire. The work formerly carried on at Egremont has been discontinued, that full attention may be devoted to the Cottage Mission work in Demesne-street, Seacombe, in the midst of the poor and degraded, many of whom have been reclaimed from drunkenness and sin.

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, December 2.

THE WITNESS OF THE HOLY GHOST.—Ps. xcv.; HEBREWS iii. 7—19.

THE ninety-fifth Psalm was regarded by the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews as the testimony of the Holy Ghost (iii. 7). Here is one of the many passages in which the New Testament bears witness to the inspiration of the Old (comp. Rom. vii. 25; Acts iii. 18, 21; Mark xii. 36). By comparing the two passages included in our lesson we shall see that they bring out the testimony of the Holy Spirit in two different dispensations, and that there is a remarkable agreement between the testimony of one dispensation and that of the other. We shall notice in our lesson:—

(1) A DIVINE VOICE ("his voice," ver. 7).—This voice is: (a) The voice of God.—God speaks through Jesus (Heb. i. 1, 2). The word of Jesus is the word of God (Luke viii. 11). Of every word of Jesus it may be said, "Thus saith the Lord." This is why we are exhorted to give earnest heed to the Gospel message ("therefore," Heb. ii. 1). (b) The voice of a Friend.—Ps. xcv. shows it was the Shepherd's voice of which the Psalmist spoke ("the sheep of his hand," ver. 7). The Eastern shepherd is regarded by the sheep as their friend, and therefore when they hear his voice they follow him. Jesus is the Good Shepherd (John x. 11), and his sheep see the advantage of hearing his voice and of following Him (John x. 27). (c) A loud voice.—God spoke in the wilderness by miracles, which all could see.

(2) A GRACIOUS DISPOSITION ("if ye will hear his voice").—Some are: (a) Not willing to hear the preaching of the Gospel. Comp. "lest they should be converted" (Matt. xiii. 15). (b) Willing to hear the preacher.—Herod heard John gladly (Mark vi. 20), and others heard Jesus gladly (Mark xii. 37), but there is no evidence of a disposition to hear the voice of God. (c) Willing to hear the Divine voice.—This is a gracious disposition. Men sometimes go to the Bible, or to a meeting, with the earnest desire to get a message brought to their hearts by the Holy Ghost. Such a disposition is to be cultivated, and not trifled with. It comes from God, and should therefore be greatly prized.

(3) A TERRIBLE POSSIBILITY ("harden not your hearts").—It is not in the power of man to soften his heart (God alone can do that. See Ezek. xxxvi. 26), but it is in his power to harden it. Our lesson suggests that: (a) We should watch against the beginning of this evil.—"To-day." If the heart is hardened to-day, it will probably be harder still to-morrow. (b) Hardness of heart results from trifling with good dispositions.—It is difficult to persuade those to be Christians who have often been "almost persuaded." (c) Hardness of heart is the result of unbelief (ver. 12).—This was the prime sin of Israel. It was unbelief that kept them in the wilderness (ver. 19). Hardness of heart revealed itself in what was its chief cause—mistrust of God. After all the mighty works the Lord had done, these unbelievers said, "Is the Lord among us or not?" (Exod. xvii. 7). (d) Hardness of heart provokes the anger of the Lord ("My wrath, Heb. iii. 11).—This Epistle shows the compassion of the Lord (chap. v. 2), and his severity in the punishment of wilful sin (xii. 29). (e) Hardness of heart must be carefully guarded against. Believers may get help from each other (Heb. iii. 13), and from the Word (Heb. iii. 10). To know God's way we must know his Word (Acts xviii. 26). (f) Hardness of heart leads to fatal consequences.—Comp. the case of Pharaoh (Exod. viii. 32, x. 1). For the hardened heart there was no rest (Heb. iii. 18). It is into the broken heart that God pours the balm of Gospel blessedness (Isa. lvii. 15; Matt. xi. 28).

OPEN-AIR MISSION—The Committee of the South London Auxiliary of the Open-Air Mission have arranged that doctrinal topics shall be considered at its monthly conferences of preachers this winter. The October subject was, "The Devil," opened by Mr. Algernon C. P. Ccote. Last week "Sin" was dealt with by Rev. William Frith. The attendance has been very good, and the friendly discussion proves that the preachers enter thoughtfully and earnestly into the subject. The conferences are held in the Mission Hall, Melior-street, Weston-street, Bermondsey (five minutes from London Bridge), on the second Wednesday of each month, at seven p.m. Christian workers will be made welcome.

IS RHEUMATISM CURABLE?

SUCH is the question we are continually asked, for some poor sufferers grow so weary of a vain search after relief, that they form in their own minds the conclusion that there is no cure. It is well known that rheumatic attacks are wont to announce themselves to their victims at all seasons. They may follow changes of temperature, organic irregularities, and other causes of a more trivial nature. It is miserable to be a rheumatic subject, and no one could withhold sympathy and help from those who are chronic sufferers; therefore it is well to know in which direction to point them. The following remarkable cure was wrought by a simple course of Magnetic Treatment, and what has been done for one can be done for others, so let all sufferers write for that advice which may be had for asking.

Mr. G. Hooper, 27, Brittenden-road,
Angel-road, Edmonton, N.

JUNE 25, 1888.—"It gives me great pleasure to add my humble testimony to the many you have already; it must be a pleasure to you to know that your treatment has again proved victorious over Rheumatism of 10 years' standing.

"My case was a serious one—Inflammatory Rheumatism—and for five years I kept my bed five months out of every year. I could not work; doctors could do nothing, and I finally lost my employment. The complaint had such a hold upon me that on the least sign of damp I had to go to bed—sometimes while at work the pains would seize me so suddenly that I would fall down, till at last it became dangerous for me to be out by myself. Every means was tried for my restoration, but in vain. I was attended by the Mildmay deaconesses at Bethnal Green, who know me well, and can substantiate what I say. These ladies kindly introduced me to you, and my case was laid before you. You let me have appliances, but expressed your opinion that you did not expect them to cure me, though they would be likely to give me at least some relief.

"At that time I was so bad that I could not sit up, owing to the spine being so bad: I could not touch food through indigestion, and any attempt to walk without holding on to the wall or chairs resulted in my falling down. I must say I thought very little of the appliances at first, and only wore them for warmth; but in a few weeks my spine became better, and I could sit down and rise with ease; next my indigestion went, and by the end of six months I found my Rheumatism was yielding, and the weather did not affect me. I was able to do some work at home, and the first winter passed with one slight attack which sent me to bed. After that I continued to improve rapidly, and though I anxiously looked forward to the coming winter, it came and went without one day's illness, and up to the present time I am able to testify that your treatment has taken away Rheumatism, Sciatica, Indigestion, and every trouble I had. I don't fear snow or rain or anything of the kind, and I have not lost one day's work.

"I shall be happy to correspond with, or see, anybody who may apply to me."

No one need hesitate to seek advice for themselves or friends. Mr. Garratt advises gratuitously through the post or in personal consultation, and every inquirer submitting the description of a case may reckon upon a thoughtful and candid reply. Information upon the treatment of any complaint may be had free by post. B. COPSON GARRATT, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

FATHERLESS.—The Board of Managers of the ASYLUM for FATHERLESS CHILDREN, Reedham, Purley, Surrey, earnestly APPEAL for HELP to maintain and educate the 300 Children now under their care. These children have been admitted to the Asylum at ages varying from six months to eleven years, and will all be retained and cared for until 15 years of age.

The Institution is entirely Unsectarian, has no endowment, and is, therefore, dependent upon public benevolence for support.

The necessary expenditure averages £8.000 per annum, but the only reliable income—that from Annual Subscriptions—does not provide one-third of that amount, hence the necessity for this Appeal. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS will be most thankfully received.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Two more working-men officers of the Church Army were sent last week to labour in India, among their own class.

On Sunday week a ten-days' general mission was commenced in the churches in York, the Archbishop preaching in the Minster in the afternoon to men only.

The Church Missionary Society have appointed Thursday, Nov. 29, as a day of intercession on behalf of foreign missions. A communion service will be held in St. Dunstan's Church, Fleet-street, E.C., at 11 a.m., and from 3 to 5 p.m. a meeting for prayer will be held in Sion College, Thames Embankment.

On Sunday week Dr. Scott, bishop of North China, preached a most interesting sermon from the University pulpit at Cambridge. The bishop spoke at length on the great need for fresh volunteers in the mission field, and referred to the want of life which characterises the Church in China, and which requires both the outpouring of the Holy Spirit's influence to awaken the consciences of the sleeping Church, and start it into fresh life.

Mr. H. H. Johnston, Vice-Consul for the Oil Rivers of the Niger Delta, in a lecture before the Royal Geographical Society on Monday week paid a high tribute to the work of the Church Missionary Society. Speaking of the superstitious worship at Bonny and Brass of the python and lizard, and of the evils resulting both to Europeans and natives, he said that a great and good change had been brought about, not by the consuls nor by naval action, but by the earnest and devoted labours of the agents of the Church Missionary Society.

In connection with St. Matthew's, Brixton-hill, London, S.W., pending the erection of a permanent mission church, a temporary mission-hall has been opened in Railton-road. Under the direction of the vicar (Rev. N. A. Garland) a band of ladies and gentlemen, says a daily paper, work very zealously in house-to-house evangelistic labour. The aged poor, and those who are sick, receive considerable temporal assistance and tender nourishing; whilst, especially during the winter months, the genuine unemployed are relieved with bread, meat, and coal tickets. The mission services are well attended, under the superintendence of a lay evangelist.

BAPTIST.

Rev. John Compston, of London, closed a series of special evangelistic services at Westgate Baptist Chapel, Rotherham, on Friday last. The attendance at all the meetings was good, and cheering results have already been welcomed.

The new Mayor of Leicester (Alderman Edward Wood) presiding at the anniversary meeting of Dover-street Church, Leicester, last week, said that any good which he had been enabled to accomplish in any way he owed to the inspiration of that Sunday-school and church where he was baptized on April 6, 1856.

Rev. W. F. Harris, of Trinity Baptist Church, Derby on a recent Sunday evening took the report of the Wesleyan Methodist West Central Mission as the basis of his sermon. He characterised the report "an additional chapter to the Acts of the Apostles," and urged all his hearers to take the most prayerful interest in the "Forward Movement" of Methodism.

A United Communion Service of the London Baptist Association was held on Monday week at the Downs Chapel, Clapton. Several pastors of neighbouring churches in the Association were present. There was a large attendance at the afternoon prayer-meeting, and at the Communion Service in the evening. Some short addresses were given, and the season was felt to be one of solemnity and power.

The church at Peckham, under the pastorate of Rev. Frank M. Smith, is now worshipping in the Public Hall, the old building in Norfolk-street having lately been closed. An eligible site has been secured at Peckham-rye, and it is proposed to erect a new tabernacle, to seat 1000 persons, at a cost of £5000. During Mr. Smith's pastorate of two years, 200 new members have been admitted to church fellowship.

The sixteenth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. William Cuff at the Shoreditch Tabernacle was celebrated last week. Pastor Cuff and his workers are most zealous in their efforts to reach the people with the Gospel. The Tabernacle has a membership of considerably over a thousand; while there are connected with it five mission chapels and schools, a lodging-house mission, open-air mission, house-to-house visitation society, and other organisations in vigorous working order. Mr. Cuff is endeavouring to raise funds for the building of a new Sunday-school, to accommodate about 1200 scholars.

At the annual meeting of Regent-street, Church, Smethwick, Birmingham (Rev. W. H. Purchase, pastor), reports presented of the various departments of the church's work showed that during the year progress has been made in every direction. Thirty new members have been received into fellowship. The school has increased by 144 scholars on the books, and the attendance has more than doubled. Weekly offerings are £36 in advance of last year; while the income of the church from all sources has been an average of £6 per week. There is a Christian band in good working order, and a meeting for inquirers has been continuously sustained week by week. It was decided to work the church in future on the principles of open membership and open communion.

SALVATION ARMY.

New barracks have been opened for Bristol No. 3 Corps.

Staff-Capt. Orsborn's last month in Norway showed most encouraging results.

Volunteers are coming forward in response to recent appeals for China and Japan.

The State legal authorities of the Canton Vaud have quashed the conviction of Miss Sterling, "the prisoner of Chillon," and she has been released.

General Booth is on a visit to Sweden and Norway. He hopes to return to London for the two-days' special meetings in Exeter Hall, Dec. 11 and 12.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Darlington Monthly Meeting is anxious that one or two suitable Friends should settle and work in West Hartlepool Meeting.

During the last year 17,126 persons have attended the Temperance meetings held in Bunhill-buildings, and 320 pledges have been taken.

A site for the much-needed hospital at Antanamrivo has not yet been secured, but Dr. Fenn, who has gone out to superintend and labour there, hopes it may be soon.

Henry Stanley Newman's excellent address to the ministers and elders of Indiana Yearly Meeting appears in The Christian Worker. He has also, by special request, delivered an address at the Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio.

In Augusta, Maine, the Friends have just opened a new meeting-house as a result of evangelistic labour by Hannah T. Pratt. "It is a truly historic building. On the place where it now stands was once the whipping-post and pillory."

At the request of John Henry Douglas, endorsed by The Christian Worker, Sunday week was set apart by many Friends in Iowa for prayer that the Holy Spirit might descend on ministers and members of the Church, and that revival power might result in wide-spread conversion to God. We might safely imitate Ohio here.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Baldwin Brindley, preaching at Castlegate Chapel, Nottingham, on Sunday week, condemned the keen appetite for sensationalism that marked the religious life of many Christians.

The church at Rendham has engaged a colporteur from the Metropolitan Tabernacle Association, who assists the minister (Rev. G. Hollier) in village work, and visits from house to house in sixteen parishes.

A united meeting of the Congregational Churches of Brighton was lately held at Clifton-road Church, and was very largely attended, there being numbers from all the nine churches present. The first part of the evening was spent in friendly social intercourse, after which there were practical addresses and prayer.

Rev. James Mahood, on the 4th inst., preached at Burlington-street Chapel, Liverpool, his farewell sermon, on his retirement after a pastorate of nearly forty years. In an address presented to him, the congregation testified their high appreciation of the good and faithful work which he had achieved during his long pastorate.

METHODIST.

There has been a great revival at Lincoln as a result of a fortnight's mission by Rev. T. Waugh. The names of 520 inquirers have been taken.

The work of God in connection with New Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars-road, London, under the direction of Rev. B. Senior, is being much blessed. The chapel is filled every Sunday evening, and since the opening there have been many conversions.

The success of the West-end Mission, says The Baptist, seem to be giving impetus to home missionary work in the Wesleyan body, and much interest is being stirred as to the best means to be used. An effort is being made to raise the general income of the Wesleyan Home Mission Fund, which now stands at about £36,000, to at least £50,000 per annum.

Rev. T. Cook has concluded a very successful mission at Barrow-in-Furness. During the mission over 300 persons entered the inquiry-rooms, and every church in the town has been benefited. The good work is still going on. Eighteen railway men were converted through the instrumentality of two of their comrades who were saved during the mission.

The Primitive Methodists at Birmingham have opened an Evangelists' Training Home. Some of the districts are employing evangelists with great success. Many hearts are stirred to put forth special and determined efforts to win souls to Christ. At Shildon a series of special services has been crowned by the professed conversion of a hundred souls.

The missionary committee of the Methodist New Connexion has been gratified with the intelligence from China that a body of gentlemen in Tientsin have offered to erect a mission hospital with twenty-four beds for in-patients at Chu Chia Tsai, Shantung. This is to be done in order that Dr. Shrubshall, the medical missionary recently sent out, may have opportunity for extended usefulness in his great work.

The missionary spirit of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, says The Methodist Times, is more deeply stirred than it has been for many years. The steam launch for Fernando Po, West Africa, left Liverpool last week. The difficulties connected with the new mission to Central Africa are not yet all overcome. Rev. H. Buckenham, of Burton, is appointed to superintend the work. It is hoped to start the expedition to the Barotsé country early in January.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Mr. Murdo Mackenzie was recently ordained by Inverness Free Church Presbytery as a missionary to China in connection with the Presbyterian Church of England.

About twelve months ago a Presbyterian Church was started at Doncaster, Yorkshire, under the leadership of Rev. W. Duncan. At the anniversary service recently held it was reported that the year has been one of great success. The church has about eighty members.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A central mission hall for the deaf and dumb has been opened in Belfast.

Major Whittle preached last Sunday the annual sermons in aid of the Belfast Y.M.C.A.

At Fermoy, co. Cork, largely attended Gospel meetings have been held by Mr. Cummins.

Several Belfast gentlemen have promised £100 each towards the cost of establishing the Stevenson College for the training of native missionaries in Kattiawar, India.

A mission conference has been held at Londonderry for the purpose of explaining the foreign mission work of the Presbyterian Church, and creating in it a deeper interest.

A meeting to commend to the care of God Rev. Robert Gillespie, Mrs. and Miss Gillespie, Mrs. Jacob and Miss Stavely who are going out to India as Presbyterian missionaries, was held last week in Belfast.

A Methodist district convention extending over two days was held last week in Clones. Addresses on personal holiness, private prayer, family religion, the systematic reading of the Word, &c., were delivered.

A united evangelistic mission has been held at Clonmel by Rev. James Kirkwood. Presbyterians, Methodists, and Quakers heartily united in the services which were held in their respective meeting-houses. Many testified that they had received blessing.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

More than a hundred office-bearers have joined the the new Free Church Deacon's Association of Glasgow.

Weekly meetings in connection with the Evangelistic Association, Cambuslang, are conducted by a number of earnest Christians.

Mr. Daniel McLauchlan is conducting Gospel meetings in Wilson-street Hall, Renfrew. The meetings are fairly attended, and some anxious cases have been dealt with.

A new mission-hall in Rothesay, in connection with the West Free Church, has been opened. The hall is capable of holding 300 persons, and has a fine suite of class-rooms attached.

Rev. Mr. MacDonald, Free Church, and Rev. Mr. Mackay, Tiree, have been holding special evangelistic meetings in the district. The meetings have been a source of much and needed blessing.

The Hamilton branch of the Y.W.C.A. held a social meeting last week, preparatory to the winter's work. Over seventy young women were present, most of whom joined the Association.

Mr. A. C. Dorward, of the China Inland Mission, whose death we announced last week, was a native of Galashiels. At an early age he gave himself up to mission work in China. He was a young man of great promise.

Earl Compton, in opening the winter course of lectures in connection with St. Cuthbert's Church, Edinburgh, said he wished Christians resembled Mohammedans in respect to the absence of shame in performing their devotions.

Five thousand Souvenir Testaments sent by the National Bible Society of Scotland to the Melbourne Exhibition have been circulated there, and have been much prized, upwards of £100 have been received from new subscribers.

Among recent accessions to the library of the Free Church College in Edinburgh are the books of the late Ion Keith Falconer, a very remarkable library intended to prepare for the most scholarly and efficient work in the Arabian mission field.

New Pitsligo, Aberdeenshire, says The Christian Leader, has of late been enjoying a time of blessing in a very marked degree, as shown by the crowds coming out to special services held for some months past conducted and taken part in by all the ministers of the place.

Rev. Donald Macleod, of Glasgow, in his morning sermon on Sunday week, said the success of the Glasgow International Exhibition formed an earnest appeal for the provision of some continuous and inexpensive form of instruction and amusement for the toiling masses of Glasgow.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. James Macnair, nineteen years minister of Canongate Parish, Edinburgh.—On Nov. 13, at New York, of heart disease, Rev. H. Friedlander, 61, Corrance-road, Brixton, London, formerly missionary of the London Jews' Society at Jerusalem.—Rev. James Whiteford, for forty-eight years minister of the Presbyterian Church at Raloo, Ireland.—Rev. R. Stepney, Houghton-le-Spring, for fifty years a minister of the Wesleyan Connexion.—Rev. Canon George Griffith, rector of Machynlleth, Wales.

M. MABILLE, French missionary in Lessouto, Africa, writes in May to the Paris Directors, telling them of the complete destruction of a chapel only just finished and dedicated, and which had cost much labour and 5000 francs (£200). The hurricane which blew down the chapel caused also much damage besides. But it will not do, he says, to look at the ruins: the chapel must be rebuilt; but where to get the means is the difficulty. While M. Mabille was one side of the river Makhaleng, observing the Christian ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, Lerotholi, the chief, was on the other side, having brought a herd of cattle with which to purchase two wives.—Journal des Missions.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

It is stated that the Emperor William of Germany has entirely given up alcoholic liquors.

The British Women's Temperance Association has four hundred branches and 25,000 members.

The public-houses in Liverpool have been reduced by fully three hundred during the last eighteen years.

Many of the farmers of Somerset have this year taken their apples to the jam factory instead of turning them into cider as formerly.

An Anti-Tobacco Congress is being convened in connection with the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1889. Delegates and adherents of the cause from all parts of the world are invited to attend.

About two years ago the Committee of the National Temperance League offered premiums for the three best essays "in advocacy of the principles of total abstinence." Twenty-seven essays were received. The adjudicators, Sir Nathaniel Barnaby, K.C.B., Hon. and Rev. Canon Leigh, and Dr. Benjamin W. Richardson have awarded the first prize (£90) to Mr. W. J. Lacey, Chesham, Bucks; the second prize (£67 10s) to Rev. E. R. Barrett, Liverpool; and the third prize (£45) to Rev. James Smith, Tarland, Aberdeenshire.

Appeals.

Crown-court Dorcas Society.—Remnants of material suitable for making articles of clothing as Christmas gifts for the poor, or help in money, will be thankfully received by the SECRETARY, Crown-court Church, Russell-street, Drury-lane, W.C.

Lower Clapton, E.—Last year, soup, coals, groceries, bread, and clothing were distributed to many through the Chatsworth-road Tabernacle Benevolent Society. This winter there is also manifest need in the district, and gifts will be gladly acknowledged by Rev. JOHN BAIN, Lindholme, Goulton-road, Clapton, E.

Bible Christian Church, Hoxton.—At this place work of an essentially mission character is carried on. The district is very poor, and the efforts of the friends of the cause have been severely taxed of late, in order to keep the various agencies in operation. There being a fall of £100 on last year's receipts, a bazaar has been arranged for November 27 to 29. Assistance, in cash or goods, will be gratefully received by the pastor, Rev. J. CORY, 57, Fairbank-street, Hoxton, N.

Children's Gospel Mission at Clerkenwell.—For some years a good work has been carried on among the children at Plumber's-place, Rosoman-street. Through the death of friends, the effort has now become embarrassed, and unless a debt of £10 is soon discharged, about a hundred children will be denied the kindness and instruction which they so much need. Donations will be thankfully received by the hon. superintendent, Mr. J. M. HUTCHINSON, 16, St. John's-lane, Clerkenwell, E.C.

Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute, Alexandria.—Rev. T. R. Lawrence, superintendent, asks for subscriptions towards the present need of this Institution, which does not pay its way. Remittances to Miss ROBINSON should be labelled, "Alexandria current expenditure." Cheques may be paid to Mr. LAWRENCE's credit at the agency of the Bank of Egypt, 26, Old Broad-street, London; and postal orders sent direct. Wealthy Christian officers are specially asked to remember this effort to bring a large and influential class of the community under the power of the Gospel.

THE AVERAGE LENGTH OF LIFE of the Protestant pastor, according to a German Life Assurance Society, is much longer than that of the Roman Catholic priest.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1888.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

Already 20,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity. Hundreds of poor men have been gathered in, and their need supplied, while scores have been turned away, for want of room, in the most destitute condition.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretary; or Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the Editors of "The Christian."

OUR COUNTRYMEN IN INDIA.

"Come over and help us!" is the cry that comes from the East, from the Evangelists who are too few, and from Railway Men, Planters, and others, who value the means of grace that are now beyond their reach. The need of those who make no appeal, because they have ceased to care for these things, is more impressive than even the cry for help. Their souls are precious, and they have been connected with all the British Churches. In the midst of the heathen their influence as belonging to the ruling race is very great. They help or hinder the work of Missionaries. Earnest efforts are needed to supply their need by the visits of Evangelists. An appeal is made to the Lord's stewards, to whom He has intrusted His silver and gold. Aid is needed to support nine Evangelists now at work in the great field, and to send others. Contributions may be sent to the Publishers of The Christian, or to J. FORDYCE, (late of Simla),

General Secretary.

THE COMMITTEE

OF THE

MISSIONARY AND EVANGELISTIC BUREAU

EARNESTLY INVITE:—

1. Young men or women feeling called of God for Missionary Work abroad, and experiencing difficulty in reaching the heathen world, to communicate with them through the Secretary, when every possible assistance will be given to suitable applicants.

2. Correspondence from Christian missionaries and laymen residing abroad, upon the needs of, and openings for, Christian work in the countries where they dwell. Also of the special kind of help they need in their own sphere of service.

3. Correspondence from any willing to help in making known the object of the Bureau, whether at home or abroad.

Circulars and papers setting forth the work more fully will be gladly sent on receipt of a stamped envelope. Donations or subscriptions urgently needed, and may be sent to the Secretary,

CAPTAIN W. H. DAWSON,

President Y.M.C.A., Bournemouth.

As one who endeavours to serve Christ with the earnestness with which he formerly lived for pleasure, Captain DAWSON is a Christian whose career furnishes material for instructive study. An only son, he had large opportunity for enjoying the world, and he knows somewhat of that which satisfies many who are "without God and without hope"; but his continual delight is to compare as gold with copper the happiness which he enjoys as a soldier of Christ with that which he once knew as an unprofitable servant of sin.

Born in 1850, the subject of this sketch entered the British Army when nineteen years of age, receiving a commission in the Inniskilling Dragoons, which he held until 1884, when ill-health compelled him to abandon the regiment in which he was then senior captain. In 1874, when in Ireland, he yielded himself to God, and the ten years which followed were marked by active endeavours to lead those with whom he was associated to a knowledge of Christ as their Saviour. It seemed as if a career of eminent usefulness would be cut short when the Captain retired into private life, but events showed that the Lord had in store for him a still wider field of labour.

Residing at Bournemouth for a large portion of every year, Captain Dawson soon found there was ample scope for evangelistic work, which he carries on on Sunday afternoons during the winter months, open-air services on the beach taking their place throughout the summer. The work found favour with God and man, and steadily developed. The Y.M.C.A., with which this effort was identified, had long been seeking a spot which it could call "home," and when the late Earl Cairns, whose name had been associated with every good work in the town, passed away, it was decided to erect a Y.M.C.A. building as a memorial to that great and noble man; and not to him only, but the name of another of earth's and heaven's peers must be coupled with his, and accordingly we now have standing side by side in Bournemouth the Cairns Memorial House and the Shaftesbury Hall and Gymnasium, both of which were erected in 1886.

(From Photograph by Mr. F. J. Bright, Bournemouth.)

Here adequate accommodation is found for every branch of the Association work, mental, physical, and spiritual, and many are the voices which can exclaim, "I was born there."

It is in the Shaftesbury Hall, which seats 1000 persons, that Captain Dawson now conducts his services, and the blessing of God has richly attended them. Perhaps their value may be gauged by a few facts, which are but indications of the success by which they have been attended. Bournemouth being pre-eminently a visitors' town, the audiences are ever changing. The effect of this is at once discouraging and the reverse; discouraging, because many in whom interest is aroused disappear on their visit being ended, and are thus lost sight of; encouraging, because numbers who enjoy the services, and are led to God through them, mention them to their friends in various parts of the country, and thus the work becomes widely known, and blessing received in Bournemouth is thus carried far and wide.

Captain Dawson hesitates to say much about results, as the details are sacred, and cannot be written. It is a quiet and steady work, free from extravagance of any sort. Letters come from all parts asking what is done and why the services prosper. The only answer is, God first; then prayer and pains. In fifteen different places visited during the summer in various parts of England, results were found, one clergyman coming from Ireland on purpose to see the services, as a relation of his, a young officer, had received such blessing. A gentleman coming to England from America was told by the captain of the ship to be sure and go to this service, as it had been the means of blessing to him. One who is now working in South Africa writes: "I owe everything, under God, to that service." One Sunday a gentleman stayed behind, and said, "I was told of these services in Melbourne, but I never expected to get such blessing." Last winter Prince Oscar of Sweden was a regular attendant, and the Queen of Sweden, when well enough.

Monday and generally another day in the week are given up to see those who wish for spiritual help, and in this way one or two follow up the work. The correspondence arising from these services, and the Y.M.C.A. work carried on in the Cairns Memorial House, is very considerable. Several young men have joined the Y.M.C.A. through this work, and there they find a home and welcome. Many persons have also become regular attendants at places of worship. It is emphasised that the effort is an extra means of grace, and not to take the place of the public services in the churches and chapels. Some happy expedients are occasionally resorted to. The outline of the subject of discourse is printed, and a copy given to the visitors on entering the hall, so that they can attentively follow it. In these cases the subject lasts three or four Sundays. This is specially useful for the many that have no Bibles with them, or when it is an Old Testament subject and they have only New Testaments. People are also encouraged to read the Scriptures out loud in alternate verses, and repeat special verses. This greatly helps the memory of some.

An excellent feature of the work is the effort to gather in the cabmen, many of whom are regular attendants; seats are kept for those who cannot come early. A letter is sent annually to each cabman, yardman, and boy, and an annual gathering with meat supper is held, when each attendant receives a pair of thick socks or gloves. They are also visited and looked after in various ways.

Another important feature is the visiting of young men who are sent to Bournemouth for the winter, and sometimes are almost alone in hotels or lodgings. This is a slow and difficult work, but not in vain. Many of these young men would shrink from seeing a minister of the Gospel, but they will welcome a visit from a layman, and one of themselves. Many of these go to the hall or to Captain Dawson's house. For a few Sunday evenings, services are being held for men only, to carry on the work of the ten days' special services when Rev. W. Mowll, from Langham-place Church, London, visited Bournemouth.

As a servant of the Queen, Captain Dawson was a hard-working officer; in athletics and amusements he also took a great interest before his conversion. As a servant of Christ he is likewise remarkably active, and only when he has an opportunity to preach Christ from the stage will he enter a theatre. Besides his voice he uses his pen. There are over 300,000 of his little books in circulation, and they are useful in keeping up the links and strengthening the bonds of friendship with many. The "Story of Jonah" is the latest of these brochures, and is full of pungent and pertinent suggestion.

Captain Dawson was an active helper in Mr. Moody's London missions on each of his visits to this country, and was greatly used in leading anxious ones to Christ. During the summer months he engages in evangelistic work in various parts of the country. In conclusion we may say that Captain Dawson is a man who realises the blessedness of being out and out for his Divine Master, and enjoys that true, whole-hearted service which brings its own reward here, as well as will secure the "well done" to which the "good and faithful servant" looks forward in the life which is to come.

THE CHURCH ARMY.—The winter campaign is about to be begun. Requests for evangelists come from all quarters, and mission nurses, who give much attention to prevention and rescue work, are called for from many places. The Training Homes are full, but the funds are very low. Rev. W. Carlile, honorary secretary of the Army, writes: "We are sorely needing many more suitable persons of the right stamp to be trained, but until I am released from the unpleasant duty of seeking funds, I cannot be free to go and search for them." The headquarters of the Church Army are 128 and 130, Edgware-road, London, W.

Points for Preachers.

ROBERT HALL'S METHOD.

It sometimes seems to me that in our present craving for new methods of preaching, we are bewildered by having abandoned the laws that guided the great preachers of the past, without having found adequate ones to take their place. I have always thought there was sound wisdom in Robert Hall's assertion – that the mind of an ordinary congregation is, at the beginning of a sermon, so apathetic as to the realities of our religion, as to make it needful that the preacher should spend some time in nothing more than in expounding, proving, and showing the importance of a special Christian doctrine. The mind and conscience of the hearers thus become awakened to the seriousness of the theme. And then ten minutes or a quarter of an hour may be hopefully spent in enforcing it, by appeal to the heart and judgment. Certainly sermons that laid such a foundation as Robert Hall recommends, and this followed by appeals to the conscience, to the fears and hopes, mingled with warnings, expostulations, pleadings, and beseechings, were the mark of the sermons that gave such power to the pulpit in the last generation.—Rev. W. Guest.

THE ESSENCE OF THE GOSPEL.

The Gospel of the grace of God does not consist in pressing the duty defined by the words, "Give your heart to Christ," although that is often unwisely pressed upon inquirers after salvation as if it were the Gospel. The very essence of the Gospel is contained in the words, "Having liberty to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having a High Priest over the house of God, let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith. "Give your heart to Christ" is rather law than Gospel. It is most proper that it should be done, for God Himself demands it; but merely urging the doing of it is far short of the Gospel. The true Gospel is, Accept the free gift of salvation from wrath and sin by receiving Jesus Himself, and all the benefits He purchased with "his own blood," and your heart will be his in a moment, being given to Him, not as a matter of law, but of love; for if you have the love of his heart poured into yours by his blessed Spirit, you will feel under the constraining influence of a spontaneous spiritual impulse to give Him in return your heart, and all that you possess. It is right to give Him your heart; but unless you first receive his, you will never give Him yours.—Rev. Wm. Reid.

Apocalyptic Interpretation.

A few years ago, at one of the Mildmay Prophetic Conferences, the venerable Dr. Horatius Bonar thus expressed himself as to the vexed question of the interpretation of the Apocalypse:—

> I feel more and more uncertain as to the various systems of Apocalyptic interpretation. I confess that I do not adhere to any of the prophetic schools. I am still a learner with regard to the Apocalypse. I am waiting for light, and believe the Holy Spirit will give it, and that ere long it may be we shall understand that marvellous book which the Church has, age after age, tried to comprehend, and yet which (I believe) it has hitherto failed in a great measure to unravel.

These words come with peculiar force from one to whom Prophetic students owe no small debt of gratitude for having so long and ably conducted The Quarterly Journal of Prophecy. If one who, from his age and experience, has had such opportunities of being well versed in the subject, adopts the attitude of a learner rather than of a teacher, it may well rebuke the very dogmatic tone so often found in books on prophetic subjects.

There is something very cheering in the expectation suggested by Dr. Bonar, that we are drawing near the time when more light than yet has been vouchsafed may be expected on the interpretation of the Apocalypse; and surely this should stimulate prayer that He who inspired the writing of this wondrous book, and gave it as a special gift to His Church, may be pleased to remove the difficulties and perplexities of its interpretation.

At present, not to speak of the Preterist school, which is mostly rationalistic, those students of prophecy who may be called evangelical are split into two hostile camps: the Futurists, who think that from the fourth chapter onward no part has been as yet fulfilled; and the Historical school, who regard it generally as a symbolical representation of events occurring between the first and second Advents.

Between these two opposing camps many endeavour to maintain an intermediate position by advocating a double fulfilment, which would give room for both, but they find it not easy to maintain this neutral ground in the midst of the hot cross-fire which is continually going on between the Historical and Futurist combatants.

There is nothing more devoutly to be hoped for in the interests of Prophetic Truth than that more light may be granted than we now possess upon the point at issue in this controversy, so that greater unanimity may be attained as to what the Book of the Revelation was intended to set forth; that so, instead of being as it is now a battle-field for warm controversy amongst Christian brethren—for they alone care much about the subject—it may become a field of pasture wherein the shepherds may feed their flocks, and find fellowship one with another in so doing; not separating as did the herdmen of Abram and Lot: for surely it cannot be said of ground so specially blessed (Rev. i. 3, xxii. 7), "The land was not able to bear them that they might dwell together."

It is purposed in two or three more papers to consider some of the salient points on which the controversy between the two chief schools of Apocalyptic interpretation may be said to turn. The approaching Advent season will by many be considered not unsuitable for the consideration of such a subject.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. James Spurgeon, of Croydon, and co-pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

Messrs. Morgan & Scott beg to intimate that Mr. George Ernest Morgan, M.A., son of the senior partner, has now become a member of the Firm. No alteration, however, will be made in the style of the Firm, the business being still continued under the name of Morgan & Scott.

The following is a copy of a circular sent, by a West-end money lender, to a young man at Cambridge University. The circular, on the face of it, reveals its true character; but such offers are, nevertheless, a great temptation, and we hope parents will see that their sons are put on their guard:—

> SIR,—In the event of your ever requiring money at a moment's notice, I will advance you, on your note of hand, any amount without security.

"The cowardly" head the doomed list which concludes with "all liars" (Rev. xxi. 8). "Whisperers" and "backbiters" are associated with "haters of God" in the grave indictment of mankind which closes the first chapter of Romans. And "backbitings" and "whisperings" are enumerated by the Apostle among the evils which he fears to find among the carnal saints at Corinth. These sins are more common than many think, and more heinous than they who are guilty of them seem to suppose. We earnestly and affectionately warn Christians to avoid them.

The Church Times tells one of its correspondents that the reason for holding aloof from the Bible Society is because

> There is nothing to warrant the opinion that mere dissemination of copies of the Bible forms any part of the Divine plan for propagating Christianity, or has hitherto produced any satisfactory results.

The Editor surely has never read a Report of the Bible Society, or he would have a more correct and adequate knowledge of its work. The early Christian Church found a Vernacular Bible essential for all its missions, and within 150 years of the Ascension had provided itself with the Syriac, the Coptic, and the Latin versions. The Bible Society's work is linked in unbroken bonds with the missionary work of that Early Church. Not ten years ago Bishop Steere, in accepting the office of a Vice-President of the Bible Society which printed his translations for the Universities Mission, wrote to it from Zanzibar:—

> I feel here that our work must be all unsound without a Vernacular Bible.

This month, Rev. B. La Trobe, secretary of the Moravian Missions, on his return from inspecting the Missions in Labrador, wrote gratefully to the Bible Society respecting the Scriptures it had supplied for the Eskimo:—

> I found many well acquainted with the Bible, and I certainly saw its fruit abundantly manifest in Labrador.

These are but one or two cases of "satisfactory results," of which the records of the Bible Society could furnish hundreds.

After our article of last week entitled "Can Pentecost be regained?" was in type, we received from a missionary in the foreign field a series of papers, of which the first appears in our present issue. We bespeak the earnest attention of our readers to "The Question of the Hour: Foreign Missions." The series will extend over many weeks, and we confidently trust that their effect will be, in conjunction with many other evident present operations of the Spirit of God, to raise the Great Commission to evangelise the world, into the high place which its supreme importance demands.

The December issue of The Sentinel gives particulars of the recent "great address" to Lord Lansdowne, the new Viceroy of India, with regard to the reforms so sadly needed in our Eastern Dependency for the protection of women. Only influential signatures were sought, and of those in a very short time nearly three thousand were got together, the names being almost entirely those of persons occuping responsible public positions. The address "requested" Lord Lansdowne to make personal investigation of the matter in question upon his arrival in India, and to "insist upon the immediate, complete, and effectual execution of the expressed will of the British Parliament," so that every Act and provision for the regulation of vice shall now be repealed. A number of other addresses and letters were sent to Lord Lansdowne, who made several promises to give the subject his very careful consideration.

A correspondent sends to us an illustrated handbill which had been placed inside the copy of THE CHRISTIAN supplied to him by a local bookseller, which advertised a grimly sensational novel. We can only repeat what we have many times stated, that no insets of any kind emanate from this office unless bearing the words, "Supplement to THE CHRISTIAN," and the date of the current issue.

Several inquiries having been made as to the reason why the Salvation Army reprinted Canon Isaac Taylor's article on Foreign Missions, we understand that the pamphlet in question was produced by the department which undertakes the issue of any literature likely to make the work of the Army more widely known. Directly the fact of its publication came to the knowledge of General Booth, he withdrew it from circulation, when only a few copies had been issued, fearing that such a step might be misconstrued as an endorsement of Canon Taylor's strictures on the work of other missionary societies.

A catechism has been published by the Vicar of Great Barling, Essex, which shows that we are even further from Christian union than we feared. It is almost incredible that in these days the tenth edition of a publication "for the use of families and parochial schools" should contain the following:—

> 85. In what light ought we to consider Dissenters? As heretics.
>
>
> 87. Is Dissent a great sin? Yes; it is in direct opposition to our duty to God.
>
> 88. Why have not Dissenters been ex-communicated? Because the law of the land does not allow the wholesome law of the Church to be acted on.

Rev. F. A. Gace probably gave much study to the composition of this remarkable brochure, but we think if he had prefaced his labours with a little prayerful consideration of Luke ix. 49, 50, the catechism would have given some evidence of the author's possession of a little Christian charity and love.

It is a hopeful sign that the municipal elections of the month, now closing, turned, in a few places, on great social questions. In the town of Wakefield, where the betting curse has become an open and unblushing scandal, the matter, we are told, was made a cry in the municipal contest, and in each of the five wards the election was largely determined by it. There is a strong impression that the police do not in many places enforce the law with respect to gambling clubs and taverns, and to publicans serving drink to men and women already intoxicated. The evidence of the latter neglect is shamefully notorious. When, after the example of Wakefield, the religious part of the community take up these matters, and place them ahead of politics in elections to public boards, we may hope to see a powerful check given to practices which are, much more than is imagined, ruining the young life of our country, and filling the land with crime and poverty.

The Christian World thinks "the most noticeable feature of the Conference on Evangelical Preaching, summoned under Dr. Parker's auspices, was its inconclusiveness." Is not the same epithet to be applied to three-fourths of our modern theological writing and speaking? How grandly conclusive was Peter's address at Pentecost, and Stephen's shortly after. Nowadays there is endless speaking round a subject, without getting at the heart of it. It is like philosophical talk to hungry South Sea Islanders about their native nut-shells, and never giving them the kernels. People are bewildered with mere sound and words. A truer sentence was not heard at the above Conference than that of Dr. Allon: "It is indubitable that strong religious life can be sustained only by intelligent theological thought."

The evidence which is being given before the Select Committee of the House of Lords appointed to consider the sweating system, is throwing a lurid light upon the potent causes of the poverty of the poor. A few days ago it was stated by Mr. Tillett, the secretary to the Dock Labourers' Union, who may be considered as the mouthpiece of the 100,000 dock labourers in London. that in some cases a contract given out at 1s. 8d. per ton was sublet until only 4½d. per ton was paid for the work, the men being discharged at dinner time, and taken on again afterwards, so as to save payment for the time.

Mr. Tillett added that the East India Dock Company had stated that they could get plenty of men at 2d. per hour "there were such a number out of employment." About 70 per cent. of these men are married, it was stated, and that the others lived in "doss-houses," paying 2d. or 3d. per night for a bed. "They frequently assisted one another, paying for a bed when a fellow labourer was unable to do so." Perhaps it is hardly to the "doss-house" of the half-starved dock labourer that one would go for a living illustration of true practical Christian benevolence, yet the cup of cold water is here, and it is refreshing to turn to it from the unseemly squabble in the courts of law over the price of one thousand seven hundred pounds for the orchids for a dinner party.

Much modern so-called "Socialism" is due to the simple fact that the poor can read; and perhaps it is too much to expect that a starving man, with a sick wife and hungry children dependent upon him, would turn from the perusal of an account of such wasteful extravagance and sit down altogether satisfied with the constitution of society.

The effort to force the opening of the British Museum on Sundays has again failed in Parliament, the voting being nearly six to one, and it is to be hoped that the matter will now be allowed to rest for a while. Surely if the working classes were at all anxious in the direction of the opening, the question would not have been allowed to remain so long a hole-and-corner one; but as a matter of fact, the movement is that of a number of theorists, who constitute themselves the mouthpieces of those whose wishes they misrepresent.

It is a remarkable fact that although upwards of ninety per cent. of the patients in the hospitals of the Irish Metropolis are Roman Catholics, the Roman Catholics in that city take no part in the Hospital Sunday Movement. It is difficult to understand why the Roman Catholic Bishops refuse year after year to sanction any union in so good a work, but the fact remains that the annual November collection of some £5000 is made entirely from Protestants.

The Charity Organisation Society has many opponents, but perhaps few objectors will be found to its recent proposal to attach to every poor crippled or bedfast child in London a lady visitor, who will to some extent look after the little sufferer. The suggestion was a simple one, but to carry out large co-operation will be required, and the Secretary, at 18, Buckingham-street, will be glad to hear from those who are willing and desirous to help in this good work.

Dr. Vaughan's recently published volume of University sermons contains much food for thought, as, in fact, anything from the pen of the Master of the Temple invariably does. One of the addresses is of singular interest in days when the advantage of prayer is being so widely and ignorantly questioned, and it is hardly necessary to say that Dr. Vaughan's estimate of prayer is a high one.

> The reality of prayer is the meeting of the two spirits—the "I," and the "I AM"—unto communication, unto converse, unto interchange (with reverence, be it spoken) of thought and speech, of life and love. Where this is, prayer is, though nothing be asked, and nothing be given, save that ineffable grace of the Divine Presence, from which the earthly countenance shines, and men take knowledge of the man that he has been with Jesus.

"It is sometimes the art of the sceptic," Dr. Vaughan remarks, "to dwarf down prayer to petition," but perhaps others than sceptics have a tendency to do this, and to dwarf praise and thanksgiving out of their proper proportions.

Rev. W. Haslam's engagements are as follow: December 1, Cambridge; 8, Liverpool; 15, Ryde, Isle of Wight; 22, Cannes, S. France.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Major Whittle closed his meetings in Belfast last Sabbath, and goes next to Ballymena.

Mr. Richard Hill, evangelist, is conducting Gospel meetings in White Memorial Free Church, Glasgow.

Gospel meetings are being held in connection with the Established Church, Uddingston, conducted by local pastors.

Gospel meetings held in connection with Y.W.C.A. in the Friends' Schoolhouse, Lurgan, have been largely attended by young women.

Dr. Pentecost has during the last four weeks been conducting evangelistic meetings in Dublin. Two meetings were held at least each day, and much good is believed to have been done.

Mr. Opie Rodway writes:—You will be glad to hear that at Gotherington on Sunday week nineteen anxious inquirers came forward, and on Monday night thirty-four stood up to be prayed for.

Rev. Thomas Waugh is conducting Gospel services in Glasgow. Mr. Waugh also gives interesting and profitable Bible-readings every weekday at one o'clock in St. John's Church, Sauchiehall-street.

Evangelistic services were held in the Established and Free Churches of Braemar, N.B., last week. On the last Sabbath evening an overflow meeting had to be held, the attendance was so large.

Gospel meetings extending over a fortnight have been held in the Presbyterian Church, Tullylish, Ireland, by Rev. H. Williamson, Belfast, and others. Several are believed to have been brought to the Saviour.

Mr. Collins, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fortnight's services in the Mission Hall, Netley. The meetings were well attended, and the interest sustained to the last. Many have reason to thank God for his visit.

Evangelistic meetings have been held at Castlederg, Ireland, by Mr. James Dixon. As the result, a female prayer-meeting and two ministers' Bible-classes have been established, and a large number of persons have professed to receive converting grace.

Y.M.C.A., Stratford.—Rev. F. D. Sanford has held a week of services for Christians here. The interest and attendance increased, and much blessing was the result, not only to Christians, but to the unconverted. The addresses were powerful and searching. E. F. B.

Mrs. Valence (better known as Miss Waterman) has been conducting special services during the past fortnight at Eastney and Forton, Portsmouth. The attendance was good, and much good appeared to result from the meetings, especially those held at Forton. J. C.

Mrs. W. E. Legg has had a week of Gospel services in the quiet little village of Dalton Holme, Hull. Many professed conversions have taken place, while believers have been helped and strengthened. Out of a population of 450, over 100 assembled every evening to hear the Gospel message.

Rothesay.—A wave of spiritual blessing is passing over this seaside resort. Mr. J. G. Govan and four other friends have been holding Gospel meetings. Large numbers wait to the after-meetings, and the energies of the workers, from all congregations, are taxed in speaking to anxious inquirers.

Mr. J. Crofton Rainey has concluded a fortnight's mission at Erdington, Birmingham, which has resulted in a large ingathering of souls. One noticeable feature was the abnormal proportion of men among the converts. This was largely due to persons who, having found Christ, afterwards brought in their mates, who themselves again brought others.

Mr. I. D. Sankey had very large and fruitful meetings at Devonport, the estimated attendance in the hall on one occasion being 4000, besides an overflow. Many rose for prayer, and were found inquiring the way of salvation. Last Sunday evening Mr. Sankey addressed a large audience at Connaught Hall, Brighton, an overflow meeting filling the adjoining chapel. He sang and spoke; at the close of the address a large number rose for prayer, and many professed decision for Christ.

Mr. Joseph Clarke has conducted mission in various parts of Breconshire with much success He expects to stay in Breconshire for the next tw months.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith commenced mission on Saturday at Bloomsbury Baptist Chape So far they have been greatly encouraged, man people confessing Christ.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Harrison have hel evangelistic services in Hay Hill Congregationa Chapel, Bath. Many persons professed conversion and the church is revived.

Mr. Charles Garnett, mission preacher, ha recently conducted evangelistic services in th Runcorn Wesleyan Circuit, in connection wit which some remarkable conversions have occurre

Sir Arthur Blackwood addressed the under graduates' evangelistic meeting in the Alexandr Hall, Cambridge, on Sunday week. The room wa densely crowded. The address was mainly on th blessedness of taking the first step, and then th next, in the path of life.

Torquay.—Simultaneous missions are bein held here in connection with the Church and Chape organisations. The Bishop of Exeter took part i the inaugural meeting of the Church Mission. number of well-known workers are conducting th Nonconformist meetings.

Forfar has been favoured with a visit fro Mr. M. E. Steedman, of Edinburgh. Night afte night he riveted attention with his thoughtf addresses. A village somewhat neglected wa visited, and a remarkable work of grace was accon plished as the result of a week's meetings.

Rev. Dr. L. W. Munhall has closed a serie of evangelistic meetings at Clifton Springs, N.Y Notwithstanding the very great political excit ment in all parts of the Empire State, the intere increased to the end. Believers were great quickened, and many were led to accept Christ their Saviour. Dr. Munhall has also visited D troit, where his labours were greatly blessed, young men particularly.

An eight-days' Gospel mission was con menced on Sunday evening, at St. Alphege Churc Lancaster-street, Blackfriars-road, by the vic (Rev. A. B. Goulden). The mission is intend specially for the poor, who abound in this neig bourhood, and whose temporal as well as spiritu needs (says a daily paper) have been well look after by the authorities of St. Alphege Mission sin its institution some fourteen or fifteen years ago.

Gipsy Smith, of Hanley, has held a nin days' campaign at Manchester. The people literal came in crowds. The Gospel as preached by th "Gipsy" touched many hearts. Stalwart me steeped in crime, wept like children. A gre number of persons entered the inquiry-room, whe they found the Pearl of great price. An e publican was one among the number. Scores persons who never attend a place of worship we found forming part of the audiences.

Wallingford. — A successful eight-da mission has recently been conducted by Rev. J. T. Hallowes in the Y.M.C.A. Mission H Wallingford. The meetings were well attend the numbers increasing daily, and a large prop tion remained for the after-meetings. Hallowes' earnest Gospel addresses were carr home by the power of the Spirit to many hea leading several to decide for Christ; whilst Chr tians were greatly stirred up and encouraged.

Methodist missions are reported from seve important centres. At Bath, Revs. J. E. Claph and H. P. Hughes have been labouring with mi encouragement. A fortnight's mission at Burt on-Trent, conducted by Mr. W. Thorpe, was ab dantly blessed. A singing band paraded the stre and invited people to the services. At Brixton (Lyham-road) over fifty workers carried ou house-to-house visitation. Rev. G. Kirby W has been holding a ten-days' mission service Exning, many souls being brought in. At High (Archway-road) services in connection with October days of prayer proved very success Many Sunday-school children entered the inqu rooms. Mr. William Sampson has been gre encouraged in testimony at Kingston-on-Tha At Malton, Sawtry, and Nantwich, missions likewise been held, and much fruit of labour been visible.

The Turning of the Tide, 1688.

A TRUE TALE OF THE COVENANTERS.

VII.

JAMES NIMMO yields at last to the urgent representations of some of his most intimate friends, that it is his duty to marry the gentlewoman who has been recommended to him, if she will have him. He tells us how, after much prayer for guidance as to the will of God, not only in private, but in company with others, it is decided that one of his friends shall wait upon the lady with an offer of marriage from him. The quaint style in which he describes the result throws such an interesting light upon the manner in which very many, doubtless, of the Covenanters would carry themselves in such matters, that we give it in his own words :—

"June 14.—Mr. Sutherland went to Elgin, supposing she might be there, and (as he told me afterwards) he begged of the Lord before he went that, if she was there he might meet with some person that might direct him to her. And the first known person he met with was her eldest brother, at whom (after saluting) he inquired for her, who directed him to where she was. Coming to her, he told her he had some serious matter to speak to her anent. After some little communing, it was concluded they should go to the Town Clerk's house, where she was acquaint, where they got a chamber there alone, where he proposed the affair with much tenderness of me ; and she, being tender of me also, as circumstanced, would not give denial at first, but took two or three weeks to consider the same."

We have seen how, on June 13, Elizabeth Brodie had been in some anxiety owing to the dependent condition in which she had been left at her father's death, and in which she still continued. On the following day she is is enabled to write thus :—

"June 14 : The Lord let me see He was not unmindful of me. James S. came to me with an offer of marriage with a person deserving and truly gracious. I saw much mercy and love in it, yet cannot be roused up from melancholy discouragements with the apprehension of such mercies as I was trysted with."

Eventually, Nimmo is enabled to write thus of her decision : "Upon July 8, she came to her cousin Lethen's, where I communed with her on that matter myself, and she told me that she did not find much darkness in her mind in the consideration of it, neither wan to much light thereanent ; but that (not being willing to do anything to afflict me a stranger, as circumstanced then) she had got that Scripture with much sweetness applied to her mind, 'Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart' (Ps. xcvii. 11)." This answer, enigmatical it may seem, James interprets in his favour, and without protest on the gentlewoman's part.

But he must now get his father's approval and help, if possible, and hurries to Edinburgh, at no small risk, as an intercommuned man. He hides there for a week, during which he has secret interviews with his father, and hurries back to Elgin, not only with his full consent to the union proposed, but with promise of such assistance in the matter of a marriage settlement as secures the consent of Elizabeth Brodie's brother and uncles likewise to it. The difficulties before him are still so serious, however, that at times he is almost overwhelmed by them. Going out into the fields one night to lay them before the Lord, he finds comfort in a reflection which he describes as follows : "When in this distress, this Scripture came with some power on my spirit (2 Kings vii. 3—14), anent the four lepers at the gate of Samaria, which was made very applicable to my case. If I returned where I came from there appeared death, and if I stayed in the single solitary case I was in it seemed a kind of death also. Seeing the difficulties of a married lot mustered up as the army of the Syrians, if I might venture on it, I should but die also. Blessed be God, they met with a merciful disappointment, and so might I."

One difficulty arises in connection with the publishing of the banns, as if these are proclaimed in church in the usual manner Nimmo's identity is disclosed, and they cannot find any outed minister who will marry them privately, so severe is the punishment which such a violation of the law may bring upon him.

Their friend, Mr. Hog, however, accepts this risk, and we find in Elizabeth Brodie's narrative that the next entry after that of June 14, already quoted, is as follows :—

"Upon December 4, 1682, it was accomplished. That morning the Lord was very gracious to my soul, and gave me many such a sweet promise, as 'Thy Maker is thine Husband' (Isa. liv. 5). When I was in the place where the ceremonial part of it was accomplished, Mr. Hog spoke awhile to the nature of the covenant between Christ and believers. Much of God was in the meeting. The minister told us that it was not present affections that would carry us through, but they behoved to be maintained by prayer, as every piece of furniture the Christian wants must come that way. Oh, I saw myself empty of all, and also a new necessity of going to Christ for everything. After I was married I went that day to my dear friend L. D——, her house."

Nimmo thus describes the event : "Now having been married privately (both for our own and blessed Mr. Hog's safety), after partaking of a small refreshment with him, we parted and went home ; she with a friend about two miles distant, and we continued living at a distance for some months."

Within a month from the date of their marriage we find Nimmo holding in his hand a letter from his father unopened, and, fearing there might be something in it to trouble him, bowing before the Lord in prayer, that, "whatever was in it, the Lord might take the trouble of it off his mind in anything that might weaken his hands in duty." The which he finds Him do, he tells us, for his father's letter, and one received at the same time from his friend the Laird of Park, warn him that he must leave Morayshire if he would escape persecution. His perplexities are most trying, as he now finds many slackening in their friendship for him, fear being on every side. He writes : "I was at my wits' end what to do, seeing I was like to be cast off as it were here, and could not see where else to go." But his troubles only lead him to more continued waiting upon God in prayer.

The month of March finds him still in Morayshire, when news arrives that a military force is expected immediately, in order to put the laws into vigorous execution. He goes to see his wife, staying with her mother at Pluscarden, and while sitting in the house is warned of the approach of two soldiers just in time to escape to the neighbouring Abbey, the beautiful ruins of which still remain. He tells us that "when there I thought fit to slip into an old vault and deliberate what to do. I was but a little there till the two soldiers came to the door of the vault and righted the works of their muskets ; but that place was so dark where I was that they saw not me, and I put my hand upon my cravat lest it appeared white and discovered me. They went away, and in a little thereafter a servant of my mother-in-law came to the vault, and told me they were gone into a change house. I went out and walked straight forward, but was hardly out when the soldiers came after me, but walking forward I cast a hill between them and me, and returned another way." This, happening immediately after a warning sent to him "that my lord Donne and Kilravock was heard by the servant that was serving them at a ball at Kilravock's house to swear that if Nimmo was in Moray, he would secure him," decides him on immediate flight, and on March 23 we find him once more in Edinburgh, hiding, his poor wife remaining with her mother.

"GOD GAVE THE INCREASE."

ABOUT a year ago the Earl of Carrick and Mr. J. W. C. Fegan held some evangelistic services in Caterham Valley, and a precious soul-saving work has been going on since. About eighty have been gathered into Church fellowship ; a Sunday-school, mothers' meeting, &c. have been started, and the whole neighbourhood is visited by a home missionary, Bible-woman, and other helpers with tracts.

The hall soon became quite too small, but it was thought well to defer erecting a larger one till there were reliable evidences that the interest and spirit of hearing would be sustained. A freehold site has now been purchased, and it is intended to put up a plain but strong building to hold 400 people. The land and building (which will be vested in trustees) will cost about £560. Of this several of Mr. Fegan's friends have subscribed about £300, leaving £260 still to be raised.

There are about 600 young soldiers at Caterham Barracks (recruits for the Guards, undergoing their preliminary training for five or six months), and as there is no Soldiers' Home for them, if not welcomed in somewhre to hear the Gospel on Sunday evenings, they must either go back to barracks or turn into the beer-shops, as the dark country roads are not inviting these winter months. Many of them are mere youths, some of them away from home for the first time in their lives, and their hearts touched by letters from those grieving after them—not a few the sons of Christian parents. It is felt by those who have had experience in Christian work amongst soldiers that decided efforts ought to be made to lead these young soldiers to Christ before they are hedged round with temptations in London, Dublin, Windsor, &c. It is proposed to allow them 100 seats in the new hall.

The crowding and heat are now both inconvenient and exhausting to preachers and listeners. The task of raising the bulk of the money devolves upon Mr. Fegan, whose hands are already so full of responsibilities as to work in other villages as well as his well-known Homes for waifs and strays. His address is Deepdale, Caterham Valley, Surrey.

DEEPENING OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.—A convention was held at Kendal the week before last. The meetings were presided over by Mr. Robert Wilson, and addressed by Revs. J. Sloan, T. J. Madden, G. Grubb, J. G. Gregson, W. Haslam, Dr. Elder Cumming, Mr. W. Sloan, Colonel Oldham, and others. Many local ministers took part, and members of all the churches attended regularly. The Convention was a season of great spiritual profit to many.

THE CRIPPLES' NURSERY.—For twenty-six years the Cripples' Nursery has sheltered about fifty boys and girls from three to twelve years old, many of whom have left it able to earn their own living, who would otherwise have been helpless cripples. Many a seed has been sown which has flowered and borne fruit in a Christian life. The Committee have had to draw out their whole reserve fund, and they are now in the greatest straits to carry on this expensive work, for the delicate children require good food and constant attendance. The Margate Branch Home, though it is so beneficial to the children, is a heavy tax on their resources. The Committee would be most unwilling to close it unless absolutely necessary. Mrs. Kirk, 15, Park-place, Upper Baker-street, W., is secretary of the Cripples' Nursery.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

VI.—PERFECT THROUGH SUFFERINGS.

Hebrews ii. 10.

There is no book which can stand the test of sorrow and suffering as the Bible can. Other books may delight us in sunny hours, when the heart is gay; but in dark and overcast days we fling them aside, and eagerly betake ourselves to our Bibles. And the reason for this is in the fact that this Book was born in the fires. It is soaked with the tears, either of those who wrote or of those addressed.

Take, for instance, this Epistle. It was intended to solace the bitter anguish of these Hebrew Christians, who were exposed to the double fury of the storm. In the first place, there was the inevitable opposition and persecution to be encountered by all followers of the Nazarene, not only from the Gentiles, but specially from their fellow-countrymen, who accounted them apostates.

Next, there was the pain of excommunication from the splendid rites of the Temple, with its daily service, its solemn feasts, its [illegible] ceremonial. Only those amongst [illegible] who from childhood have been wont to [illegible] in some splendid minster, with its pealing organ, full-voiced choir, and mystery of architecture, arresting and enchaining every sense of beauty, but who have felt compelled to join the worship of an obscure handful in some plain meeting-house, can realise how painfully those who were addressed in these words missed the religious associations of their early days.

And then this suffering, thorn-crowned, dying Messiah! It seemed almost impossible to realise that He was the Christ of national desire. The objections that baffled the faith of the two travellers to Emmaus arose in almost irresistible force: "The chief priests and our rulers have crucified Him, but we trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel" (Luke xxiv. 20).

No attempt is made in these words to minimise the sufferings of Christ.—That were impossible and superfluous. He is King in the realm of sorrow; peerless in his pain; supreme in his distress. Though earth be full of sufferers, none can vie with our Lord in his. Human nature is limited. The confines of its joys or sorrows are soon touched. The pendulum swings only hither and thither. But who shall estimate the capacity of Christ's nature? And because of it, He could taste the sweets of a joy beyond his fellows, and of sorrow so excessive as to warrant the challenge: "Behold and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, wherewith the Lord has afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger." If it be true, as Carlyle says, that our sorrow is the inverted image of our nobility, how deep must not the sorrow have been of the noblest of our race? Well may the Greek liturgy, with infinite pathos, speak of his "unknown sorrows."

Shall the sufferings of Christ cause us to reject Christ?—Ah, strange infatuation! As well reject the heaven because of its sun, or night because of the queenly moon; or a diadem because of its regal gem; or home because of mother. The sufferings of Christ are the proudest boast of the Gospel. He Himself wears the insignia of them in heaven, as a general, on the day of triumph, chooses his choicest order to wear upon his breast. Yes, and it was the deliberate choice of Him, "for whom are all things, and by whom are all things," and who must, therefore, have had every expedient at his command, that the path of suffering should be his Son's way through our world. Every track through creation is as familiar to Omniscience as the tracks across the hills to the grey-haired, plaided shepherd. Had He wished, the Father might have conducted the Son to glory by another route than the thorny, flint-set path of suffering. But the reasons for this experience were so overwhelming that He could not evade them. Nothing else had been becoming.

These reasons may be stated almost in a sentence. Our Father has on hand a work greater than his original creation.—He is bringing many sons unto glory. The way may be rugged and tedious, but its end is glory. And it is the way along which our Father is bringing us, for, since we believe on the Son, we have the right to call ourselves sons (John i. 12). And there are many of us. Many sons, though only one Son. We do not go solitary along the narrow way. We are but part of a multitude which no man can number. The glory of which we spoke in our last, and into which Jesus has entered, is not for Him alone, but for us also. Many sons are to be his joint-heirs, reigning with Him on his throne, sharing his unsearchable riches, and his everlasting reign.

But all these sons must tread the path of suffering.—Since the first sin brought suffering to our first parents, and bloodshed into the first home, there has been but one lot for those who will live godly. Their road leads to glory, but every inch of it is stained with their blood, and watered by their tears. It climbs to Hermon's cliffs, but it descends immediately into sombre and devil-haunted plains. It conducts to the Mount of Olives, with its ascension light, but it first traverses the glades of Gethsemane, the winepress of Golgotha, the solitude and darkness of the grave.

> The path of sorrow, and that path alone,
> Leads to the land where sorrow is unknown.

What true soul has not its wilderness of temptation; its conflicts with Sadducees and Scribes; its hour of weariness and watching; its tears over cities full of rebellious men; its disappointments from friends; its persecutions from foes; rejection, agony, friendlessness, loneliness, denials, trials, treacheries, deaths, and burials? Such is the draught which the noblest and saintliest have drunk from the golden chalice of life.

Foreseeing our needs, our Father has provided for us a Leader.—It is a great boon for a company of pilgrims to have a Greatheart; for an army to have a Captain; for an exodus to have a Moses. Courageous, sagacious, and strong leaders are God's best gift to men. And it is only what we might have expected that God has placed such a One as the efficient leader at the head of the long line of pilgrims, whom He is engaged in bringing to glory. The toils seem lighter and the distance shorter; laggards quicken their pace; wandering ones are recalled from by-paths, by the presence and voice of the Leader, who marches, efficient, royal, and divine, in the van. Oh, heirs of glory, weary of the long and toilsome march, remember that ye are part of a great host, and that the Prince, at the head of the column, has long since entered the city; though He is back again, passing as an inspiration along the ranks as they are toiling on.

Our Leader is perfect.—Of course this does not refer to his moral or spiritual attributes. In these He is possessed of the stature of perfect manhood, and has filled out, in every detail, God's ideal of manhood. But He might have been all this without being perfectly adapted to the work of leading many sons through suffering to glory. He might have been perfect in character, and desirous to help us; but, if He had never tasted death, how could He allay our fears as we tread the verge of Jordan? If He had never been tempted, how could He succour those who are tempted? If He had never wept, how could He stanch our tears? If He had never suffered, hungered, wearied on the hill of difficulty, and threaded his way through the quagmires of grief, how could He have been a merciful and faithful High Priest, having compassion on the ignorant and wayward? But, thank God, our Leader is a perfect one. He is perfectly adapted to his task. His certificate, countersigned by the voice of inspiration, declares Him fully qualified.

But this perfect efficiency, as we have seen, is the result of suffering.—In no other conceivable way could He have been so effectively qualified to be our Leader as He has been by the ordeal of suffering. Every pang, every tear, every thrill—all were needed to complete his equipment to help us. And from this we may infer that suffering is sometimes permitted to befall us to qualify us to be, in our poor measure, the leaders and comforters of our brethren, who are faltering in the march. When next we suffer, let us believe that it is not the result of chance, or fate, or man's carelessness or hell's malevolence; but that perhaps God is perfecting our adaptability to comfort and succour others.

Are there not some in your circle to whom you naturally betake yourself in times of trial and sorrow? They always seem to speak the right word, to give the very counsel you are longing for; you do not realise, however, the cost which they had to pay ere they became so skilful in binding up gaping wounds and drying tears. But if you were to investigate their past history you would find that they have suffered more than most. They have watched the slow untwisting of some silver cord on which the lamp of life hung. They have seen the golden bowl of joy dashed to their feet, and its contents spilt. They have stood by ebbing tides, and drooping gourds, and noon sunsets; but all this has been necessary to make them the nurses, the physicians, the priests of men. The boxes that come from foreign climès are clumsy enough but they contain spices which scent the air with the fragrance of the Orient; so suffering is rough and hard to bear, but it hides beneath it discipline, education, possibilities, which not only leave us nobler, but perfect us to help others. Do not fret, or set your teeth, or wait doggedly for the suffering to pass, but get out of it all you can, both for yourself and for your service to your generation, according to the will of God.

Suffering educates sympathy; it softens the spirit, lightens the touch, hushes the tread; it accustoms the spirit to read from afar the symptoms of an unspoken grief; it teaches the soul to tell the number of the promises, which, like the constellations of the Arctic circle, shine most brilliantly through the wintry night; it ves a depth, a delicacy, a wealth to the spirit, which it cannot otherwise possess itself. hrough suffering He has become perfected. His sufferings have purchased our pardon, e tasted death for every man.

But his sufferings have done more in enabling im to understand experimentally, and to lay, with the tenderness of one who has ffered, all the griefs and sorrows that are ex- erienced by the weakest and weariest of the eat family of God.

So far, then, from rejecting Him because of s sorrows, this shall attract us the more ickly to his side. And, amid our glad songs, is note shall predominate: "It behoved Christ suffer." "The Lamb in the midst of the rone, as it had been slain."

eaves from my Note-Book.

By Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM, M.A.,

thor of "From Death into Life: An Autobiography."

XXXV.—THE LATCH.

ALKING along a street in London, I observed clergyman looking at me; but not knowing m I moved on. Presently I heard footsteps ickly approaching, and in a moment the me clergyman was by my side.

He said, "Is your name Haslam?"

"Yes," I replied, "that is my name."

"God bless you, a thousand times," he claimed.

"Thank you," I said, "as much of that as you ease, and the same to you. But let me ask, at is it all about?"

"Did you not say in Paris," inquired the rgyman, "the latch is on your side of the or?"

I answered, "I dare say I did; I have said ch a thing more than once."

"Oh, God bless you—it was you, then. I nnot tell you what effect those words had on me."

"Do try and tell me," I said. "I should like much to know."

My newly found friend was so excited and de- onstrative in his manner that I saw we were racting public attention, I therefore took arm, and, walking along, bid him tell me all out it.

"I am a converted man," he said, "but I was weak in myself, and so powerless in my nistry, that I went on praying, and asking d to give me strength. I did not seem to eive any answer to my petitions, and this de me both unhappy in mind and depressed body.

"At length I went to Paris for change of scene, d it was there I heard you say, 'Many ople are praying and waiting for God, while the time He is waiting for them. The very t that they are desiring and praying is a of in itself that Christ is knocking at the r of their hearts to give them the very ssing which they are craving. The latch is your side of the door. Do not wait for m, but lift the latch and bid Him enter.'

"This word came to me like a revelation m heaven. You went on speaking as if you said nothing particular; but, indeed, it was st particular and effective to and for me. m your preaching I returned to my hotel, there I knelt down and said, 'Lord, if Thou waiting for me, come in. I lift the latch— ne in, and welcome.'

"Oh, what joy filled my soul that day. I ged to find you in order to tell you of the ssing I had received, but I could not. Soon r this I returned to my parish here, in gland, and with joyful voice and lips I told people that it is not by asking and waiting, by believing and taking, that we have God's ssing.

"I am thankful to say," he continued, "that my ministry is altogether changed in its character, and my congregation and parish are now a delight to me, instead of a burden as they used to be. Oh, I find it such a joy to speak from experience of the things of God."

I could not do otherwise than agree with my friend, and thanked God with and for him, and for the work in which he was so happily engaged.

"I have not yet told you all," said the clergyman. "My two daughters were with me in Paris at that time, and they also heard you say, 'The latch is on your side of the door.' Without speaking a word to me, they each went to their room that evening, and opened the door to Christ. They had been seeking for salvation a long time, and were expecting it would come to them somehow. Instead of this, they learned from you that Christ was waiting for them. It reversed the course of their action, and instead of waiting longer for this great gift, they accepted it; instead of waiting for God, they saw that all things were now ready. That visit to Paris has revolutionised not only my family, but my whole parish."

Dear man, he was so happy, and so full of gratitude, that I could not bear to stop him; but I was obliged to tell him that I was pressed for time.

"Which way are you going?" he inquired.

On my reply, he said, "I will go so far with you."

As we were walking along I took the opportunity of asking him why he had not communicated with me before.

"The fact is," he said, "I have written several letters to you; but somehow they were never sent. I have been wanting you for a long time to come and preach in my parish."

"It is all right," I replied; "God intends you to be his instrument in your own place, and while you are so full and so zealous there is no need for another voice. Go on, and prosper more and more."

Before parting I asked his name, and that of his parish. We exchanged cards, and then took leave of one another with warm and mutual greetings.

A few months after this time, I received a most urgent letter from my friend, begging me to pay him a visit. I went as soon as I could arrange, and found him and his two daughters involved in a difficulty not at all uncommon.

They had been confusing the door (Christ) at which a sinner enters for salvation, with the door of the believer's heart, at which Christ stands waiting for admittance. The door of salvation is open for the sinner; whereas the believer has to lift the latch to admit the mighty Saviour Himself. I was not surprised to hear that this clergyman's experience, and that of his daughters, had come into collision. They had not distinguished the difference between their respective standings.

It is well ever to remember that the unsaved need salvation, and that those who are saved need a living Saviour. The Lord sets an open door before the former, and He comes in person to the door of the latter, and knocks that He may enter in and dwell there.

Obviously, a difference is manifest between our dwelling in Christ for safety, and his dwelling in us for our usefulness. This simple information set these friends right, and helped them to go forward in the double work of saving sinners and building up believers.

It is an important thing to divide the Word of God rightly. For want of this, too often the unconverted are led on to light beyond their experience, and the converted are kept back, to the detriment and hindrance of both kinds. The door of salvation which the sinner is invited to enter should never be confused with the door of the believer's heart, which Christ desires to enter.

Receiving the knowledge of salvation is not imparting it. The receptive life is not the life of giving. One proceeds from faith, and the other from love.

It was really surprising to learn what a difference that little word "latch" had produced in my friend's family and parish. His congregation, which used to be dead and leafless as a tree in winter, burst out into life, blossom, and fruitfulness. All glory be to God.

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION.

FOR twelve years Dr. Robert Chambers has been labouring as a medical missionary amongst the crowded population of the narrow and inodorous streets between Lisson-grove and Paddington-green. The Mission goes quietly to work, but its efforts are much appreciated; its doors are thronged by the sick and suffering poor, who three times a week attend in largely increasing numbers the short midday service and the dispensary. Men, women, and children of the poorest class are attracted by the hope of bodily healing. During Dr. Chambers's short addresses, it is very encouraging to observe the attentiveness with which many listen to the clear, simple words of Gospel teaching.

There are many sick who cannot come to the Mission; these are seen in their own homes by the doctor or the deaconess, Miss H. D. Smith. Both are incessantly engaged going from house to house and room to room, ministering to the sick and afflicted. Many a strange experience is theirs. Here they find a grim old sceptic, who long has hardened himself against religious truth; there a poor unhappy backslider, who has wandered far from God. Here a miserable wreck, ruined body and soul by drink and vice; there a shrinking, timid girl—sinned against rather than sinning. To all they come with the kindly ministry of help and healing, pouring in at the same time the oil and grace of Gospel consolations.

Nor is this labour in vain. There are many who gladly confess that their changed life and conduct are due to the Medical Mission. In the women's Bible-class (or mothers' meeting), on Monday evenings, with an average attendance of ninety-six, the signs of this fruitfulness are very apparent.

The work of the Mission has for some time been carried on in premises ill-suited to the work. Of late the attendance has altogether outgrown the accommodation, and Dr. Chambers has felt that some extension must be secured. At length the way has been opened, and a large hall has been secured close by in an adjoining street. The hall will seat some 300 persons, its position is admirable, and there is every convenience for the dispensary work and the various classes. In view of the great increase in numbers this extension is hailed with delight. In a few weeks, it is hoped, the new hall will be opened, and dedicated to the Medical Mission service.

Not only is there increase in accommodation, but in workers. Two Christian ladies, one of whom is a thoroughly trained hospital nurse, have resolved to give themselves, voluntarily, to the help of Dr. Chambers and his deaconess co-labourer in their service amongst the sick poor of Marylebone. To this fresh development the friends of the Mission are looking forward with hopefulness and prayer.

Amongst the class reached, sickness means poverty, and poverty means the lack of nourishment, warm clothing, firing, and other things essential to the recovery of the sick. So also in the matter of clothing, warm blankets, flannel underclothing, &c., must in many instances be given, if the patient is to have a chance of recovery. Many friends might happily co-operate in this important work. Dr. Robert Chambers's address is 43, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, London, N.W.

Dr. Saphir on the Bible.—4.

On Thursday, last week, Dr. Saphir delivered the fourth of the series of addresses on "The Bible," in St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allen-street, Kensington. The attendance was large, and a keen interest was sustained to the last. Having read Ps. cxix. 97—104 and 2 Tim. iii. 15—17, which spoke of the "Law of the Lord" and "Scripture given by Inspiration of God," Dr. Saphir brought forth fact after fact, and argument after argument, with increasing force and conclusive cogency, to show the decisive character of the testimony of Christ concerning the Old Testament.

The testimony which Jesus Christ bears to Moses and the Prophets should, said the speaker, be decisive in the minds of all who acknowledge that He is the Son of God. Among the objections which have been brought against receiving this testimony is one which maintains that in his references to the Old Testament Scriptures, our Lord merely accommodated Himself to the prejudices of his contemporaries; that He did not believe in the inspiration of Scripture, in Satan, and in persons being possessed with devils, but He simply adapted Himself to the ignorance and weakness of the Jews. Surely such a course of conduct would be unworthy of an honest man, much less could it be consistent with the dignity of a prophet, while to impute it to Him who is "God over all blessed for ever" is blasphemous. Not only did Jesus never accommodate Himself to the prejudice sof the Pharisees and Scribes, but with all the energy of his character He protested against the traditions of the elders. By illustrations it was shown that Christ meant what He said. Again, it is said that as the Son of God "emptied himself" on becoming man, we must take account of the limitations of human knowledge when we consider his statements respecting Moses and the Prophets. But this fails to touch the point, for the range of Christ's vision was more than that of a man. This was illustrated from several incidents in the Gospel story, showing that even in the days of his humiliation Jesus exercised the divine prerogative of searching the heart; He "knew what was in man, and needed not that any should tell Him." Dr. Saphir spoke at length of Christ's vision as extended to the invisible world, and then of the close communion He had with the Father as expressed in such words as: "No man knoweth the Father but the Son." This same Jesus said, "The Scripture cannot be broken."

As the Great Prophet, knowing all the mind of God, possessing the Spirit in his sevenfold plenitude, Jesus was entrusted with the whole Divine message to man, and not with fragments such as the other prophets had been. Those who in earlier times spoke from God were not always in the Spirit, but the Spirit "came upon" them from time to time. Jesus, however, was filled with the Spirit throughout his existence, and therefore every utterance proceeded from Him when he was in communion with the Holy Ghost, "my doctrine is not mine, but the Father that sent Me." "All that I have heard of the Father I have given unto you." If the words of Jesus are fallible, then we have no infallible God, neither Father nor Holy Ghost. Where were the limitations after Christ had risen from the dead? Even then He led his disciples back to the days when He was yet with them, and expounded unto them, from Moses and the Prophets, the things concerning Himself. And his last commission to them was that they should preach the Gospel as it was "written" and as it was "fulfilled."

Thus Christ's testimony settles the question that the Old Testament Scriptures are infallible and authoritative, and they reveal Himself to us, in all his glorious person and the perfections of his will. Proceeding, Dr. Saphir powerfully maintained that the Jesus of the New Testament is the Jehovah of the Old. The bearing of this on Christ's relation to the New Testament was shown at length. Of his Apostles Jesus said: "He that heareth you, heareth Me." Therefore, He promised them the Spirit to lead them into all truth, and bring all things to their remembrance. Their writings are therefore divinely inspired. As we to-day continue in the Apostles' doctrine, we shall have the Word of Christ dwelling in us richly.

Speaking on the relation of the Holy Spirit to the Scriptures, Dr. Saphir touched upon many points of interest. Much that the Old Testament writers penned was not understood at the time, because they not only wrote for contemporaries, but for our instruction upon whom the latter days have come. The New Testament exposition of the Old is the true one: we must read Leviticus in the light of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and the entire Old Testament in the light of the writings of the Evangelists and Apostles. In conclusion, Dr. Saphir spoke of the Bible as a book not to be thought of apart from God the Father, Jesus the Saviour, and the agency and work of the Holy Ghost. Christians have experimental assurance that the Scripture is truth—even as the Spirit is the Spirit of truth. Those who have been regenerated by the Holy Spirit find in the Scriptures that which feeds, strengthens, encourages, or rebukes them in every condition and situation of life, and they also know that it will give them light and assurance in the hour of death.

This week's subject is, "The Jews: custodians of the Old Testament, and witnesses of the truth of Bible history and prophecy." Two other addresses will complete the series of seven.

SPANISH PRISONS.

Three thousand convicts, mostly "for life," are immured in Ceuta. This was the first Spanish gaol I visited, in the hopes of leaving with the prisoners the Word of God. Ceuta is on the North African coast, being a Spanish province or colony in Morocco. Owing to the influence of Sir W. Kirby Green every obstacle was removed which would have hindered my visiting the place. Unlike most prisons of Europe the men were employed in no kind of work; hundreds were standing listlessly about, a few offered me some small articles which they had made, some of which I bought, taking care to make the vendors a present of a Testament.

The worst criminals from Spain are sent here. There was a brigand who laughingly confessed he had killed seven men; another, who had recently murdered four men, and yet another, bound hand and foot, and confined in a totally dark cell, waiting to be shot.

No less than 112 men sleep in one large room, and in this one part of the prison there are twelve such brigades, as they are called. The only wonder to me is that they do not oftener break out in rebellion; it seems a great mistake to allow these men to idle away their time. The place was far from clean. Those who are well behaved are allowed out in the town, and serve as a sort of police, while their wives keep shops, many of them wine-shops. Very little restriction is put upon them, but they are obliged to be back into their prison by evening gun-fire. How I longed to be able to give a Testament to every convict! Though unable to do this it was cheering to see their gratitude, and hear the thanks from those to whom I did give copies of the priceless Book.

San Rock I also visited, which is near Gibralta. Here the Governor had himself been locked up for bribery. Again I found there was no work for the prisoners to do. An Englishman was in this place for brutally ill-treating his wife. What touched our hearts most was noticing a little boy who, for some trifling offence, had been imprisoned. The mother of the child, rather than allow him to go alone, had preferred to suffer with hin

THE UNIVERSAL DIGESTIVE TEA.

Has received the approval of the Highest Medical Authorities in England. Is recommended by Doctors and Physicians everywhere in preference to other Teas, especially for Nursing Mothers, Invalids, and Dyspeptics. By a patented process the Tannin is entirely neutralised, and the injurious Oils to a great extent extracted, while the fine delicate flavours are retained and developed to a degree impossible by the ordinary method. It is also stronger and more economical. Over 9,000 Samples of this Tea have been applied for by Medical Men during the last three months.
It is recommended by many eminent physicians, and has received the approval of over 500 medical men.

Dr. RIDGE, Medical Officer of Health for Middlesex, says:—"I have found that persons who suffer considerably with unprepared Tea can take the Universal Digestive Tea without any ill effects."
